Do Your Best Always.

I know some brilliant young people who might, if they would, unlock and enter the door of a glorious future. But they are not going to realize the hopes which their friends indulge for them because they do not strive always to do their best. They do not see that, in order to realize the highest success, they must do the best they can on every occasion. They bank on a reputation for doing things well. That will not pass current and at par in this world of hottest rivalry. That young man has in him, so his friends say, the gift that makes him a fluent speaker. His friends gape at his youthful eloquence, and prophesy a future for him that will write him down among the world's famous orators. The flight of years will disappoint them. Why? He settles into a contentment with doing something extraordinary at the age of sixteen, and never seeks to improve on that record. The result will be, the extraordinary deed of the youth will be a very commonplace matter for a man to compass, and he will become a humdrum. That young lady of fourteen Summers plays beautifully. Her friends think she would amaze Mozart or Beethoven, if those masters were alive. But at the age of thirty, five the little deeds of the maiden will be a l tha accomplishments of the mature woman. Why? Simply and only because she made the mistake of concluding that genius could hold its own, and consented to stop growing.

So I might go on. But I would not make the lesson more plain. We would not learn it better if a score of illustrations were adduced. "He who runs may read it," for it is written in human experience everywhere. If we do our best always, we need not fear the decay of our hopes. For we will be doing at thirty the work that will be worthy the effort of our years, and at forty we will not be doing with a contented heart the deeds which elicited praise for us when we entered life as a responsible agent.

I have in mind two young ladies. Both are talented in music. Both have had good advantages. Both are of about the same age. Three years ago there was little choice between them in the estimation of the friends that admired their girlish efforts. To-day the one is very much to be preferred to the other. The close friends of both admit it. What is the reason? One has ceased study, and the other is studying harder than ever, though her advantages have been very superior to those enjoyed by her one-time playmate and equal. The One never exercises her talent listlessly; and, whether entertaining a friend at her own home, or playing the numbers of an evening recital before a large audience, is alike strenuous in her effort to do her very best. The other plays "what she likes," and languidly goes through the pieces she must play "to keep up appearances," while she does "hate to be bored by being asked to play for every visitor who comes," and for whom she says, "I just sit down and rattle off something." Mark a prediction, young people: In twenty years one of these young ladies will be "awfully out of practice," and will say, "Oh, I have given up my music entirely," while the other will say, "It is such a pleasure in my busy life to while away my rest moments at the piano," and I am sure the people will applaud her public efforts quite as much and more than they did her wonder-working when she was a girl prodigy at the key-board.

So it is in everything. The only path to usefulness or triumph is to do the best you can always. You will be in a better frame sometimes than you are on other occasions. But if you do your best in every effort for that time, you will begin and continue to grow.

Do not think you can afford to set anything down as commonplace. What you try to do, if it is worth doing, is deserving of your best effort. It may be music, or it may be oratory, or it may be only an ordinary deed of labor; but you would better do it well, no matter if it does seem to you to be only a trifle. If you plod along faithfully in doing trifles, the time is going to come some time, sure, when you will be doing important things. Of Lord Nelson, who wrote as the motto of the British ships at Trafalgar, "England expects every man to do his duty," it is said, "He always did more than his duty." So will it be said of you if you always do the best you can. You may not write your name where future generations will see it, but you will be the best and largest success it is possible for God to help you to be.—Rev. F. R. Day, in Epworth Herald.

In our daily life we greatly need the patience of Christ. Things are constantly arising which tend to irritate us if we have not well-disciplined minds. And the best discipline is subjection to Christ. It is comparatively easy to restrain ourselves, perhaps, among men in our business and social life, but there are many who do this who utterly fail of composure and kindliness in the household. To show piety at home in the exercise of patience is not common with them. Yet, as husband and wives, with children around them, nothing is more important than the manifestation in the home of the patience of Christ. We need patience with ourselves. No right-thinking man can be satisfied with himself. Our attainments are so far short of our possibilities that we have reason to be dissatisfied with the "poor, dying rate" of our progress; and the results of all our efforts to do good are so meager that we have much to incline us to be weary in well-doing, and mourn that the results of our work are so small. In all this we may remember the patience of Christ. His ministry gave little token of success; but he knew that he was about his Father's business, and his great concern was patiently to fulfill his counsel and finish the work given him to do.—The Welcome.

MRS. MARY MAGDALENE NEWMAN (nee Mixon), aged thirty years seven months and three days, passed quietly and triumphantly from earth to heaven on June 18, last, from the home of her happy childhood, surrounded by fond parents, a loving husband, and many friends. About September, 1882, under the preaching of Rev. J. T. Nicholson, she was happily converted, and since that time has lived a consistent life, not only professing, but truly possessing the very mind that was in Christ Jesus, and was most happy when she could do something to increase the happiness of others. She talked freely of the approaching end, and was joyful through hope; sometimes shouting, sometimes singing. Altogether, she seemed to see and hear angels calling her to lay down the cross and take up the crown, which she meekly did, putting all her trust in Jesus Christ, whom she loved and whom she served. "So he giveth his beloved sleep." Her also shall Christ bring with him when he comes again. And "they shall be mine, saith the Lord, when I make up my jewels." R. L. WENN.

JIMMIE WILLIAMS, eldest son of Boyd and Georgia Williams, was born Dec. 2, 1893, in Morehouse parish, La., and died July 27, 1901, in Roswell, New Mexico. He was buried in Bastrop, La., by Rev. Mr. D. Barr. Dear little Jimmie has fulfilled his earthly mission. More than seven years he was the joy and pride of fond parents and a happy home, but to-day we have only his body laid carefully away in the little white coffin, and our affections are left to flow back upon our sad hearts as we weep and sorrow that one so lovely should have a life so brief; but we know our beloved boy is safe in the arms of our Father in heaven, and that death is a passage into supreme rest, and to his will we bow and say he knows best. MAMA.

VISA HITT (nee Davis) was born Nov. 11, 1870, and was married to G. W. Hitt, Nov. 11, 1884, this being the birthday of them both. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1890, and died July 22, 1901. Sister Hitt was a potent, kind, modest Christian woman, and, as such, she was a devoted wife and an affectionate mother. Her small children know not their loss. Her husband can only feel and bear his grief, but never express it. The grief of such a bereavement can not be expressed. Without a stain upon her Christian character, hers was a beautiful life. Gentle and kind, she was loved by all who knew her.

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

Baby's Coming

McDonald, Ga., July 13, 1900.

I advise every suffering woman to take Wine of Cardui. While I was going with my other children I was compelled to stay in bed for days at a time, but this time I have taken Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught and have been able to do all my housework without any trouble. I am expecting every day to be confined. My husband thinks Wine of Cardui is the best medicine in the world. He takes a dose of Thedford's Black-Draught every night and gives some to the children. He has not lost a day from work this year. He tells his friends about your wonderful medicines and I tell my lady friends to use your Wine of Cardui. MRS. GEORGIA LEE.

WINE OF CARDUI

There are thousands of women who shrink in terror at the thought of the baby's coming. But childbirth is one of the workings of Nature and it was not intended to imply torture and agony to the heroic mothers of the race. The woman who suffers torture during pregnancy and at childbirth has usually, by some indiscretion, injured the organs which make her a woman. Neglect of menstrual irregularities leads to ovarian pains, falling of the womb and leucorrhœa, and the period of pregnancy is necessarily distressing under those conditions. Wine of Cardui will regulate the menstrual function perfectly and eventually make the generative organs strong and healthy. Pregnancy and childbirth have no terrors for the woman who takes this pure Wine. A strong healthy womb will bring its precious burden to maturity with little or no pain. A healthy woman need not fear childbirth. Wine of Cardui completely cures all these troubles familiarly known as "female diseases" and equips the sensitive generative organs for pregnancy and childbirth. It will save any mother much pain and suffering. All druggists sell $1.00 bottles.

What makes a Methodist?

WHAT should he be in faith and practice in doctrine and duty to conform to the ideal of modern Methodism. What makes him different from Christians of other folds? This inquiry was put to Dr. Arthur Edwards, the well-known Methodist leader and editor, shortly before his death. Similar questions were addressed to the leaders of thought in the several great denominations. The result was a series of articles most notable and memorable, for they presented temperately and yet forcefully, the peculiar tenets and traits of the great churches of history as they appear in these latter days. & These articles appeared exclusively in The Ram's Horn, that famous undenominational weekly, and are now printed in small book form, a copy of which will be sent free and postpaid to anybody who is interested and will evince his interest by sending twenty-five cents in coin or stamps for a trial subscription to that paper, which will be sent from now till New Years, almost 20 weeks, for a Quarter, and a copy of the above mentioned book absolutely free and postpaid, will be added to the subscription on request.

Winchester Rally.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: The missionary movement on the Winchester charge has been given a great deal of prominence during the past two months. On Friday, Aug. 16, the Sunday-school Missionary Society at Fedora held a Missionary Rally, which was a signal success. As the results of the efforts put forth, a broader missionary knowledge has been disseminated in the community. Notwithstanding the stormy day and night preceding, the attendance was much better than we expected. The collection amounted to $6.60. We bespeak a great work for the missionary society at Fedora.

The rally for the entire pastoral charge was held at Winchester on Tuesday, Sept. 3, as per appointment of Missionary Committee at the District Conference. To the regret of all, Dr. Weems was not able to be with us on account of sickness, but Bro. A. T. Bell came to us as a substitute, and his sermon at the eleven o'clock service was a strong one, thoroughly scriptural and missionary in character, making a forcible impression on the large congregation present.

At two o'clock Bro. J. T. Nicholson treated the congregation with a masterful address on the great missionary question of the day. The collection here amounted to $6.50.

One encouraging feature of this rally was the general attendance from other portions of the pastoral charge, five of the seven churches being represented.

Upon the whole, we regard the rally as a decided success in every feature. The people went away to their homes greatly enthused over the great question of missions. To God be the praise for the success.

Wayne Mission Rally.

DEAR BROTHER: Our Missionary Rally was held on this charge at Cochran Church, Aug. 27, as per appointment, and there was not as many present as we would like to have had, yet we had a very enjoyable and instructive service. Bro. Ormond delivered a powerful and entertaining sermon, and those present will long remember the occasion, and those not present will never be able to realize what they missed. We did not take up a collection, our collections being all up in full.

It seems to me that it might be a good plan to continue these rallies from year to year, and thus create and cultivate the missionary conscience in the church, which is so much needed. It seems to me this would be of very great value to us, and also increase the results in our missionary work, and end in larger collections and a widening of the field for the Master. May God bless the cause of missions!

Yours in Christ,
C. S. EMBREE, P. C.

The Renewal a Strain.

Vacation is over. Again the school bell rings at morning and at noon, again with tens of thousands the hardest kind of work has begun, the renewal of which is a mental and physical strain to all except the most rugged. The little girl that a few days ago had roses in her cheeks, and the little boy whose lips were then so red you would have insisted that they had been "kissed by strawberries," have already lost something of the appearance of health. Now is a time when many children should be given a tonic, which may avert much serious trouble, and we know of no other so highly to be recommended as Hood's Sarsaparilla, which strengthens the nerves, perfects digestion and assimilation, and aids mental development by building up the whole system.

Registers and Records not presented at the third Quarterly Conferences will be called for. In those charges where Ques. 17 was improperly answered, or not answered at all, full written reports will be expected. Let the preachers in charge renew their diligence, and make earnest, honest and persistent efforts to collect all Conference assessments in full. No charge is assessed beyond its ability to pay; all are under-assessed. Let the stewards be diligent, and see that the assessments for ministerial support are fully paid. Let all pray for the continuance of material and spiritual blessings.

LIBERTY AND LAW.

All papers that have reached our office since the attempt on President McKinley's life have spoken outright and in sensible words. Condemnation of the crime is universal, as is also the demand for the utmost punishment to be meted out to the criminal. The dastardly deed has aroused the country to a sense of danger never before realized. The presence of anarchy, and its power and opportunity to do mischief, is fully recognized. The voice of patriots, and not the voice of politicians on the hunt for spoils, will be heard. If we mistake not, a different interpretation will be placed on the term liberty. At least, we think from this on that some things which have heretofore passed unnoticed under the laws of free speech will be regarded as treason, and treated as such. If present laws are not sufficient to deal with anarchists as they deserve, they will be made sufficient, and will be duly executed. Men who enjoy the liberties of our land must be made to let others alone, and not to inflame the passions of bad men, and set them in array against our rulers. Liberty among us does not mean license, nor does law signify oppression. Men must obey the one, and enjoy their rights without interfering with others. Assassination of officials with a view to a change or overthrow of the government is madness, especially in a government like ours. It can not be done. Our land is still the home of the free, and our people welcome good men from all climes, but it is now seen and acknowledged that the time has come to enact more stringent immigration laws, so as to keep out undesirable men, many of whom, if not actual criminals, have murder in their hearts. Public sentiment would not now be averse to the expulsion of every anarchist from our shores. Men who do not know the difference between liberty and license, and who are unwilling to be law-abiding, do not deserve the protection of the stars and stripes. It was said often in years gone by that anarchy could not grow and thrive on our soil. We now know better. It thrives. To get rid of it will give us trouble. Let us have more talk of law, and less nonsense about personal liberty.

A PLEA FOR UNANIMITY.

BY REV. J. M. DEAVENPORT.

The twenty-five Articles of Religion, as set forth in the Discipline of the M. E. Church, South, have no clearly defined statement as to the real state of the heathen. What does the M. E. Church, South, believe to be the doom of the Christless nations? There are all sorts of ideas advanced in our church upon this question. The writer recently heard a Methodist preacher affirm, in the course of a sermon on missions, that God had other ways of saving people than through the gospel, and in a general discussion of this subject with five other preachers in our church, the writer was informed, all five concurring, that the heathen had the law within their hearts, and if they did those things contained in the law, they would be saved without a knowledge of Christ. When asked in what sense they would be saved, the reply was, "In the sense that you are saved—i. e., in Christ."

Again, the writer was somewhat diverted by a preacher who frequently intimated during his discussion that God could save without the gospel; that man could be saved—in Christ, of course—without any knowledge of Christ; then concluded by advising the preachers to return to their work and fire into the anti-missionary Baptists, etc. The brother did not stop to consider that the anti-missionaries occupied an Himalayan height compared to the one he was advancing upon this question. That church does not hold, as he did, that God has other ways of saving, or that man will be saved without a knowledge of Christ. They believe that the gospel is necessary to save the heathen, but say that God will send it to them without the church's aid. The reason one brother gave for sending the gospel to the heathen is, to save them from sin in this life. If they do the best they can, they will be saved in the end. Another claimed that the gospel is the ordinary means of saving a soul, while yet another said, "We dare not limit God's power to save to the gospel; he may have other ways."

It is not my object in the present paper to weigh the scripturalness of these views, but simply to present them. I do not believe—if Carlyle did say it—"that all people south of the Tweed are fools." There is much intelligence in the pew; probably as much as in the pulpit. This is an age of rapid, yet close thinking upon all subjects; men are probing to the bottom. These intimations that crop out of the religious writings of to-day, and soon drop from the pulpit, that God has other ways to save than through the gospel, find fertile soil in the minds of the masses, and are hurtful to the cause of foreign missions. The mind of the people is confused under such teaching. What becomes of these Christless nations?—those millions that have never heard of Christ? The people want to know; they have a right to know. The church must say, "We can not afford to play with words, or deal in meaningless terms; there is no half-way ground." If the heathen are saved without the gospel, let us tell the people; if they are doomed and lost without it, we ought to say so, and lay the responsibility at the door of the church. If the religion of Jesus Christ is the only true religion, then stand by it; if it is only one among the many religions of earth, we ought to say so.

The twentieth century burst upon the world with the hand of God upon the nations; with a missionary enthusiasm unprecedented in the church's history. We are on the threshold of a century, glorious in its possibilities. The church that goes forth, travailing, bearing the precious seed of truth, shall come again, bringing her sheaves with her. The church that arouses the conscience of the people to missionary effort must not shirk the issue. She must emphasize the urgency and necessity for men and money. Unless immortal issues hang upon the moment, no such necessity exists. If the heathen are not lost without the gospel, why demand our sons and daughters? Why jeopardize our lives if the necessity is not imperative?

There is no missionary conscience in the church. If six out of seven preachers do not believe the heathen are lost without the gospel, we may readily conclude that the people do not believe it. These intimations that the heathen will be saved without the gospel stifles missionary conscience, and paralyzes every effort in that direction. The meager pittance of a few cents per member that has been begged, and oftentimes wrenched from the church, has been given with reluctance, no one knows why or for what. If the preacher is popular, or a good mixer, they—all classes, saints and sinners—give it to him rather than to the cause. This is true in the hard places. On the stations the following sentence, expressed in modern parlance, gives the solution: "Well, I think it a shame, for one. I have too much pride to see my church go up without everything in full;" and the corresponding report that frequently monotonizes the monotony of some of our sessions is heard, "Everything in full, Bishop."

I reaffirm there is absolutely no missionary conscience in the church, and the reason for it is this: There is no authority behind the message. The church is not clear and unanimous in her statement as to the real condition of the heathen without the gospel. If the church has authority to call for money at all, she has authority to demand it. The question is not whether the gospel will be preached in all the world; Jesus Christ says it "shall be." That settles it; puts it beyond the limit of all controversy. The vital point is: Will this generation send it? Will you have any part in sending it? Are you going to do anything towards spreading it, or are you going to stand in your own light, sin away your opportunity, and let some one else have the opportunity God has honored you with? What you do, do quickly. The spirit of braggadocio does not atone for the man who deserts his country when principle is at stake. So, no amount of so-called consecration or loud-mouthed profession can make up for not giving to the cause of missions. As the deserter is ostracized, so men and women who claim to be followers of Christ, and give nothing to the cause nearest their Master's heart, ought to be discounted. They are disloyal to the cause they espouse. Christ said, "Go." Nothing will make up for not going but "to send." Those that do not "go" must "send." There is no place in God's church for the man or woman who will do neither. I doubt if there is any place in heaven for them. It is willful disobedience to the last command given by our Lord, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me." The fact that we are not witnesses in any sense negatives the "shall be" of our Lord and excludes us. The "shall be" in the text means that every true follower of his "will be" a witness unto him in all the world. "Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord," etc., "but they that do the will of my Father." God's highest will is to send the gospel to all the world. The Israelites who brought no free-will offering to the temple were excluded. Poverty did not excuse them; something must be brought in proportion to ability. The so-called Christian that gives nothing to send the gospel is excluded; "is none of Christ's." The shadows and types and general tenor of the Scriptures support this position. The sooner the church assumes the authority vested in her by her Lord, and emphasizes this fact, the sooner her work will be accomplished.

Again, I wish to know if the command to preach the gospel in all the world was given to the church or the Holy Spirit. The idea is prevalent (the opinions arraigned in this paper are largely based upon it) that because the Holy Spirit is everywhere present in the world, that the gospel is also there. The Holy Spirit is omnipresent, but there are places where the gospel has not been sent. The gospel is one of the dual agencies in the salvation of a human soul. God would not suffer an angel to preach the gospel, but sent the angel to Philip, telling him to join himself to the chariot and preach the gospel to the eunuch. The office of the Holy Spirit is not to proclaim the gospel, but to accompany it when proclaimed or published. To preach and have the gospel published is the imperative duty of the church. If the church of to-day fails to do it, the church of to-morrow will begin where she left off and carry it on.

Until every member gives something to the cause of missions, the church is not fully panoplied. To give because the heathen needs the light, is commendable; to give because the heathen will be lost without the light, is inspiring; but to give because Jesus, your Lord and Master, says so, is the highest motive of action known to man or angels. "Whosoever shall give a cup of cold water in my name (because I said give) shall in no case lose his reward."

Chester, Miss.

A WORD TO YOUNG PREACHERS.

BY DR. W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

If I could speak to these young men who are coming into the Conferences to be itinerant preachers, I would urge them, with all possible emphasis, to see that they are ready for the great work they propose to do. The young man who is going to preach the gospel and "feed the flock of God" ought to be well equipped for his solemn task. If he is not already well educated, he should straightway spend from three to five, or more, years in school, acquiring all that school life will yield him in preparation.

It is presumed that such a young man has a satisfactory experience of his pardon, of his regeneration, that he is a child of God, that he yearns for the salvation of sinners and the advancement of the kingdom of Christ. Since he has asked for license, he is also thoroughly convinced of his divine call to preach the gospel, and he has set his heart to do this work by the help of the Holy Spirit. He believes with all his heart that the power and effect of his ministry will depend on his own daily communion with God and on that special spiritual endowment which he shall need from the beginning to the end. No natural powers, nor acquired abilities, nor affluent circumstances can lessen the absolute necessity for the "unction from the Holy One."

But the Holy Spirit fills his own place; he does not supersede anything else. He works through instrumentalities, and these are in great part furnished by man, and should be made as finished as possible. Man himself is the living agent in the great transaction of preaching, and to him is committed the training and use of his powers in the Master's service. This training will not be accomplished by mere exercise in the field. True, one is to learn to preach by preaching. So he is to learn the art of doing anything, as building a house, running an engine, practicing a profession, filling an office, by making and repeating the effort. But when we get away from the simplest matters of manual toil, and especially into the region of higher pursuits, a vast deal of training and knowledge are necessary, even to begin effective, trustworthy practice.

Whatever our glorious ministry may have been and done in the past, when it had to learn without the school, and "brush college" was the only seminary, and thought to be sufficient, the presence of schools, and the conditions under which the preacher has now to do his work, compel him to seek as earnestly and fully as possible a scholastic education. If he does not, he will fall behind, and, as a rule, will find himself after a while on a back seat, or across the "dead line," when he ought to be in the vigor of ripened manhood a leader and counselor. With chagrin and disappointment he may see the place he would like to have filled by the educated young man whose few years in Conference outmeasures the many of the man who holds his diploma from "brush college." He easily falls into the suspicion that his lot is due to neglect, partiality, the loss of the ways of old Methodism, etc. No, it is not so, but it is the genuine working of true Methodism, which seeks the best men for the places.

More and more are our young men seeking this scholastic preparation for their work as preachers. Likely every young preacher would do so if he were properly guided and assisted. Most of them are without means to pay their way in school. Board and clothes and books and some incidentals must be paid for, and this far overtaxes any means at command. What then; join the Conference? That may be the best thing to do, because the only thing. But, then, go in for a year at a time, until the little paid on "brush circuit" will meet your expense at school one year; then go there.

I would say to every prospective itinerant: Do that which will quickest afford you means for cost at school; then go there and stay as long as possible. Alternate between work and school till your course is finished. Meantime, preach all you can, study with all your might, bend every energy you have to the great task before you, think of nothing but victory. It will surely come if you are true to God, the church, and yourself. Be as firm as a rock; let no man nor woman turn you from your purpose to be an educated preacher. The schools will help you; some noble soul will see your struggle and your fidelity, and will lend you help. Be cheerful, be hopeful, trust in God, and work your way through; you can. Some preachers, who have been in Conference several years, are wisely halting to finish a college course. Let their example stimulate you.

THE SABBATH AND THE MINISTRY.

BY REV. I. L. PEEBLES.

Hosea, in delivering the message of God to his people, said, "And there shall be, like people, like priest." (Hosea iv, 9) These words are somewhat interpreted by the following words, "The prophets prophesy falsely, . . . and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?" (Jer. v, 31.) In other words, the people who are served by a minister are likely to live as he does, and most especially if he does not live right. Of course, if his life is grossly immoral, he will be cast aside at once as unworthy of confidence or following; but just let him be a perpetrator of the popular sins, and the masses will follow him likely; at any rate, they will most likely do so. If he rides on the train on the Sabbath, especially with the plea that the gospel must be preached, why, of course, his people will likely feel that if he can afford to ride on trains on the Sabbath, and get to heaven at last, they can, too, whether they preach or not, for they know that if God will excuse railroad companies for ignoring the Sabbath, and attending to worldly business, and making money because they will allow preachers to ride on the Sabbath to carry the gospel to those who need it, he will, of course, excuse them for having a little pleasure on Sunday excursions, or for saving money or time by such rides, so they may have money to pay the preacher who rides on Sunday trains. If it is wrong to run trains on the Sabbath for the money that is in it, it is certainly wrong to ride on them on the Sabbath at all.

If a minister can report to secular papers on the Sabbath for the money that is in it and be innocent, why, of course, his people can do secular work for the money that is in it, too, for God is no respecter of persons. We were grieved when we were informed that there were no less than three ministers reporting to secular papers on the Sabbath during the last Seashore Camp Meeting. What a comment on the ministry! It is true, it is said that there were only three who did such Sunday work, but still a shadow is thrown upon the innocent of this high calling. Can a brother have that high conception of the sanctity of the Sabbath necessary to its right observance who reports to secular newspapers on that holy day? Surely not; and if he can, what good will it do the world when his own life is contrary to what he conceives to be right? Will a minister likely condemn a wrong in his own life? If he is a Sabbath-breaker, will he not likely try to defend himself just as tobacco users, etc., do? May the day soon come when all will delight in observing the Sabbath the best they can and know!

A GOOD BOOK.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

"Circuit Rider" has read with interest and profit Rev. I. L. Peebles' book on "Water Baptism," in which he discusses "Its History, Meaning, Purpose, and Mode."

Bro. Peebles' book strikes the happy medium of being neither too learned nor yet too lacking. It is one of the best with that end in view that has come under the eye of the writer. The only objection "Circuit Rider" has to the book is that the author did not take advantage of his splendid opportunity by stating as a conclusion that "sprinkling only" is the scriptural mode. He did not miss it far, however, when he said on the last page that "the proofs and very nature of things are in favor of sprinkling and pouring." He proves conclusively that "Bapt'zo does not mean immersion and nothing else" by quoting from many lexicons, dictionaries, and encyclopedias; but in every instance in which he refers to the Scriptures he proves that the mode was by sprinkling. He also states that "the leading scriptural idea of 'baptism' is ceremonial cleansing or purification by water, carrying with it also the idea of a sacrament, and this may be done by pouring, sprinkling, or immersion;" yet he shows decisively by the Scriptures that "such purifying was accomplished among the Jews by sprinkling." The author granted our immersion friends no doubt through charity that the purification "may be by immersion" as well as by effusion. Had he refused the concession, he would not have been more uncharitable than immersionists in general; yet he failed to find the scriptural precedent or authority for immersion. His book establishes sprinkling beyond a peradventure. The lexicons from which he quoted are both new and old, scholarly and authoritative, having sent all the way across the seas for them in the preparation of his book. He quotes several lexicons or encyclopedias where acknowledgment is made that "baptizo" is used differently in the New Testament to its employment in classic Greek, and they all give sprinkling, or its equivalent, as a meaning of the word. He thus annihilates the Baptist position, on which they withdraw themselves from other Christians, that the word means immersion only.

The writer remembers several years ago to have heard him preach on mode, and he remarked to him afterwards that his exposition of Rom. vi, 4, was the best he ever heard or read. It is pleasing to find a chapter in his book under the same text.

On the frontispiece can be seen his likeness, and whoever buys his book is sure to be pleased with one or the other. His picture reveals the deep thinker that he is, and makes one think of some classic scholar. The price of the book, with the picture, is fifty cents, and can be ordered of Barbee and Smith, Nashville, Tenn. Send and get it at once with the two-fold end of patronizing home talent and instructing yourself.

Investing in the Lord's cause is laying up treasures in heaven. If we spend all our means on ourselves, and for selfish purposes, we will not have much of a treasure-store to draw from in eternity.—Southern Churchman.

What Our Editors Say.

THE MOSQUITO PEST.

Investigations tighten the lines of evidence on the mosquito. He is guilty. His bite inoculates the victim with malaria, and the germs of yellow fever. There is no doubt about it. We are glad he is convicted. We never did like him. But now that he is doomed to die, how shall we execute him? The first suggestion was to pour coal-oil on all the lakes and ponds from which the mosquito is hatched. But that seems like burning the house to kill the rats. To think, of only a greasy scum and rancid smell, where now the crystal lakes lie like mirrors to cloud and sky, is quite intolerable. A later suggestion is that the whip-poor-wills eat mosquitoes, and if we will only turn attention to raising whip-poor-wills, they will soon clean up the pest. That, we think, would be a tedious process. The whip-poor-will is a very shy bird and lays but two eggs. There are a good many birds that eat mosquitoes. Bishop Keener bought a beautiful bird in Mexico, and when he asked a little Mexican girl to go out and buy some feed for it, she brought a great package of mosquitoes. The Bishop told this in a missionary address, and an unsophisticated brother spoke up from the audience and asked, "How did they catch those mosquitoes?" The Bishop said, "Pay ten dollars to the missionary cause and I will tell you." He sent up the money and the Bishop said, "They caught them with great difficulty." It strikes us there will be "great difficulty" in getting rid of the mosquitoes by any means, and that up to this time the physicians have gotten to the question that ended the council of the mice: How to put the bell on the cat.—Arkansas Methodist.

HARD TO DOWN.

Nothing in the way of information is ever more recklessly misused perhaps than the census. Soon after its last decennial publication, a multitude of startling deductions were made from it by the statistical fiend. One was that insanity, blindness, and petty crime were on the increase. A competent authority has shown that this is not true, but that the means of gathering statistics on these points are just now being perfected. The more stringent enforcement of law increases the number of arrests for petty crime, but the fact itself argues improvement of public morals. The pessimist is hard to turn down.—Epworth Era.

A TIMELY QUESTION.

Are the children of our time hearing preaching? Have we not substituted the Sunday-school as a sort of children's church, and by our lack of effort to secure their attendance upon the preached word, educated them away from hearing the preached gospel? To go toward a church in any town or city between the adjournment of the Sunday-school (if it is held in the forenoon) and the eleven o'clock service is enough to make a faithful pastor's heart sink within him. The exodus towards home of the children and young people (not infrequently also of older people who work in the Sunday-school) is enough to make any man with a commission from high heaven to "feed the lambs" weep. If the Sunday-school had been organized for the express purpose of training away from the preaching, it is questionable whether it would have succeeded as well as it has in this particular. Is it any surprise that the young people under this tuition from childhood will, when they get to young manhood and womanhood, drop out of the Sunday-school and become conspicuous by their absence from the public service? There must come a reformation in these things if we follow the divine plan and grow a people for the Lord. Nay, more, the reformation must come if we purpose to hold by the true manliness and high ethics which have made us so great as a people. It is a time for thought and effort. Parents, pastors, Sunday-school superintendents, officers and teachers should concern themselves ceaselessly until the children hear the word of God from the lips of the "man of God," in God's own house of worship.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

AN UNSAFE CONDITION.

Our love must be strong enough for spontaneous action. A man who has to reason with himself whether he will tell the truth in a given case, or will pay a debt, or will help a sufferer, or will do justice to some one wronged, is not in a safe religious condition. True religion has a spontaneous action toward doing right, doing justice, doing a good deed when it can.—Florida Christian Advocate.

THE MODE OF WATER BAPTISM.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

"BAPTIZO" IN THE SCRIPTURES.

It is impossible to understand the meaning of "baptizo" in the Scriptures without some modification of the word as used in classic Greek. In classic Greek the idea of water is not only not in the word, but the element is indifferently filth, wax, oil, water, ignorance, sleep, etc. Even if the word long before the making of the Bible primarily expressed action by particular mode, it would be necessary to examine the word scripturally before dogmatizing or forming an iron-clad opinion.

In the Bible the word is not only used different to its employment in profane literature, but it is positively used in both Testaments in connection with ceremonial purification by water. The classic elements of filth, vinegar, oil, milk, etc., thus are dropped, and there is water enough converted to meet the Christian ordinance, though it be but a few drops. When our Lord used "baptizo" in the great commission he knew the Jews would understand that water was intended and by sprinkling, because the word had for hundreds of years been so employed by them in their ceremonial purifications.

If this be true, it is only necessary to find out the mode of their purifications in order to ascertain the scriptural mode of "baptizo." That the word was understood by the Jews long before the time of Christ to convey the idea of ceremonial cleansing in the use of water (and by sprinkling) is evident by the following passages taken from the Septuagint, the Old Testament Scriptures, translated into the Greek language by seventy-two Jews from the original Hebrew. The apocryphal books of the Old Testament, while not received as canonical, are of unquestioned antiquity, and illustrate the fact that the Jews employed the word synonymously with purification.

The first place where the word occurs is II. Kings v, 14. The leprous Naaman came to Elisha the prophet to be cured. He was told to 'go wash seven times in Jordan." The prophet said seven times because he had in mind the law as found in Lev. xiv, 7, "Sprinkle upon him that is to be cleansed from the leprosy seven times." He did not send him to the Jordan to "dip" himself, but because the same law required "running water." The English translation has it that Naaman "dipped himself" seven times, but he did no such thing, for the following reasons:

1. It was impossible for him to dip himself. If, as the Baptists say, he waded in waist deep and squatted seven times, the squatting would have only dipped his head and shoulders.

2. The law in such cases required "sprinkling seven times," which the prophet did not disregard in giving direction to Naaman.

3. The word ('aba') in the Hebrew language which the Jews expressed by "baptizo" in their translation means primarily "besprinkle," as shown by Dr. Dizlor in his work on baptism, where he quotes at length six of the great Hebrew lexicographers.

Elisha did not tell Naaman to dip seven times, but "wash seven times." Hence, after making a sevenfold application of the water to his person, we read that he came away 'clean."

There is only one other place where "baptizo" occurs in the Old Testament outside of the Apocrypha, viz: Isa. xxi, 4. However, it is there used metaphorically, and in the sense where "fear" came upon the subject, a clear case of affusion.

There are two places where "baptizo" occurs in the apocryphal books. In the book of Judith (chapter xii) we read where one Judith, a woman of the Jewish religion, entered within the camp of the Assyrian army, and while there, and under guard, she purified herself. Verse 7 says, "She washed herself. (ebapt'zeto) in (epi, at) a fountain (pege, spring) of water by the camp." "No lady would have been at all likely to immerse herself in such a place, even had there been the facilities for it." Moreover, the purification took place at a spring, and not in it. Being a Jewish woman, and having been raised up in the religion of her fathers, she performed the purification by the usual mode, viz.: sprinkling. Verse 9 says she came into the tent "clean." Clean, because purified with "running water" and by "sprinkling," both of which the law required.

The other passage is found in Ecclesiasticus xxxiv, 25, and settles the question beyond shadow of doubt: "He that is purified (baptizomenos) from a dead body, and touches it again, what does his cleansing profit him?"

"Baptize" and cleansing are here used synonymously, and the account refers to the process required by the law of Moses (nineteenth chapter of Numbers), which enjoins that the ashes of a burnt heifer should be put into a vessel, running water put therein, and this water sprinkled upon him with a hyssop in the hand of a clean person. (See Num. xix, 16-19.) Verse 13 says that if one neglects the purification, he shall be cut off from his people, "because the water of separation was not sprinkled upon him."

It is thus seen that "baptizo" long before the time of Christ was used in a ritual, religious sense by the Jews, synonymous with cleanse, wash, purify, the mode of which was by sprinkling, never by immersion.

IN A NEW FIELD.

BY DR. S. A. STEEL.

MR. EDITOR: I suppose I may properly claim to have been, up to this time at least, a traveling Methodist preacher. From Mississippi to Tennessee, from Tennessee to Kentucky, Kentucky to Virginia, Virginia back to Mississippi, back to Tennessee, back to Kentucky, out to Missouri, back to Tennessee, back to Virginia, and now in Kentucky again. Four years of the time my circuit covered the United States, and I traveled it a good deal. The truth is, Mr. Editor, I got tired of traveling. This thing of moving became a sort of terror to me. Think of it: I had sixty boxes of books, my books—next to my wife and children and a few friends, my most highly prized treasures—sixty boxes of books to move. I returned to Virginia expecting to live and die there; for I love Virginia. A gracious Providence cast my lot in my youth among the Virginians, and they won my heart, and still hold it. I hoped I might count on a four years' term anyhow in the pastorate, having served an honorable probation in our chief churches. But, lo! I had hardly more than got in position in Richmond when the order came to move again. It is true we moved to one of the most delightful charges in the connection, Market Street, Petersburg; and if I could have felt a reasonable certainty of staying in Market Street the usual term, it would have taken very strong inducements to lift me. But I did not feel such assurance, and did not care to go "on trial" again; so I resolved, if the way opened, to try and get some work that would at least let the ink get dry on my last speech before I had to pack up. The way opened in a very unexpected manner, and I am in Kentucky, at Russellville, president of Logan Female College. My friends will understand from this statement that my move is not due to any fickleness, but to a desire to get into a more permanent work.

College work is now to me. I have had no experience in it; but I have had large experience in dealing with people. So I have selected a faculty composed of able teachers, who know how to run the educational department according to the most approved methods; and I feel quite sanguine of success. Logan Female College is under the control of the Louisville Conference. It has had a long and honorable career of usefulness, and has been a blessing to our land. It enjoys exceptional advantages in some respects, and ought to attract some of the patronage from the extreme South that seeks school privileges away from home. It is located in a high and healthful region, and in a community unexcelled in general intelligence and Christian culture, and is easily accessible from all points. We would make room for a few girls from Mississippi and Louisiana, and send them home strong and healthy, and "polished after the similitude of a palace."

Kentucky is a good land to live in. Russellville is a thoroughly Southern community in sentiment and in manners and customs. I have seen faster towns. We are in no particular hurry in Russellville. Why should we be? If we want to rush, all we have to do is to get on the train and in a few hours we can be in Louisville, or St. Louis, or Chicago, and be as big fools as anybody in the pell-mell and hurley-burley of city life. But here, under great shade trees and on wide grassy lawns, we take it easy, and cultivate the mind and heart. I, for one, am glad to get away from the city. As I grow older I find my heart turning back to the woods and the fields and the furrows where my boyhood was spent. True life is found amid the solitudes and silences and holy privacies of agriculture. "And the Lord God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it;" and man is never nearer to God than when he is at his aboriginal avocation. The excitement of city life is abnormal and destructive of the purer ideals of character. Our great American cities have become veritable hot-beds of iniquity. The Sabbath is virtually abolished, government surrendered to the saloon, money enthroned as supreme, amusement made one of the chief ends of existence, Christianity emasculated by culture so-called, and a free rein given to licentiousness and lust. So I am grateful for the Providence that has sent me to live in a quiet town where I can hear the birds sing, and see the sun rise unobscured by a canopy of factory smoke, and feel again the primal pulses of nature in its freshness and its beauty. I spend two hours a day with my hoe in the garden—not of Eden, but of Logan College. And while I handle the hoe I ruminate on "The Ascent through Christ," that I have been reading; and gradually the evolution of the sermon begins, and ideas come like the oil of a Texas gusher! I had written thus far when the wires quivered with the agonizing message of President McKinley's assassination. This terrible news unnerves me. I can not write more now. God be merciful to our country.

HARPERVILLE CIRCUIT.

DEAR DOCTOR: The fifth protracted meeting for this work was held at Oak Grove Church. "Uncle" Murdock McDonald assisted me and preached acceptably the riches of redeeming grace. We had a good meeting; the Christian people greatly revived. The equinoctial gale set in on us on Wednesday evening, and continued for several days, and unceremoniously broke up our meeting. We had only one accession, but I think there will be four or five more as the result of the meeting.

My sixth protracted meeting was held at New Providence Church, and continued five days. Uncle Murdock assisted me here also, and rendered efficient and acceptable service. We had a gracious revival; said to be the best held there in several years. The Holy Spirit came down with power upon the pulpit and the people, and glad shouts went up in praise to God for the gracious manifestation of his presence. There were eight accessions to the church, among them some bright conversions that caused the hearts of Christians to rejoice. The material brought into the church is of the most promising character. Christians of other denominations attended, took part with us, and were greatly blessed.

We had large congregations all the time, and the best of order and attention.

The protracted meeting for Pleasant Ridge Church, on this charge, was held at Macedonia Church, five miles west of Hillsboro. It was a union meeting with our Protestant Methodist brethren, and was held in their church-building. Their pastor, Bro. Webb Tadlock, and Bro. Brown, of their church from South Mississippi, and myself conducted the meeting. Everything worked in harmony. We had a good revival meeting, large congregations; Christians abundantly strengthened and built up, a large number of penitents came to the altar from time to time and were powerfully wrought upon, and I trust many of them converted. We had three additions to our church and one to the Protestant Methodist Church. I think there will be other additions to both branches of the church as the result of this revival meeting. This is the seventh protracted meeting for my charge, and we have had good revivals at every point. "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

Your brother in Christ,

A DAY AT OLD CANE RIDGE.

Cane Ridge, in Jefferson county, Miss., is one of the oldest churches in the State. It was organized in the early days of Methodism in the Territory of Mississippi. It has an honorable history, and it still lives to shine a light in the world. Rev. John G. Jones, of precious memory, the father of Rev. John A. B. Jones, the oldest effective member of our Conference, was licensed to preach here. So was Rev. W. H. Watkins, D. D., the father of Rev. A. F. Watkins, D. D., president of Whitworth College. So was Dr. A. F. Watkins himself, if I mistake not. And so was Rev. B. F. Jones, the present presiding elder of the Brookhaven district.

In the year 1860 I was on the Fayette circuit as junior preacher. Cane Ridge was one of the best churches on the circuit then. I was a beardless boy, and I found many good friends here whose memory I love to cherish, and whose names are like ointment poured forth. Here, also, I found one who became more than a friend—my life-long companion. In after years I was the pastor of this church. I served them in this capacity six years out of eight—from 1871 to 1878, inclusive of both. Coming to this neighborhood last week, I was asked to preach at Cane Ridge on Sunday, which I was glad to do. It was arranged that we have dinner on the ground, and two services. It was the day for communion service, and a missionary collection also. The dinner I need not attempt to describe, as those who have been here on such occasions will understand. The congregation was large and attentive to the Word preached. Two persons joined the church. They had recently had a revival meeting, in which nine were added to the church. Cane Ridge is on rising ground. Her faithful pastor, Rev. A. D. Miller, and his family are held in high esteem by the people here, both in and out of the church. The church is now on the Harriston circuit, and the parsonage is located here. There are still a few remaining who were here when I first came, more than forty-one years ago; but the majority of the present congregation are comparative strangers to me. The services on Sunday afternoon closed amid tears, hand-shakings, holy songs, and good resolves. Long may this church continue to shine as a beacon light

AN ANTI-MOSQUITO PLANT.

The observation made by Prof. Starr, of Chicago University, that the plant which bears the castor bean—the Ricinus Communis, or Palma Christi—is efficacious in driving away mosquitoes, is by no means new, but is valuable in re-enforcing the influence of one made some time ago. Several years have passed since it was remarked, somewhere in one of the Southern States, that where these plants grew about a house mosquitoes were always absent. In view of the demonstrated functions of the mosquito in spreading malaria and yellow fever, new value is given to all means for destroying that evil insect, or keeping it at a distance. The castor bean plant should, therefore, be a valuable auxiliary to petroleum—the latter exterminating the larvæ, and the former driving away the winged insect. Possibly anointing with castor oil might also keep off the insect, and so prevent its attacks under circumstances where it would be impracticable to carry the plant itself. The castor bean plant has long been a common garden ornament, liked for its rapid development to a considerable height, its picturesque foliage, and large, tropical-looking leaves, with flowers that, in certain varieties, are also showily handsome. With its beneficent function clearly established, it will naturally gain favor rapidly, and next Spring we may see something of a run on the market for castor beans. Grown in gardens, especially to windward, the plant should give welcome relief. It might to advantage also be cultivated for household purposes in tubs or large pots, for it ought to keep the mosquitoes away from rooms where it grows. One of its names, "Palma Christi," the Palm of Christ, indicates a tradition that it was the palm whose branches were borne before the Savior—in which event it was, perhaps, as useful as it was ornamental.—Boston Herald.

IN MEMORIAM.

Rev. William B. Hines, the son of John Henderson Hines and Keoda Glass, was born near Huntsville, Ala., Feb. 8, 1819. His parents were from Albemarle county, Va. His father was of English descent, and a local preacher. His grandfather, Major Hines, of Revolutionary fame, witnessed Cornwallis surrender his sword to Gen. Washington, Oct. 19, 1781, at Yorktown, Va.

William B. Hines was converted during a camp meeting near Grenada, Miss., in 1835. He was happily united by marriage with Miss Jane Fletcher Coppedge, of Grenada, Miss.; was licensed to preach in Lexington, Miss., February, 1845; recommended to the Mississippi Annual Conference in 1846, and in December of that year was admitted on trial in the traveling connection, and appointed by Bishop Andrew to Bayou Sara, La. His second appointment was Yazoo circuit, with James A. Godfrey. At the Conference in Vicksburg, December, 1848, he was admitted into full connection and ordained deacon by Bishop Paine in December, 1851, in Clinton, La., he was ordained elder by Bishop Paine and appointed to Jackson, La. At the Conference in December, 1853, he was located at his own request; readmitted in 1853, and continued in the regular, effective itinerant work until literally worn out and forced to superannuate. He served circuits, stations and districts in every portion of our Conference. Greenville district, four years, 1857-1861; Natchez district, 1861-1865; Meridian district, 1871-1874; Brandon district, 1875; Jackson district, 1876 and 1877. From 1877 to 1892 he traversed nearly the whole Conference territory, serving Brownsville, Waynesboro, Lauderdale, Summit, Adams, Scotland, Providence, Binnsville, Vossburg, Waynesboro, and Lake. At the Conference in 1892 he was enrolled a superannuate. He died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Mollie L. Reed, in Summit, Miss., April 24, 1901, at 5 A. M. His wife, who had been companion, counselor, comfort, truly a God-given "helpmeet" for fifty-nine years, preceded him April 19, 1900, to the reward promised. He was buried from the Methodist Church in Gloster, Miss., April 25, 1901. Special memorial services were conducted in that church by Rev. J. A. B. Jones, Sunday, May 5, 1901. He was the father of ten children; six have died, four yet live.

The world and the church will not, can not know, until the revelations of the great day, what sacrifices of personal and domestic comfort and financial interests William B. Hines quietly endured to serve his generation. He attained distinguished eminence as a preacher, pastor, adviser; a polished Christian gentleman, with clear perception, deep convictions, and strong utterance, remarkably powerful in prayer, a consistent Christian, an efficient preacher and pastor. "After he had served his own generation by the will of God, he fell on sleep and was laid unto his fathers."

J. A. B. J.

Rev. Ephraim A. Flowers was born in Franklin county, Miss., Jan. 26, 1826; died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. E. F. Chapman, in Wasson, Miss., April 28, 1901, at 9 P. M.; was buried in the Flowers' Graveyard, near Coo Springs Church, April 30, 1901. Six children, twenty-seven grandchildren, five great-grandchildren and his second wife survive.

Ephraim Flowers from his childhood was commended for his scrupulous fidelity, indomitable energy, and dauntless courage. Early in life he obeyed the calls of mercy, duty, privilege, and gave his heart to God and joined the Methodist Church. The vows he assumed, the covenant he entered into, he kept sacred and inviolate. His religious experience was clear, scriptural, robust. He entered actively into church work, giving assurance of ability for great usefulness, possessing special gifts in song, prayer, and exhortation. He was admitted on trial in the Mississippi Annual Conference in December, 1853; into full connection and ordained deacon, December, 1855; completed the required four years' course of study on schedule time, and was ordained elder, December, 1857. His early educational advantages were distressingly limited, his labors in the itinerancy abundant, yet he annually "brought up his studies," passed creditable examinations, and continued to make proficiency, sustaining himself a popular and useful preacher and pastor. In 1875-76 he was supernumerary on account of feeble health; 1877-80, effective; 1881-86, superannuate; 1887, served Roxie; 1888-89, superannuate; 1890, North Wilkinson; 1891, supernumerary. From 1892 to 1901 (time of his death) he was an honored superannuate. Serving mission to negro slaves, country and city congregations, or enduring disablement from failing health, he ever maintained a beautiful, consistent Christian character; sunshine in his soul; "full of faith and the Holy Ghost." The long evening twilight—ten years a superannuate—preceding the close on earth of such a life could not be other than cloudless, serene, triumphant.

In twelve short chapters sets forth in outline the religious condition of the world, the dominant power of Christendom and its responsibility for the rest of mankind, the need and beneficence of mission work in heathen lands, and the best methods for its performance.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss.

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

The Conference Sunday-School Board.

BY REV W. B. LEWIS.

This Board is composed of one layman from each presiding elder's district and an equal number of ministers. They are appointed by the Annual Conference, and they elect their own officers. They are to meet annually, at the time and place of the Annual Conference, and act as a Committee on Sunday-schools. It is their duty to give special attention to all the Sunday-school interests within the bounds of the Conference, and to report to the Annual Conference during the session of that body.

The money collected on Children's Day goes into the hands of the treasurer of the Sunday school Board. Ten per cent. of it is to be forwarded to the General Conference Sunday-school Board at Nashville, Tenn., and ten per cent. of it is to be sent to the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The remaining eighty per cent. may be used to aid needy Sunday-schools and for the advancement of Sunday-school work. Any surplus remaining in the hands of the Board at the end of any Conference year, after providing for needy Sunday-schools, is to be equally divided between the General Conference Sunday-school Board and the Annual Conference Board of Education.

It is the duty of the Sunday-school Board to fix the time and place for the meeting of the Conference Sunday school Convention and to provide a programme for the same; said Convention is to be held under such regulations as the Board may provide. The Sunday-school Conference in each presiding elder's district is left under the supervision of the presiding elder.

The growing interest felt in Sunday-schools in our connection, and the manifest need for yet greater zeal in this important field of Christian enterprise, invests the Sunday-school Board with grave responsibilities. Each member of this Board, lay and clerical, should make himself familiar with the law governing the Board, and study the great possibilities of the field before them. It is one of our most important Conference Boards.

It is announced that Prof. Hamil, "whose office is that of Superintendent of Training Work, will enter fully upon his labors on Oct. 1, after which time his home will be in Nashville. He will, in as far as the work will allow, visit the Annual Conferences and bring the teaching work fully before them, so as to prepare the way for the best practical results. Another branch of his work will be the holding of Conference Institutes for the illustration of the best methods of work in the various lines of Sunday-school endeavor. Already a number of applications have been made for his services in this field. He will probably be able to enter upon this work as early in the Spring as it will be advisable to begin the holding of Conferences. . . . It will be well for the Conference Boards to mature their plans at as early a day as possible and communicate with Dr. Hamil, so that a well-adjusted schedule of work can be made out."

We trust our three Conference Boards are attending to the matter.

We give an article this week from the pen of Bro. Lewis on the powers and duties of the Sunday-school Board. But few workers are familiar with the rules and regulations of our church on the subject, and, as loyal Methodists, we ought to acquaint ourselves with the Discipline and all of our Methodist machinery. It is impossible to grow enthusiastic in a cause we know nothing about. Let us study our Sunday-school machinery, as well as the management of the schools themselves.

The course of instruction for Sunday-school teachers being prepared by Prof. Hamil and Dr. Atkins will soon be ready, and we urge upon every teacher in the connection the importance of taking the course.

By the time this is printed the Sunday-school Institute will be in session at Jackson. Let every reader breathe a prayer that the Holy Spirit will guide it.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WAYNESBORO, MISS.

DEAR ADVOCATE: I clip the following paragraph from Zion's Outlook:

Rev. Elmer E. Van Ness, DeSoto, Miss., sends the following message: 'I am just home from a meeting near Waynesboro, where I assisted Bro. M. B. Minor in a meeting. God gave us victory. Bro. Minor is a solid man of God. The church was in a backslidden condition; consequently, the work was at first slow, but God, through Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit, soon aroused them from their lethargy."

The church here referred to is Spring Hill Church, Wayne mission, Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, of which church I am pastor, and not said M. B. Minor. At the instigation of a few of the leading members of the church, said Minor and Van Ness went there without my knowledge or consent, and held a meeting. They became so thoroughly aroused from their "lethargy," and got to running so mightily to and fro, that they forgot to come to church on the regular time, and ran right into the Methodist Protestant Church before they could stop. Such sanctification as this, born of disloyalty to the church and to God, and which leads to violation of church vows, and the laws of the church and of God, is only troublesome to Israel. The more I learn to love God, the more I love my church.

Beginning the first Sunday in July, we held our meeting at Cochran Church, Rev. W. D. Bass assisting. Nine were added to our membership, and the church greatly strengthened. The first of September the Methodist Protestant furor struck us, but all at this point (Cochran) remained true.

Our Conference collections were all paid in full at the third Quarterly Conference, Aug. 9.

C. S. EMBREE.

LAKE, MISS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: The Lake Camp Meeting closed last night after running eight days. It was said to have been the best in ten or fifteen years. Many were converted to God. Some of the conversions were very bright. Many members of the church were much built up in the faith, and quite a number of heads of families promised to erect the family altar. Twenty-three united with the Methodist Church—twenty-two on profession of faith and one by certificate from the Congregational Methodist Church. Six signified their intention of joining the Baptist, and one the Presbyterian Church. The preaching was done by W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss.; M. L. Burton, of Brookhaven; J. R. Jones, of South Warren circuit, and myself. Bro. Below, a Congregational Methodist, preached once. I also had a good meeting at Carr's Church the first of August. Six accessions there. Bro. W. W. Morse was with us a part of the time. W. J. DAWSON.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WINONA DISTRICT.

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: Two more Quarterly Conferences, and we will have finished the third round on the Winona district. I think that we are in every way up with last year, and in some things in advance. Two of the pastors have been hindered by personal and family affliction. Brothers W. C. Lester, of the Itta Bena work, and R. I. Allen, of the Carrollton circuit, neither one of them has had to give up or leave the work, and they have not failed to preach to the people on Sunday many, if any times, but they have been hindered somewhat in holding their meetings. The rains have interfered. Some meetings that have promised much have been closed on account of rain; yet there has been quite a revival spirit throughout the district. Many have been added to the church, and there are other meetings yet to hold. The material interest of the church is doing well. We have expended for the building, repairing and furnishing of churches and parsonages about seven thousand five hundred dollars. We expect every dollar of the Conference assessments to be paid, and every pastor to receive in full his salary.

Bro. J. C. Park and his flock will soon be busy preparing for the coming of the Conference. They will entertain it well.

Truly, J. H. MITCHELL.

HOUSTON AND WESLEY.

DEAR DOCTOR: Our work is moving forward, and our labor is not in vain in the Lord. A score, or more, have professed faith in Christ, Christians have been edified and strengthened, and quite a number have been added to our membership on profession of faith. The end is not yet. Brother Oates, of Verona, was with us one week, and delighted and endeared himself to our people by his charming spirit and powerful preaching. Our own young and promising preacher, Joe H. Ingram, has been abundant in labors.

Truly, H. C. MOREHEAD.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

INDIAN BAYOU CIRCUIT.

DEAR DOCTOR BOSWELL: We have had two good meetings on the Indian Bayou circuit recently—one at Indian Bayou, beginning July 27, by the pastor. On Monday, the twenty ninth, Rev. R. W. Tucker, of Lake Charles, La., came to me and preached twice a day till Friday night, Aug. 2. Bro. Tucker was at his best, and preached with great power. There were about 15 conversions and 20 accessions. Among the new converts were five of our best young men. Bro. Tucker won the hearts of these people. His sermons on Thursday and Friday, at 11 A. M., to the church members were remarkable for the manifestation of the Holy Ghost; many were made to rejoice, and Christians were drawn closer to God and to each other. On Sunday night, Aug. 25, we began a meeting at Bethel. Dr. C. W. Carter, our faithful presiding elder, preached on Sunday night, and on Monday, at eleven, the pastor did the balance of the preaching, save one sermon by Rev. Abel Hoffpauir. The Lord wonderfully blessed us in this meeting. There were conversions at nearly every service. The congregations were the largest ever seen there. There was several backsliders reclaimed. On Sunday night, the last night of the meeting, the Lord came in great power and quite a number were converted and fifteen united with the church, making a total of eighteen accessions on profession of faith and twenty-one conversions. We asked for a contribution on our Conference claims, and received in cash and subscription $71.

We have one more meeting to hold at Hebron, where we are building a new church. As soon as we get it finished will hold forth there. The Lord is blessing us in our work, and to him be all the praise.

The Dog Knows

That there is something wrong with his master. They have no more romps, and rambles. He tries in vain to coax the listless youth from life chair.

When the lungs are diseased, physical weakness soon begins to show itself and the active outdoor life is given up. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the lungs and other organs of respiration. It cures obstinate, deep-seated coughs, bleeding lungs, emaciation and other conditions which if neglected or unskillfully treated may find a fatal termination in consumption.

"After using about five bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery my boy seems to be all right," writes Mr. J. W. Price, of Ozark, Monroe Co., Ohio. "He was very bad when I commenced to give him the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' The doctors claimed he had consumption and we doctored with them until he was past walking. It has been ten months since he stopped taking your medicine and he is in good health. We are very thankful to you for saving our son."

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for diseases of the stomach, blood, and lungs. Substitution means a little more profit for the dealer but a loss for you.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1901.

Faith in God is the strongest motive power at the command of men: it moves the arm that moves the world.

Obedience to Christ, not profession of high attainment in the divine life, is the best expression of love and gratitude.

To work together with God for the destruction of sin is the greatest work than can engage the heads and hearts of men or angels.

To indulge in sin may please Satan and gratify the natural man for a moment, but the risk is too great for such a short-lived pleasure.

God gives grace to men according to the measure of the gift of Christ, not as a man deals grain to his neighbor—so much to the measure, and no more.

The kicking and complaining of the lazy and improvident man who suffers for bread and clothes is useless and foolish: he has no one to blame but himself.

A good man may be fully conscious of his acceptance with God, and fearless in doing his duty, but he gives his testimony with meekness and fear.

The soul can not bring itself into favor with God by good works, but once in the favor of God through grace the soul will grow and develop by doing good.

There are many Christians called by many different names with different views of Christian doctrine, but there is only one religion—that is, the tie of unity to God.

No matter what nor how great the evils are in a community, a genuine revival of religion is worth more in effecting reform that all the human societies that can be devised.

He that undertakes to alleviate human suffering, even if he does nothing more than give an unfortunate fellow-being a cup of cold water, is a benefactor worthy of reward.

Hungering and thirsting after righteousness are surer indications of vital godliness than the strongest attachment to forms and ceremonies, or the most extravagant claims to personal sanctity.

"At it, everlastingly at it," is the watchword of the wicked one, and he never forgets it, neither does he neglect to put in his work wherever he sees an opportunity, and, unlike some men who might imitate his example, where he sees no opportunity, he makes one.

DEATH OF PRESIDENT M'KINLEY.

President McKinley lived a little more than a week after being shot. No unfavorable symptoms appeared up to Friday, the thirteenth, and everybody was rejoicing in hope of a speedy recovery, the physicians attending him giving assurances to that effect almost every hour of the day. Suddenly there was a change, a sinking spell, and extreme weakness. The surgeons at once recognized the seriousness of the situation, and gave out no word of encouragement. The whole land was excited, and breathed uneasily, until 2:15 Saturday morning, the fourteenth, when the wires flashed the news of the President's death. Then there was mourning, for the best-loved President of modern days had succumbed to the assassin's bullet—the first American executive to fall by the hand of an anarchist. God grant that he may be the last!

President McKinley was a Methodist, and devout Christian. In his great affliction he evinced the Christian spirit, and perfect resignation to the will of God. His first thought and words after being wounded were of his invalid wife. He said to his secretary: "My wife; be careful about her; don't let her know." Then, when told that the shooting was the deed of an anarchist, he said, "Too bad, too bad; but let no one hurt him." During his last period of consciousness he chanted the familiar hymn, "Nearer, my God, to thee," and his last audible words during this period of consciousness were: "Good-by, all; good-by. It is God's way. His will be done." With firm reliance on his Lord, he passed into eternity.

His body was conveyed from Buffalo to Washington, and after lying in state until Tuesday evening, was taken to his home at Canton, Ohio, and buried. He rests in peace. A nation is in tears.

REVIVALS NOT ACCIDENTAL.

Revivals sometimes break out unexpectedly, but they are never accidental, nor do they come as the result of purely mechanical effort. We remember many years ago meeting a regular appointment at Brown's Church, on Jackson circuit, Memphis Conference, without any thought of a protracted service, or making a revival effort, but the church was in a happy frame of mind and united in heart, the Holy Spirit came upon us in power and much assurance, and such were the tokens of his presence and willingness to bless then and there, that another service was appointed for the evening. Everything seemed to say: This is the set time to favor Zion. That meeting resulted not only in a blessing to the church, but in the conversion of many sinners. Was that revival accidental? By no means. The people were all with one accord in one place, and the Lord met with them.

Sometimes faithful preaching, active work and earnest prayer all fail to secure a revival. Why, we can not tell. Speculation on the subject is useless. But, though we are unable to tell why our best efforts sometimes fail, we feel justified in saying that revivals never come to worldly, indifferent and inactive churches. Necessary conditions must be fulfilled.

1. There must be personal consecration to God. It must be entire and without reserve. True, the church is supposed to be already consecrated, but everybody knows that Christians coming in contact with the world, and attending to the various affairs of life, are liable to fall into a state of coldness and indifference, and to forget their vows. They unconsciously backslide, and though they may not have voluntarily withdrawn themselves from the altar, under the reproving and quickening influence of the Spirit they come to realize that they are not on it. Their former consecration amounts to nothing. They must be on the altar: otherwise revival power can never be realized in their souls. In case of a backslider renewing his vows and giving himself anew to God, it is immaterial whether you call the act consecration or a reconsecration: the act itself is essential. "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord." Who has not seen grace, like fire in dry stubble, sweep through a congregation when, with one consent, all the people gave themselves to God? To state the necessity for it renders argument useless.

2. There must be earnest calling upon God. Prayer is necessary, not to excite God to a sense of pity, or to arouse him to willingness. He already pities us, and is ever ready and willing to bless us, but it is necessary to show our own sense of need, and our confidence in the Divine Being. As a rule, men do not always feel their need. They never pray until need is felt. Alas, it is the case that in most of our churches multitudes feel no need of revival in their own hearts, and cherish no concern for others. It is for this reason that the faithful come together and pray with and for one another, and for the turning of the hearts of the people to God. Such exercises are well-pleasing to God, and impress the people. God hears, and answers. It is sometimes necessary to be importunate, not to test God, but to test the strength of man. "Men ought always to pray, and not to faint." "God will avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them."

3. There must be strong faith in God. Not in his being and perfections, for faith in these is possibly as strong as it can be, though the sense of the divine presence in many persons might be quickened. We mean there must be strong faith in God as a pardoning and saving God; such faith as will lead to the forsaking of sin and self, and to personal trust in him through Christ. Up to this point men are apt to lean to reason, or to self-righteousness, or to something that detracts from the power and grace of God. But saving faith, or faith that brings blessings from above, must be such as to look to and trust alone in God. When that faith is exercised self is lost sight of, and all human righteousness is ignored. This faith is irresistible and all-conquering. It is the victory that overcomes the world. This faith leads us to live right, and by right living to condemn an evil and gain-saying world. Men must take knowledge of us, that we have been with Christ. Only in the strength of such faith have we any assurance of success when we come to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Lord, evermore give thy church this faith!

SAVING OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

We have lately given much thought to the possible future of our children. We refer to their future attitude toward religion and the church. The vision is not at all cheering. The young people to day do not give sufficient attention to the church and public worship. Perhaps this indifference is not general, but it is lamentably so in many places, particularly among the boys and young men.

We have paid attention recently to the make-up of our congregations. All have been very small on account of hot weather. In one congregation the men outnumbered the women. This was strange, but stranger still, at one or two services there was not a single young man, youth, or boy, and but two or three girls. The absence of young men from church is often noted in print, and earnest inquiry has been made as to the cause. But what shall we think and say when both the young men and young women, and the boys and girls, all with one consent abandon the church? Whatever may be the cause, the situation is serious, and calls for action. We can not be too prompt in getting to work to remedy the evil.

But why should we be concerned? Because on the church depends the salvation of souls, and the future welfare of our country. This statement needs no proof. It will be accepted by all who believe the church is of divine authority. And all who believe must see that if we fail to train our children in the church, or for the church, or, if as some of us are doing, we continue to train them from the church, it is only a question of time when neither parents nor children will be in the church.

It will be observed in this connection that we incidentally throw the responsibility for children's neglect of the church on the parents. There is where it belongs. We say this because parents do not bring their authority to bear on children, and form in them the church-going habit when they are small. We do not say they neglect the proper instruction of their children at home, but proper instruction at home will not accomplish its desired end, unless it is followed by example and due enforcement. Parents must take their children with them to the house of God. This must be their habit. It must be part of the family government. When we see parents at church, and know that their children are at home, or romping in the streets, we are sure that part of their family government is being neglected.

Parents can not depend on other agencies than the church to save their children, nor can they transfer their responsibility to other teachers. Other teachers may assist, but they can not take the place of father and mother. Other agencies may be employed as auxiliaries, but they can not be substituted for the church. The Sunday-school is a good institution, capable of vast good if its design is understood, and is so conducted as to subserve its purpose. But if our children are impressed with the idea, by word or deed, that it is the one supreme thing, and the only thing of a religious character to which they need to pay attention on Sunday, thus superseding the church and its ordinances, then it becomes a hindrance rather than a help. And we do not hesitate to say that we had far better disband the Sunday-school than to teach our children that, after Sunday-school is over, they are at liberty to do as they please the remainder of the Sabbath.

Is it not a fact that as the older people are on their way to public worship in the morning, they meet troops of children and grown folks, including Sunday-school teachers, going home? Such sights are not uncommon. As a result, we may expect the children in due time to outgrow the Sunday-school, and finally to be lost to the church altogether. If children imbibe no love for the church in childhood and youth, it is certain they will be indifferent to its claims when they reach maturity. Are not the fruits of this sowing being reaped?

What is said with reference to Sunday-school is equally appropriate when applied to the Epworth League. Occasionally we hear complaint of Leaguers ignoring public worship. The presumption is, they are satisfied, fully believing that they have done their duty. When a pastor is making his way to church in the morning, and sees four or five times as many people leaving as are going, and in the evening witnesses the exodus of Leaguers just as service begins, he not only feels that his ministry is discounted, but that the church has slight hold on the young. The evil complained of is not so bad in the country and small towns as in our large cities. There it is distressing.

We shall not now undertake to point out a remedy. Let our preachers look over the field, and if one finds that the state of things in his parish is not as we say, then he may thank the Lord, and double his efforts to keep his flock from being affected. If another verifies our statement, he may, in a judicious way, secure the co-operation of parents, and keep the children right, and win the young men and women back to the church. A preacher who loves God and the church, and has good common sense, can devise his own way of proceeding. And let all bear in mind that our young people must be saved.

THE HABIT OF JUDGING.

"By their fruits ye shall know them," is our Lord's law of judging. No other law can be righteous. To judge otherwise is to enter into the region of motive, and force one to pass judgment on a man's moral status—a thing none but God has a right to do. To deal with a man's opinions, and pass judgment on their soundness or unsoundness, is another thing, and quite allowable. But opinions do not necessarily affect a man's moral state. His head may be all wrong while his heart is all right. The theological opinions of millions of men we believe to be erroneous—our Calvinistic brethren, for instance. But are we justified in condemning them to death because they adhere to what we believe to be a false creed? By no means.

Men who humbly follow their Savior, daily rejoicing in hope, and daily producing "fruit unto holiness," are entitled to recognition by their brethren as disciples of Christ, and in a state of salvation. We may judge such souls to be in Christ Jesus, and new creatures. They are sons of God, and thus occupy the nearest relation to God it is possible for men to occupy, and it would be unrighteous judgment to condemn them to perdition should they happen to be a little astray on theological questions. On the other hand, if men have not the Spirit of Christ, but do wickedly, we may safely judge them to be outside of Christ, no matter how correct their theology. That would be righteous judgment. We have no right, as Christians, to cloud the title of other heirs to the kingdom by asserting that their experience is not sufficient to give them standing before God. To do so convicts us of judging our brother. It is said of a certain man in the early days of American Methodism that he "preached sanctification like an angel, and fought Bishop Asbury like a devil." That was a clear case of a man professing highest Christian attainment, yet so lacking in charity that he could not tolerate differences in judgment. And in this case it happened that both men agreed perfectly on the doctrine of sanctification. We think of O'Kelley every time we hear of great leaders in the holiness movement denouncing our church authorities, and pouring out their anathemas on all who decline to accept their views.

Judgment other than that founded on the life-fruit is contrary to the teaching of Christ, who says, "Judge not, that ye be not judged." Such judgment is not Protestant, for Protestantism allows a man to think and let think without questioning his integrity, or his moral state in the sight of God. Methodists should know better and do better.

We write thus on general principles, not as a personal defense, albeit great concern has been expressed for our personal safety. We are thankful; it shows that we are not forgotten. We join our prayers with those of our friends, and go, perhaps, a step further than some of them by asserting our belief in the teaching of the Master, "If any man will (wills to) do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

At the request of brethren, and for good reasons, the date of the forthcoming session of the Louisiana Annual Conference is changed from Dec. 19 to Dec. 12, 1901.

O. P. FITZGERALD.

PERSONAL.

Dr. W. H. LaPrade, of Rayne Memorial, preached the opening sermon for Whitworth Female College, at Brookhaven, Miss., last Sunday, at 11 A. M.

We thank Rev. G. W. Huff, pastor at Coalville, Miss., for an invitation to attend the Palmer Camp Meeting, which begins the twentieth instant. We hope to be present two or three days.

Bishop Galloway, according to a dispatch received at Jackson, Miss., sailed for home on the seventeenth. We trust he may have a safe and pleasant trip. He has been absent more than two months.

Dr. S. S. Keener occupied the pulpit of Carondelet Street Church last Sunday, morning and evening. Dr. Parker, the pastor, is expected to be at home in time to fill his pulpit the second Sunday in October.

Rev. J. I. Huffpauir, of Kentwood, came over to the city, Monday last, to meet his wife and children, who have been visiting relatives in Southwest Louisiana. Brother Hoffpauir reports refreshing times in his charge.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, of Parker Memorial, is getting ready to move into the parsonage. The ladies of his charge are at work furnishing the home. For the present, Brother Atkinson's sister, a young lady just from California, will keep house for him.

The press dispatches give a glowing account of the meeting held at Hattiesburg, Miss., by Rev. J. R. Morse, assisted by Rev. T. B. Clifford. Many souls were converted. Brother Clifford returned home the latter part of the week, and filled his pulpit last Sunday.

Rev. Geo. D. Parker, pastor of Carrollton Avenue Church, under appointment for mission work in Brazil, will leave for his distant field about the middle of October. The prayers of many friends will follow him. The outlook for Protestant Christianity in Brazil are very bright.

A note in the Grand Cane (La.) Beacon says that Rev. W. G. Evans has worked untiringly in the interest of the new parsonage at Grand Cane, and deserves a vast deal of credit. Work has been begun, and Bro. Evans will soon be rewarded for his energy. The house will be beautiful when completed.

Rev. W. E. Vaughan, recently elected editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, to take the place of Dr. R. P. Wilson, entered upon his work with the issue of Sept. 5. We cordially welcome Brother Vaughan to the fraternity, and wish him abundant success. Brother Wilson is now well on his way to Shanghai, where he goes to take charge of the new Publishing House of our church.

We have never had on hand so many items of news from "the field." They are really refreshing. Our preachers were never more thoroughly interested in the work of the Master; never did more evangelical preaching. The Lord is wonderfully blessing their labors. It delights us to get the news. If it is a little long in coming out; it is because we are crowded. We will print as much in each issue as we can.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE OPENING.

The forty-seventh session of this excellent institution of learning opened on Wednesday, the fourth instant, under flattering circumstances. The annual session which closed last June gave evidence of great prosperity, but this opening, which was better than last year, together with the president's encouraging reports, assures us that a greater degree of prosperity will attend the present session, which is very gratifying to the many friends of this time-honored institution.

A greater degree of interest in our college, than formally, is manifested by our people. It is the pride of our community. It is a power in the State and Church, and its influence for good can not be estimated. It is the duty of every Methodist in the bounds of our Conference to constitute himself a committee of one to work for the upbuilding of Mansfield Female College, the only one of the kind in the State. The present management has wonderfully improved the condition of our college during the past five years, and in evidence of the Board's high appreciation of the fine work done by President and Mrs. Sligh, another five years' lease has been given them. Thus another opportunity is offered to Louisiana Methodism to do something for Christian education.

Methodists of Louisiana, shall we neglect this opportunity and gain the disapprobation of posterity, or shall we seize upon this, the golden opportunity, and bring our college to its highest possibilities in the Christian education of our young women?

The experienced educators, President and Mrs. T. S. Sligh, are meeting the high demands made upon them by the people. Nature seems to have eminently fitted them for this great work. Our faculty is composed of teachers distinguished in their several departments. They are peculiarly fitted for their respective positions, by reason of their special training in the best colleges of the land. The progressive and thorough methods which President Sligh has adopted in the college for the management of its affairs, are receiving the commendation and appreciative recognition of the people all over the State, and they have gained a very strong place in public confidence as teachers of marked ability. Our college buildings are beautifully located, situated at a safe and comfortable distance from the business portion of our town, accessible to two railroads, on a commanding elevation, with perfect, natural drainage. The campus is beautiful and inviting. A healthier location would be hard to find anywhere. The location secures all the advantages of the town, and yet supplies all the healthful conditions and immunities of the country. During the past year we expended a good deal of money in repairs and improvement on our college property, and have recently painted the three-story brick building from cellar to garret, and otherwise beautified the premises. A new and modern elevator has been purchased, and is on the grounds, which will take the place of the old one, to the satisfaction and convenience of an appreciative student body. Other enterprises are being inaugurated here by our progressive league of business young men, which will greatly add to the convenience and sanitary betterment of the college. The first, among which will be water works and electric lights, no doubts are entertained as to its early materialization. With these modern facilities we can boast of an ideal college home, where the most wholesome Christian influences prevail for the development of the highest type of Christian womanhood. No college in the State, and few in the South, are offering more to young ladies than Mansfield Female College, from whose halls of learning many of our fair daughters have already gone forth to adorn and bless homes in this and adjoining States.

Respectfully, A. F. JACKSON,
Sec'y Board of Trustees.

The people are hungry for the gospel as taught by Methodism and the Bible, and are growing weary of hearing preached a lawless gospel and a sinning religion. They are becoming disgusted with preachers whose favorite themes are: "The Impossibility of Keeping the Ten Commandments, and Especially the Seventh," and "The Sins of the Body Are the Sins of the Flesh, for Which the Soul Is Not Responsible."

A Family Reunion.

At the country home of my mother-in-law, Mrs. E. J. Jones, in Jefferson county, Miss., we had a happy reunion of our family during the past week. We had not all been together for twenty-two years. And some of our number were absent on this occasion. My eldest daughter, Mrs. Harrell, of Virginia, with her family, were absent. My brother-in-law, Rev. B. F. Jones, presiding elder of the Brookhaven district, was kept away by official duties. Part of his family were also absent. But there were twenty-two of us here, all members of the church except five children of tender years, and among us three ministers of the gospel. Our mother, Mrs. Jones, seemed happy with her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren around her. Great have been the mercies and blessings of God upon us. We thanked God and took courage. And when the time came to disperse, we did so fondly, hoping all to meet again, if not in this world, in heaven. God grant that not one of our number shall ever go astray and be lost!

PERTINENT FACTS.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected especially for school work from plans. The outcome of practical experience. The main building 250x60 feet, with wing 60x90 feet, with verandas, large and airy study hall, class rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed rooms [illegible] in a corridor, electric lights, water on every floor, with [illegible] system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building), Peck Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewer), all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils in weather necessary at any time.

Character: I. Christian.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose, namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. Thorough.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "Thorough" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. Successful. The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. Growth. Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years: 29, 58, 88, 126, 147, 151, 176. Number of officers and teachers. In 1894, six; at present, twenty. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach. The ordinal and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is as more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

HOW ROY WENT TO THE BEACH.

"Mama, won't you give me five cents, so'l I can have just one more ride on the merry-go-round?"

"No, Roy, you have had three rides to-day; that will answer."

"But, Mama, it isn't going to be on the square only one day more."

"Well, we'll see about to-morrow; but not again to-day, Roy."

"Oh, dear! Earl Whiting and Charlie Reed are going over to have another ride. Say! can't I have just one more?"

"No, Roy."

"Why can't I, Mama? You just said you'd see about to-morrow; and I'd rather have it to-night than to-morrow."

"It's growing late; and I never want you out after dark."

"Oh, it won't be dark for a long time yet. Please, Mama, can't I go?"

"That will do, Roy. We won't discuss the matter any further."

Roy Allen was a tease—a dreadful tease. So said everybody who had anything to do with him. He was a bright, merry little lad, and so long as his desires were all granted, it was a pleasure to have him about; the refusal of a request at once transformed the agreeable boy into a tiresome bore and nuisance. "No" was never taken by him as a final answer until he had exhausted all his own resources in the way of argument and entreaty.

"Papa," said Roy a half-hour later, as they were sitting together with Mama and Sister Addie out on the piazza, "you said perhaps you'd take me down to the beach some Saturday afternoon. Won't you go next Saturday?"

"Don't say you'll see about it, Papa; say 'Yes.'"

"See here, Roy! I have something to propose to you. You know we all get pretty tired of your constant teasing for things, especially as we don't see any use or sense in it. Now, if you'll make up your mind not to ask for any one thing more than once for the rest of the week, and Mama and Addie both report to me Saturday noon that there has been no teasing for or about anything, we'll take the first afternoon train for the beach, and stay until after the fireworks in the evening."

Roy's eyes shone. An afternoon at the beach was a rare treat in itself, but to have the fireworks as a climax would be to have his cup of happiness filled to the brim.

"Course, I won't tease," answered Roy promptly. "Guess I won't want anything else very much when I think about next Saturday."

The change in Roy was quite remarkable; and it was such a relief to Mama and Sister Addie.

When Papa came home the next night he was told what a pleasant, gentlemanly little fellow had come to take the place of the exasperating tease that had given them so much annoyance before, and what a real comfort and joy it was to have the new boy about the house.

Roy listened to all this with a pleased smile; for words of praise are dear even to a small boy's heart, and he was more firmly resolved than ever to stop teasing not only for the sake of next Saturday, but to please Mama and Addie.

Roy found, however, that there were still many things that he wanted which even the thought of Saturday's excursion would not altogether satisfy; but when Mama was obliged to say "No" to these requests, she usually said it in a way that made him think about the beach, and that was a great help.

One afternoon Roy came rushing into the house, calling out, "Mama, say, can't Charlie Reed and I take the chairs out o' the dining room, and put 'em in a long row on the sidewalk so 's to make believe they 're a train o' cars?"

"Why, no, dear; I couldn't let you do that," answered Mrs. Allen.

"But, Mama—" Here a warning finger was lifted just in time; and Roy turned and went out without another word.

At another time he concluded to try a new method of gaining his point—that of arguing the case before putting the question. "Now, Mama," said he, "don't say 'No' until I've told you all about it! You know that nice little creek that runs back of Willie Dayton's house? Well, the water 's just as wa—rm—almost hot! And it isn't a bit deep right there. The place where that little boy got drowned last Summer wasn't anywhere near this place; I wouldn't get my clothes wet, 'cause I'd roll my pants way up 'bove my knees, and I wouldn't stay in such a very long while, either. Now, Mama, can't I go?"

Mrs. Allen smiled at the ingenuity of her small boy, but she had to again say "No," for, as she told him, there were often deep holes right near the shallow places in the creek, which made it very dangerous for little boys to go in wading.

Friday evening they were all sitting at the dinner table. The dessert was cherry pie, and Roy was particularly fond of cherry pie. He had eaten his piece with the greatest apparent relish, and then in a beseeching tone asked if he couldn't have just a little piece more.

"No, Roy," said Mrs. Allen. "One piece is all that would be good for you, I am sure."

The words were no sooner out than Roy realized what he had done, and a most crestfallen expression came over his face.

"Oh, I didn't think!" said he. "Just for a little piece o' pie, too!" he added disgustedly. Then mournfully, "We won't go to the beach to-morrow after all, Papa?"

"Oh, do take him!" interposed Addie; "he has been such a good boy this week, Papa, and has tried so hard not to tease."

"I have an idea," said Papa, "that a young man who has made such a brave effort to overcome his fault that he has only slipped once in nearly a week would enjoy his day at the beach much better, even though it should be one week later than had been planned, if he could say at that time that he had kept his part of the contract perfectly; and I believe he'll do it with another week. How's that, Roy?"

"I guess it'll take more'n pie to trip me next time!" answered Roy, as he brushed away a tear.

It was with an air of triumph, upon Saturday afternoon of the following week, that Roy started with his Papa for the beach, and it was a' tired, but very happy little boy who, late that night, after telling all about the big waves, the sand-digging, the band and the fireworks, said confidentially to Mama, "It was better to ha' waited a week after all, 'cause then I didn't have to think anything about the pie."—Exchange.

Where Spices Come From.

Salt is obtained from brine springs, or salt mines. The salt from the mines is called rock salt, and looks like dirty pinkish glass The rock is crushed and dissolved in water. The dirt, being heavy, settles to the bottom, and the clear water, which is poured from the top, is evaporated, leaving the salt behind. It is then dried, says McCall's Magazine, and, according to the size of the grains, is called hay salt, household salt, or table salt.

Pepper comes from the berries of a plant which grows in tropical countries. The berries, which grow in long clusters, like small bunches of grapes, are green before they become red. They are dried in the sun, and the red coat shrivels up and turns black. When the berries are ground they give black pepper. White pepper is obtained by drying the berries in the shade, soaking them, and by removing the outer skin by rubbing with the hand before grinding them to a powder. The white pepper is less pungent and acrid than the black, and generally costs twice as much.

Cayenne pepper does not come from the pepper plant, but is obtained by drying and grinding the seed pods of capsicums or chilis, which are the fruit of plants belonging to the same family as the potato and tomato.

Mustard has been in use for a long time. It was used as a medicine before the Christian era. The oil was extracted and used for rheumatism, or mixed with other ingredients and used as a remedy for snake bites. The Saxons used it as a condiment, crushing the seeds and mixing them with honey and vinegar. Genuine mustard is obtained from a mixture of white and black mustard seeds.

The housekeeper's trouble is to keep the mustard pot supplied with freshly-made mustard. Unless frequently attended to, the mustard becomes dry and unsightly. Made mustard will be found to keep fresh much longer if it is mixed with water which has been boiled and just allowed to get cold. Another plan is to add a little salt or a little vinegar to the mustard, but either addition alters the flavor of the mixture.

Vinegar is made by the fermentation of some liquid containing alcohol. In this country it is usually made from cider. In France and Germany it is made from wine, and such vinegar is superior to the vinegar made from malt, as in England. The sharpness is due to acetic acid, which is always present in vinegar.

Dick and the Sparrow.

The lady of the house was standing in the vestibule, casting an anxious eye down the street.

"Are there no boys in sight?" asked a voice from within.

"Yes, plenty of boys on the street, but you know how particular I am about Pet. I should like to be sure that the boy who rides her will not be rough with her."

Just then a sturdy young fellow of ten came whizzing by on a bicycle. It was not his own, but one that its owner was generous enough to lend to the boys who had none, and he was taking his turn while the other boys lay on the grass and played jackstones, wishing as he rode along, "My! if I only had a wheel for my trip to the farm!"

Just then he suddenly straightened himself up.

"Ting a-ling-ling!" rang out the bell of the bicycle sharply, and as he slowed up the other boys half rose and looked wonderingly. They could see nothing to ring for.

"What was it, Dick?" they demanded.

"O, nothing but a sparrow. I was afraid I would run over it; the little thing stood so still right in front of the wheel."

"Ho, ho! Rings his bell for a sparrow!" sneered the other boys as Dick dismounted.

"Mama's itty, witty baby."

"I don't care how much you make fun of me," he replied, good-naturedly, yet not without a red flush on his brow. "I guess I wouldn't run over a sparrow, even, when I could help it by ringing or stopping."

"Come here, please, Dick," called a voice from the doorstep of one of the handsomest houses on the avenue. "You are the very boy I want to drive a pony to the country and back. It is out the Darlington Boulevard. Would you like to go?"

"Why, yes, ma'am," quickly answered Dick. "I have an errand out there, and was just dreading the walk."

"Then I am glad you may ride. I was wondering if I could trust one of those boys to be kind to Pet, when I overheard about the sparrow. That made me willing to trust you."—Junior Christian Endeavor World.

Frogs as Policemen.

Have you ever noticed near the side of the pond masses of little eggs about the size of a pea which float on the surface of the water and generally lay on the long grass at the edge of the pond?

If you ever find these eggs, go back to the place in a few days and you will see in their places numbers of funny little creatures, with very big heads and flat, thin tails, which makes them look a little bit like fishes. These black creatures are called tadpoles. They grow very fast, because they grow a great deal. Little legs grow out of the side of the body; the tail disappears, and the animal is no longer a tadpole, but a little frog, jumping about as you have seen frogs do.

The frog drinks with its mouth, but it also sucks up water through a great many holes in its skin, just as a sponge does if you put it in a bowl of water.

A gentleman once caught a number of frogs, which he kept in a bowl of water. As long as there was plenty of water in the basin they looked fat and well, but if he took them out when the weather was very hot, they soon grew thin and ill. These frogs became quite tame, and learned to take their food from their master's hand. They were very fond of flies and were clever in catching them, so when the fruit for the gentleman's dessert was laid out in the store-room these frogs were placed around it to act as little policemen to keep the flies from spoiling it, and they did their work very well indeed. You should watch to see a frog change its skin. It is very curious. Whenever a number of frogs have made up their minds to change their skins, having, of course, new ones underneath, several of them begin at once. Two of its companions hold the one, whose coat is to come off, around the middle of its body; then one or two others give little bites and pulls at the skin with first one leg and then another, and at last the whole body is set free and the frog appears with such a clear, white skin that it must feel very proud.—Adapted from Helen Cyr's Readers.

Wit should be tempered with discretion and with kindness. Any gift used to give needless pain becomes a curse. Senator Hoar paid a beautiful tribute to the late Senator Davis when he said, "No spark from him was ever a cinder in the eye of his friend."—Southern Churchman.

A WORD OF WARNING.

When "boarding round" on the frontier, in my early days of teaching, I was often pained and surprised to hear through the unfinished walls of the settlers' new homes strange revelations of prurient knowledge from the lips of my pupils whose parents supposed them to be sleeping.

I remember hearing the most obscene language from a boy whose parents were more than ordinarily high-minded and religious. His companion, a boy of his own age, had been allowed to "stay all night" with him, and was being tutored in a manner which must have pleased his Satanic majesty. The visitor, whose mind retained much of childish purity, made some feeble protests against the filthy communications of the other boy, but his preceptor in vice parried them with the cunning art of a sophist. The pure mothers of each never would have believed their darling sons guilty of bad language or practices.

Mothers are too prone to trust their children's associates because they belong to good families and have been well reared. Often they forget that their own little ones may be led astray or subjected to evil influences. The contagion of impurity arising from one child may spread through a school or neighborhood like a pestilence.

Keep, then, a watchful eye on the children; guard them from exposure, but do not let your solicitude be known to them unless you are confronted by their guilt. Nothing so humiliates a high-minded child as to be suspected of uncleanness.

Do not think more lightly of a son's impurity than of his sister's. Do not excuse obscenity from his lips by saying: "Oh he's a boy. We can expect no better of boys!"

There are boys whose imaginations, fed by foul conversation, are as filthy as the stagnant pool; boys with faces upon which is stamped lasciviousness; boys with leering eyes and rakish demeanor. There are boys with healthy minds and unpolluted bodies—boys with clear, frank, honest eyes, revealing pure soul-depths within. Which of these shall your boy be, O mother?

Shall your sons swell the ranks of those who are sowing to the wind to reap the whirlwind, who are scattering abroad rottenness and disease? Or shall they be pure men, going into the world to uplift and build up instead of tearing down and destroying?

Do not be content for your daughters with that prondence which leads them to be careful of their reputation, but hedge about their childhood with all pure influences which shall encase them in innocence. Unaffected modesty is a girl's best safeguard.

The young woman who can utter innuendoes or relate stories suggestive of impure thoughts, even in the presence of her most intimate girl-friend, may be "smart enough to look out for herself," but she is not one a noble man would choose for a wife or who would elevate the home or society.

Sometimes I think that the old-time delicacy and reserve were better than our modern free handling of social abuses. "Ignorance" may not be innocence, but the reticence of a mother is to be preferred to the too free or careless treatment of those life mysteries which up-to-date authority says should be explained by parents to young children. I well remember an unhappy tragedy which occurred through the fatal mistakes of two sisters whose parents had reared them after the present progressive idea that there should be no mysteries in the household, and am inclined to think that the old way was safest.—Housekeeper.

OBITUARIES.

WILLIAM NELSON DELOACH, son of James C. and Mrs. Susan DeLoach, was born at Abbeville, Miss., June 6, 1870, and departed this life July 16, 1901, at Durant, Miss. He was baptized in infancy by Bishop Robert Paine. When quite a small boy he professed religion and joined the Methodist Church at Spring Hill, west of Grenada, and since that time lived a consistent and upright Christian life. He loved his church, and was ever ready to serve her in any possible way. Well possessed many noble traits of character. He was universally kind and considerate; was everybody's friend. He had an exceptionally fine disposition; was even-tempered and patient, and had the self-forgetting spirit in a pre-eminent degree. He was a true and loyal son, gladly helping to provide for a large family. For many years he was an employee in the office of the Grenada Sentinel, where his services were invaluable. His health not being good here, he located at Durant, and entered the service of the I. C. railroad. He showed himself so competent that within a few months he was placed in charge of a train. As a conductor, he gave eminent satisfaction. No boy ever had more friends among the railroad people than did Will DeLoach. On Dec. 27, 1900, he was married to Miss Kate Thomas, of Durant. Long before he had reached his prime, and while life was so sweet and promising, he was called upon to die. He died in the triumphs of the Christian's faith, asking his young wife and all his loved ones to meet him in the better land. His father preceded him just eight days. May God sustain the bereaved family!

E. S. LEWIS.

Mr. J. P. STARR, of Fannin, Miss., died Aug. 25 of inflammation of the bladder. He was sick only eight days. All was done that could be done by loving hands and skilled physician, but gave no relief. Bro. H. P. Lewis was with us, and performed the funeral service. Mr. Starr was born in Alabama, Sept. 3, 1828. He came of Methodist parentage. His father and six uncles were Methodist preachers. His mother, Mrs. Phebe Starr, was a Methodist of the old type, who rejoiced every day in a conscious acceptance with Christ her Lord. He was a good provider, a good citizen, but never connected himself with any church. He leaves his companion of nearly fifty years, and two daughters and one son and thirteen grandchildren, to mourn their loss. God has not left us comfortless. His grace is sufficient for us.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

There is a good deal of religious life that is much like the practice of "marking time" among soldiers. They lift up one foot and then put it down in the same place; then they lift up the other foot and put it down in the same place. They are moving, but they are not marching. In other words, they are but going through the motions of a march. So it is with many professors. They are marking time. They are "going through the motions" of a Christian life, but they are not getting on. They are saying their prayers, but are not praying; they are going to church, but not to heaven; they are talking in meeting, but bearing no testimony.—Church Army Gazette.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The Czar and Czarina left Kell for France on the imperial yacht.

Lieutenant Peary's letters giving in detail the result of his explorations have been received.

Memorial services were held in all local churches in honor of the late President McKinley.

Wall street men generally feared a panic, but markets opened with prices several points up.

Millionaire John W. Mackay, in an interview, says all anarchists should be executed when arrested.

The President has announced to friends that he would follow the lines laid down by Mr. McKinley.

The City Council held a special meeting to arrange a programme for the McKinley funeral services.

Six miners have been killed and others were injured in a mine explosion at Glenwood Springs, Col.

Indiana people tarred and feathered a minister at Huntington for calling McKinley a demagogue.

But few steel mills resumed operations because the strikers did not return to work in large numbers.

New gushers are being brought in daily at Beaumont, showing that the oil supply is practically inexhaustible.

Hundreds of delegates have arrived in St. Louis to attend the convention of the American Pharmaceutical Association.

There are now at least forty steamships in the port of New Orleans. Fifty-eight steamships have cleared and sailed for New Orleans. This is a record breaking state of affairs.

Gov. Heard has issued a proclamation asking that Thursday next, the day of the funeral of the late President McKinley, be observed as a holiday and fittingly celebrated.

The State funeral of President McKinley took place at Washington, on Tuesday, thousand of troops, civic bodies and prominent men from all parts of the country taking part in the ceremonies.

The challenge committee of the N. Y. Yacht Club, after consultation with representatives of the Royal Ulster Yacht Club, decided that the first race of America's Cup should take place on September 26.

Well-informed life insurance men say that President McKinley carried from $100,000 to $200,000 on his life. One big New York company is said to have a single policy for $50,000. Mrs. McKinley is understood to be the beneficiary named in all the policies.

The foreign newspapers, especially those of Great Britain, speak of Mr. Roosevelt in the highest terms. The language of the press is not that of adulation for a head of government, but appears to be an honest tribute of respect for the character and ability of the man.

The United States embassy in London learns that a memorial service in honor of the late President McKinley will be held in Westminster Abbey at 3 o'clock, Thursday afternoon, at which seats will be reserved for members of the government and the diplomatic corps. A memorial service will also be held at St. Paul's Cathedral, the lord mayor and the sheriffs of the city of London attending in state.

Commencing Monday, May 27, the Queen and Crescent Route Pan-American Special, leaving New Orleans 9:10 A. M., will make direct connection at Chattanooga with train on Southern Railway, arriving at Asheville at 5:50 A. M., Washington at 9:00 P. M., and New York at 6:30 A. M.

This gives the Queen and Crescent Route two trains daily to Asheville and all the Summer resorts of East Tennessee, Virginia and the Carolinas, as well as two trains daily to Washington, New York and all Eastern cities, and is in line with their constant efforts to give the traveling public the very best service possible. The new service is proving to be of great advantage to the people in the city of New Orleans.

NEW BUILDING.

DEAR BROTHER ROSWELL: Our prospects for next session are brighter than ever before. We have had so many more applications from students until we have found it necessary to erect another building, which is now in process of construction. It is to be a two-story building of about twenty rooms, with bath-rooms, hot and cold water on both floors; is fitted up with gas and sewer connections, and will be one of the prettiest buildings in town when completed. It will be connected by a covered bridge or passway over the street with the dining-room and main building, which will make it very convenient and pleasant in bad weather.

We have also purchased two buildings in the same square with the annex buildings. Have raised one of them and put brick basement, in which we have dining-room, kitchen, and pantry. We have fitted up the place with hot and cold baths, sewer and gas connections; have repapered, repainted, and put them in fine condition. In this place we will open our Industrial Home for the benefit of worthy girls who find it necessary to economize in getting an education. In this Industrial Home young ladies will live at actual cost, do their own work, or have it done as they see fit, and will get through on considerably less than they could in the regular boarding department. One of the professors will live in the Home, and his wife will act as matron and manager. This will help many a worthy girl to get a college education in a religious institution that heretofore was compelled to go to the State Industrial School, or to do without the training.

We have students engaged from fifteen or twenty States, having eight engaged from Pennsylvania, several from Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Indian Territory and New Mexico, besides from nearly all of the Southern States. Truly God is good to us. We ask all who are interested in the cause of Christian education for young women to pray for our work.

A Prominent Minister Writes.

After ten years of great suffering from indigestion, with great nervous prostration, biliousness, disordered kidneys and constipation, I have been cured of Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, and am now a well man. Rev. C. C. DAVIS, Ed. M. E. Church, South; No. 28 Tatnall St., Atlanta, Ga.

A Prominent Memphian Writes.

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised me to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced using Lemon Elixir.

R. L. ROCCO, 206 Hernando St., Memphis, Tenn.

A Card.

This is to certify that I used Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for neuralgia of the head and eyes with the most marked benefit to my general health. I would gladly have paid $500 for the relief it has given me at a cost of two or three dollars. H. A. BEALL, Clark Superior Court, Randolph Co., Ga.

REGULATING THE WEATHER.

Now and then attempts are made by man to take the place of nature and control the elements. A few years since it was thought that rain could be produced in the arid regions of the great West by bombarding the atmosphere with gunpowder. The experiments failed. Now it is proposed to regulate the weather altogether. One Professor Gates, of Maryland, has been investigating, and announces that the weather conditions depend on electricity. From this fact he concludes that if electricity in the atmosphere can be controlled, there will be no difficulty in regulating the weather—that is to say: Dry weather or wet weather, storms or sunshine, can be had at pleasure. He has experimented on a small scale, and "succeeded in making artificially, in miniature, many of the most impressive and majestic atmospheric phenomena." He produced mists and rain, thunderstorms and a tornado, and "an almost perfect waterspout." Of course, any man that understands the elements, and has sufficient apparatus at hand, can do these same things on a small scale. This professor performed these things in his laboratory, and "in miniature." But to regulate the weather, and adopt it to all sections, the man or the government must have a laboratory as big as the laboratory of nature. Professor Gates may have demonstrated his theory, and nature's methods may accord exactly with his theory, but it is not within the power of man to make big clouds or drive them away, nor to give us Summer or Winter as we may desire. We have no lack of faith as to the power of man to subdue the earth, and would not undertake to say that anything connected with the earth is impossible, but we are somewhat skeptical when it comes to going up into the atmosphere a half mile, or more, to operate positive and negative charges of electricity. The elements are beyond man's reach. Anybody can create a tempest in a tea-pot.

THE CROP REPORTS.

The prospect for living next year is by no means gloomy. The wheat crop is harvested, and is abundant and of good quality. The corn crop is about mature all over the corn region, and though short compared with other years, it will be sufficient. The trouble is, those who have failed to raise any will be compelled to buy at high figures. This will be hard on Southern farmers who depend too much on the Northwest. Throughout the cotton region reports indicate favorable conditions and a yield of large proportion—sufficiently large to bring as much money as last year, if prices hold up. The report of damage by storm a few weeks ago was greatly exaggerated. The same is true as to the rice crop of Louisiana. It is now certain that the damage was very slight, and the crop good. Rice ought to make up in a large measure the lack of corn. It is a healthy food, and properly cooked, it is palatable. The wonder is that it is so little used. It ought to be a staple article where now it is deemed a luxury, or fit only for sick people. The sugar crop of Louisiana is fast nearing maturity, and soon grinding will begin. The weather has been favorable, and the yield will, perhaps, be equal to any year in the past. There is hardly any prospect for the importation of sugar free of duty, not even from Cuba, though the duty may be reduced a fraction. The supposition, therefore, is that the price will not vary much one way or the other. Corn and hog products and beef will probably rule higher, but, on the whole, without some unforeseen disaster, living for another year will be about as easy as it is at present. We ought to be devoutly thankful for our blessings.

VITAL STATISTICS.

The vital statistics, as compiled by the Census Bureau for the year 1900, have but recently been given out. The chief of this particular division says: "The most important feature of the results presented is found in the decrease in the general death-rate per 1,000 population of nearly 10 per cent., and the decrease in the rates of the particular diseases to which the general decrease is due. The average age at death in 1890 was 31.1 years; in 1900 it was 35.2 years. The total number of deaths reported in 1900 was 1,039,094; in 1890 it was 841,119. The increase was, therefore, 197,675, or 23.5 per cent. As the percentage of increase in the population was but 20.7, this indicates a more complete return of deaths than in 1890. Portland, Ore., with a death rate of 9.5 per thousand, shows the lowest mortality, and Shreveport, La., with 45.5 per thousand, the highest. In the registration area the thirteen principal causes of death, with the rate per 100,000, were as follows: Pneumonia, 191.9; consumption, 190.5; heart diseases, 134.0; diarrhœal diseases, 85.1; kidney diseases, 83.7; apoplexy, 66.6; cancer, 60.0; old age, 54.0; bronchitis, 48.3; cholera infantum, 47.8; debility, 45.6; inflammation of brain and meningitis, 41.8; diphtheria, 34.4; typhoid, 33.8, and premature birth, 33.7. Death from all the principal diseases shows a decrease since 1890, the most notable being in consumption, which decreased 54.9 per 100,000."

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

BY R. A. MAGRUDER.

I hardly know what things to say on this subject that might be helpful, and yet not seem to some entirely useless. And yet, when I go into our churches and see our preachers habitually omitting the Lord's Prayer where it should be, failing to read the lessons as they should be read, standing in prayer, or in other ways changing our form of worship; choir exhibitions substituted for congregational singing, and probably less than five per cent. of the congregation kneeling during prayer; and again, when I go into a Sunday-school and find the superintendent a man without God and without hope, and find that he is frequently absent, and, when present, generally late; that one of the teachers is a Baptist, another a Presbyterian, another a Methodist who won't pray in public (of course, not in secret), another not a member of any church, and that the teacher of the infant class is a most lovely, magnetic young lady whom the little ones almost worship, a member of the church who attends every ball, theater, etc., dances and plays cards; when I see these things, as well as other evidences too numerous to even mention here, of ignorance or disloyalty, or both, I feel that there is nothing too plain or too simple to touch, hoping to help some one.

Whether the Sunday-school will or will not be a Sunday-school Missionary Society, is not a question for the individual Sunday-school to settle; nor, in fact, is it a question at all. Our church has settled that question once and for all. Paragraph 246 of Discipline reads, "Let every Sunday-school be organized into a missionary society, auxiliary to the Board of Missions." Hence I shall not attempt to give any other reasons why we should do this. It is not a question; it is settled. The only question is, Will we obey, or will we disobey?

Now, then, how shall we meet, recognize, and obey this requirement? I do not believe that it is necessary, or that it is wise to have a separate organization within the Sunday-school, with special officers, members, etc. I believe this hinders the intent of the church, which is, not that we have a missionary society within the Sunday-school, but that the Sunday-school be and is a missionary society.

I think a very good plan, and one which meets the requirements, is, that the Sunday-school, recognizing and obeying the will of the church, set aside one Sunday in each month as Missionary Sunday. Let the contribution that day go to missions. Have the prayers and songs missionary in tone and character, and then, after recitation of lessons, into which the teacher should throw all possible missionary thought, substitute missionary exercises for the usual application of the lesson by the superintendent, or make the application missionary, which can be done almost with any lesson, for the gospel of Jesus Christ is, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations. . . . And lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." And again, "Freely ye have received, freely give."

Now, our Missionary Board is trying to introduce into our Sunday-schools a uniform service for all our schools on Missionary Day. While I have had no experience with this plan, I feel that our Sunday-schools should as rapidly as possible adopt it. When our church appoints men—brainy men and consecrated men—to have supervision of certain parts of church and Sunday-school work, loyalty demands that we carry out their plans as far as possible, including the use, as a whole, of programmes for Children's Day, Rally Day, etc.

Then, too, what an inspiration comes to us out of the thought that all over the world teeming thousands of children and grown-up children are saying the same Sunday-school lessons and singing the same glad songs of praise to Him who loves us freely.

Have the children feel that this Sunday-school missionary contribution is their contribution to missions. This will encourage them, and train them, when children, to systematic and intelligent liberality.

Where it can be done, use the children in the missionary exercises. Let them feel that they are of some account, and that God can and does use them in that greatest of all works—salvation.

Do not let the services be dull, monotonous, and tiresome; and, above all, in trying to avoid this, do not go into worldliness and clap-trap methods to interest. Make the service such as the children can assimilate, instructive and stimulating, and it will surely interest them.

One more word: Do not forget "Rally Day." Send to Dr. W. R. Lambuth, Nashville, Tenn., for programmes. Study them; carry them out. Put this collection with your Sunday-school missionary contribution. Make it peculiarly a children's day; of the children, by the children, for the children.

CHRIST'S VALUATION OF MEN.

BY REV. H. W. RICKEY.

The argument for missions, home or foreign, is not a question of custom, tradition, ecclesiasticism, or geography, but a simple one of the estimate we place upon a human being. Is he really worth the effort of saving? Has man an intrinsic value in himself which makes him worthy of the effort of God and man to redeem? To illustrate: Gold is valuable in itself, whether it be found in Australia, California, Alaska, or Africa. We do not care where it came from, just so it is pure and stands the approved tests. Has man a value, in and of himself, independent of questions of geographical location?

There are three methods by which we determine the value of a given thing to us: The sacrifices we are ready to make to acquire it, the money we are willing to spend to get it, the appreciation we show in the possession of it. Then try the church by these methods in its mission work. In 1899 this country spent $8,000,000 for chewing gum, and raised less than $6,000,000 for foreign missions. Take what we spent last year for collars, cuffs, and neckties. The money value of these things far exceeded our financial interest in missions of any kind. As a church, are we really aware of having made any sacrifices? It takes 1,500,000 Methodists to raise $800,000 for foreign missions.

About one in ten Methodists are really engaged in saving men, directly and personally, and by some this is considered a high per cent. Our net increase for the year 1900 was for the entire year 5,712. It took 1,470,520 members and 11,378 preachers to bring in that net gain, with an army of 853,751 Sunday-school scholars to draw on, besides 120,236 Epworth Leaguers to help in a pinch.

Our appreciation of the work of soul-winning certainly, as a church, must needs be small in the face of a decided increase in financial liberality, and other helps to that end. Are we not losing out of sight Christ's conception of the value of a human being? Have not the majority of Methodists been so overcome by other things as to lose sight of the real end and aim of the gospel—the saving of men because they are men? Are we not infidels and skeptics at heart as to the salvability of men, and do not our actions conform to this attitude of indifference? The value of any kind of mission work rises in exact proportion as to the value we place upon any human being, wherever found, however found. We can not believe human beings, or any human being, is of such intrinsic, tremendous and eternal worth as to engage the energies of God, men and angels, or we would do, as a church, ten times more than we are doing.

We say we believe in hell. Christ taught there is a hell. To save men from hell ought to enlist as much strenuous effort as to save them from a burning building. Do we believe what we say we believe?

Here, then, if the New Testament be not a gigantic imposture, lies the two great motives of any kind of mission work, regardless of questions of geography. First, man is a being of such vast powers, possibilities and capabilities—fit to become the eternal friend and companion of the Most High God, and that irrespective of issues of caste, class, color or creed—that he is worth the supremest effort the church can make to save. Second, there is the certain, bad possibility of hell. To save a soul from such a death calls for the most intense effort man can put forth.

When these two motives come into their energizing play, will the church lack for men, methods, means, or money? We think not. How can a man help being a missionary under the dominance of such mighty ideas? He will become one in spite of all obstacles and difficulties.

The truth of the matter is, that our disease is infidelity. These things have become unreal and visionary to the vast majority of church-goers.

ANOTHER REASON.

BY REV. W. B. LEWIS.

Bro. Ellis, in your issue of Sept. 5, gives us a strong article on the order of public worship prescribed in our Discipline, in which he states one reason for occasional non-conformity to this order on the part of our preachers and people. He refers to the example of our "Bishops, General Secretaries, and other doctored divines," at "the Epworth League Conference at Atlanta, Ga., and at the General Missionary Conference at New Orleans, La." He says, "At both these great Methodist assemblies the congregation and leader always stood up for prayer," etc. He adds, "Defects and deformities that accompany greatness are sure to be idealized by the careless observer."

Permit me to suggest another reason that so many of our people do not kneel in prayer in our churches. Our pews are generally too close together. In many of our churches it is practically impossible for people to kneel between the pews. We will never get all our people to kneel in prayer in our churches until we make it convenient for them to do so.

At the General Missionary Conference in New Orleans there was an additional difficulty in the great crowd. Not only were the seats close together, but the hall was jammed on almost every occasion. Under the circumstances it is a question whether it was not better for all to stand in prayer. Standing is a scriptural attitude in prayer as well as kneeling. I do not consider our rules respecting the order of public worship as being so unyielding that we may never, under any circumstances, vary from them. Our order of worship is simple and beautiful, and, as a rule, I never depart from it, but I do not feel that it would be a crime to do so if it seemed necessary.

In New Orleans I was so impressed with the manifestations of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit during the Missionary Conference that I had never thought of the attitude in prayer observed until I read Bro. Ellis' article. Indeed, now I can not recall the mere forms observed sufficiently to have any distinct impression in my mind as to our attitude in prayer. But I have great confidence in the wisdom, piety, and church loyalty of our "Bishops, General Secretaries, and other doctored divines," who had immediate charge of the occasion, and do not question for one moment but that they did what was best to have been done under the circumstances.

"Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." And whether in this mountain, or in that, or in neither, the main thing for us to look after in worship is the spirit, and not the form. "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in Spirit and in truth." It is well to have due regard to forms, but, then, we must not forget that "the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life."

HIS WITNESSES.

BY REV. H. M. ELLIS.

Christ has gathered his disciples on Olivet to say good-bye. The moment of his departure has arrived, and there is no time to be lost. What remains to be said must be said quickly. Is there one command pre-eminent for importance, one trust more sacred than those already spoken, that he would have them bear in mind and lay to heart particularly? Is there one duty toward which his instruction has been leading them, and for which his association has been lifting them? Is there one service that they can render him that is at once the climax and sum of obligation and privilege? Surely, if the disciples knew the imminence of his departure, and felt for him the grateful devotion they should have felt, they would have pressed close to his side as they cried in tones intense with yearning, "What is it, Master, what is it?—the last wish you would utter, the greatest service we can render?" But Jesus knew. Yes, he knew more—that the whole success of his mission and death depended on adequate demonstration of the justice of his claims as Savior and Lord of human hearts and destinies. So he hastens to declare his last command, "Ye shall be my witnesses."

Yet there is here not so much the tone of command as there is that of confidence and trust. He knows that they who have witnessed the matchless manifestation of his boundless love, who have accepted this sacrifice for their sins, and felt the thrill of the heavenly joy and power that flow from the new life which is his gift, need no commands. The wish made known, the privilege of service pointed out, are all that is necessary for hearts that are a-quiver with longing to adequately express their grateful devotion. And yet it is no less a command because a privilege.

"Ye shall be my witnesses—unto the uttermost part of the earth." And even as it is spoken, that no other utterance might shade the emphasis that he would lay on this supreme duty and trust, "He was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight." Thus the infinite wisdom puts the definite and divine period to the words of the blessed Christ where each time his loyal followers glance skyward they may thrill with the recollections of his final expectations in them; so that each cloud that casts its shadow over earth may be a reminder of human depravity and need, and be a call to duty.

His witnesses! Oh, may we press his case in every court till before the bar of every intelligence shall stand in redeemed lives absolute demonstrations of the merit of his blood and the power of his grace! The Christ-appointed logic of Christianity is Christian life.

INDIAN MISSION.

MR. EDITOR: I see in the ADVOCATE, of Sept. 12, that many of the brethren held missionary rallies, and had a nice time, and raised right smart money. But I have not heard of a dollar raised for the Indian in our midst—the Mississippi Indians; and some of them had their collections up in full, and so took no collection at all. Would it not have been nice if they had thought to take a collection for the poor heathen in our midst? I would have appreciated it so much, and I expect the good Lord would have approved the rally and made it a great blessing.

Brethren, it is not too late; never too late to do good. Now, let us do something for our neighbors at our door. Let us do something worthy of the cause for which we plead. We need money for church-houses and land, and also for school-houses where they may be taught.

Please, brethren and sisters, send your contributions as before to me by registered letter or postoffice money order to and on Lorman postoffice, Jefferson county, Miss. Send at your earliest convenience, and greatly oblige me and please your Lord. How can we withhold our Lord's money from his poor? Let it come.

Yours for the missionary work,

A. D. MILLER.

What Our Editors Say.

METHODIST DOCTRINES.

Only God can tell the secret of the success of Methodism. It is He that raised up the Wesleys and Fletcher and Whitefield and their helpers; it is he that guided their lives and labors; it is he that gave them the ears and hearts of their hearers. John Wesley spoke truth when he said of the movement, "Behold what God hath wrought." But men can know something of the power that has "turned the world upside down"—and it needs not extraordinary insight for them to understand a part of the forces that astonished Christianity. Plain people can easily infer that one great cause of Methodist progress was Methodist doctrines. The cardinal and peculiar doctrines of Methodism were not only God's truth, but the very truth men longed to hear. It was not strange that sinners flocked to listen when the preacher declared that "Grace was free for all and free in all"—in a word, that there was redemption for all, that every sinner was elected to salvation if he would repent and turn to God. The marvel is that they could and did so long stagger under the teaching that some particular individuals were elected to life, without foresight of faith or any other condition, and that some individuals were passed by and left to reprobation without any condition therefor. When the note of preaching changed to an invitation to all and any, with promise of divine help to all and any who endeavored to obey, it was the music of hope, and the lost flocked like doves to the windows.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE LYNCHINGS GO ON.

But what can be done? It is safest for society and better in the long run that criminals be tried and executed as the law provides. The maintenance of regard for law and a proper reverence for civil authority is of vital importance to us, and this we can not have if mobs take the criminals into their hands and, regardless of law, execute them. We must by all means create a public sentiment that makes law supreme in the domain of law. We must have a public sentiment that defends and fosters a sound and true government. The press has its part to do in this work of calling our people back to see the wisdom of obedience to law and authority. And this the press is in many instances doing, we are glad to know. No sectionalism can be tolerated here. All sections of our common country are concerned, and vitally in this enthronement of respect for law in the minds of the people. The secular and the religious journals can unite in an effort for this accomplishment.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

ENGLAND'S ZERO OF SHAME.

The zero of English civilization to-day is the presence of woman on both sides of the counters of her drunkard factories or murder mills. One of the most distressing shadows we have ever seen in London, was that of a mother with a babe in arms, falling upon the inside of a frosted window of a drinking saloon! The people here may not get so uproariously drunk as they do in America, but we dare say there are possibly a quarter of a million in London who have not been thoroughly and entirely sober during ten consecutive days in ten years. We are more than ever persuaded that the work of checking and finally abolishing the ravages of the liquor and opium traffic must be led by America. And the work in America must be successfully launched on the rising tide of our young people's intelligence and enthusiasm. Our New Century Knights, we trust, will perform no insignificant part in this herculean task.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

READING FOR CHILDREN.

More than once in these columns have we called the attention of parents to the importance of exercising the utmost vigilance as to the character of the reading that may be introduced into their homes, or may chance to fall into the hands of their children. There is so much corrupting and dangerous literature afloat, that too much caution can not be used in this regard. Many parents either seem indifferent to the danger or ignorant of it. The danger is not confined to the yellow-backed dime novel. Many fashionable works of fiction, reputed to be of a higher order, contain moral poison in its most insidious and pernicious forms. Encourage reading among your children, but see that it is of a pure, healthful, elevating character.—Baltimore and Richmond Advocate.

THE GIDEONS.

The "Gideons," says the Presbyterian Record, is the name of the organization of traveling men, 1,600 in number, who neither play cards, drink nor smoke. The number of commercial travelers who are gentlemen is largely increasing. That is well, but we should like to know if the "Gideons" go a-fishing on Sunday. It is the habit of some traveling men to plan their trips with the view of meeting at good fishing places on Sunday, that they may spend the day fishing. We know one merchant, at least, who refuses to purchase goods through such traveling agents. It is a good example for others to follow.—Arkansas Methodist.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

'BAPTIZO" IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

In the New Testament the word "baptizo," or baptize, is not only used in the sense of ceremonial cleansing by water (which cleansing was invariably by the application of the element), but it is used synonymously with Greek words which mean sprinkle.

How the assertions, then, of Baptists and Campbellites that the word means immersion, and immersion only, together with their old hackneyed and clap-trap phrases, "liquid grave," "following Christ into the water," etc., appear in the light of such facts, is left to the judgment of the reader.

Mark vii, 2-4: "And when they (scribes and Pharisees) saw some of his disciples eat bread with defiled—that is to say, with unwashen (unpicto)—hands, they found fault." (3) "For the Pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash (nipsontai) their hands oft (or 'with the fist,' as is translated on the margin and in every other place in the Bible), eat not, holding the tradition of the elders." (4) "And when they come from the market, except they wash (baptisontai), they eat not. And many other things there be, which they have received to hold, as the washing (baptismons) of cups, pots, brazen vessels, and tables."

"Nipto," in the second and third verses, is translated wash, the same as "baptizo" in the fourth verse.

Dr. Ditzler says: "Nipto, wash, . . . always implies affusion. Its noun occurs in the Bible thirty-seven times, always implying affusion."

Dr. Summers says: "Most likely an allusion to the ancient custom of washing hands and feet by the assistance of a servant who poured out the water on the part to be cleansed; hence II. Kings iii, 11, 'Here is Elisha, the son of Shaphat, which poured water on the hands of Elijah.' This must have been the common mode of ablution, or the office of an attendant would not have been so described. Indeed, it is common at this day among the orientals who do not change their custom as we change ours."

D. Fairfield, in his "Letters on Baptism," explains the clause, "with the fist." "Many times there is no servant in attendance to pour or sprinkle the water . . . after contact with something or somebody unclean. He must himself, therefore, perform the whole ceremony. How does he do it? He lays hold upon the pitcher with one hand and pours the water upon the other; and in turn takes the pitcher in the other and pours the water upon the first. So they are both cleansed in 'running water.'"

In the fourth verse "baptizo" not only means wash or cleanse, but parallel verses show that all the ceremonial cleansing of the Jews were by sprinkling. In Lev. xiv and in Num. xix we read that "running water" was not only to be "sprinkled" upon the house, tent, persons, etc., but upon "all the vessels."

It is perfectly absurd to suppose that the Jews immersed themselves before each meal and on returning from the market—from three times to a number indefinitely each day—or that they immersed the beds on which they reclined or slept. They were not only without the facilities for doing so, but such a custom would have proved fatally unphysiological.

Moreover, "so well was it known that the baptisms of Mark vii, 4, were all by sprinkling that the learned Greeks who duplicated manuscripts translated 'baptisontai' in that place 'rantisontai,' 'sprinkle themselves.' The two oldest copies of the New Testament known (Codex Vaticanus and Codex Sinaiticus) thus translate it. Seven others do so." (Ditzler.)

But John iii, 6, settles the question, "And there were set there six water pots of stone, after the manner of purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece."

From these pots the Jews drew out water to sprinkle themselves. They had more water on that occasion than usual on account of the large number of guests at the "marriage." As a firkin contains only a few gallons, it would have been impossible to perform the idolized immersion. Moreover, information is not wanting as to the quantity of water the Jews used in their ablutions in general.

Dr. Ditzler, quoting from Lightfoot, says: "They allot one-fourth of a log for the washing of one person's hands." "A log is five-sixths of a pint; one person washed, then, with nearly one-fifth of a pint."

These truths make it doubly clear that the Pharisee (Luke xi, 37, 38) who besought our Lord to dine with him, and who "marveled that he had not first washed (baptized) before dinner," did not expect him to immerse himself. In fact, that Pharisee never in all of his life heard of such a thing as immersion, and after the modern Baptist fashion.

The statement is not only made in John iii, 25, 26, that the Jews regarded baptism as a purification, but Paul, in Heb. ix, 10-13, where he is discoursing on the ceremonial dispensation, calls the "divers washings" baptisms. He uses the word "baptismois," and in referring to the "blood of bulls and goats and the ashes of an heifer, sprinkling the unclean." It is thus seen that Paul also uses "baptize" and "sprinkle" interchangeably, and in the sense of purification, as well as St. Mark, the Jews and early Greeks.

'GILDEROY" ENDORSED.

BY REV. P. H. FONTAINE.

"Gilderoy" always writes something worth reading, and I read everything that I see from him. His article on singing was pertinent, and stirs me to write more on the same subject.

Our country is the land of the free and the home of the brave, and is overrun with free-lance preachers and singers who usually represent some independent, "non-sectarian" Publishing House, and by exhortation and the singing of some new song set to some catchy air, scatter their song books far and wide into the homes of the people called Methodists. Our people are progressive, and as the rise of "non-sectarian" Young People's Christian Societies necessitated our Epworth League, so the Epworth League and the multiplication of "non-sectarian" hymn (?) books has given us "The Young People's Hymnal" and "The Young People's Hymnal No. 2." These, though good as far as they go, yet may be, as the "non-sectarian" song books have been, the means of placing our pastors and people in the embarrassing position at worship referred to in "Gilderoy's" article.

We have three services which are too distinct, viz: the Sunday public worship, the Sunday-school, and the Epworth League devotional service. In the two latter there is almost invariably used some other book than our Standard Hymnal. Out of these books the children are taught to sing. The majority of the children attend the Sunday-school service only, and when that is over, go home; therefore, they do not learn any of our standard hymns. Multitudes leave the Sunday-schools without joining the church or Epworth League. Some of them, as they grow up, are gathered into the Epworth League, and when placed as leaders of meetings, naturally choose those songs with which they are most familiar.

The majority of our members never attend the Sunday-school, deeming it the kindergarten of the church, when in reality, it is, as Dr. La Prada defines, "The church studying the Word of God." Neither do they concern themselves about attending the Epworth League meetings; consequently, they do not learn the new songs. There are even pastors who take scarcely any interest in the Sunday-school and Epworth League meetings, and yet they are the overseers of the flock.

A judicious use of our hymns, and a careful oversight of our different services, arousing the interest of all our people, is what is needed.

Conference Officers of Mississippi Conference
Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, of Louisiana Conference

To the Officers and Members of the W. H. M. Society, Louisiana Conference.

DEAR SISTERS: We have entered upon the third quarter of our fiscal year; so we must take our bearings and prepare for the next portion of the race. Each quarter should be an improvement on the last, as we gain experience and knowledge of the work. During the past quarter we have both gained and lost. Two of our district secretaries, Mrs. T. S. Randle and Mrs. M. E. Carr, assisted by Rev. W. G. Evans, of Grand Cane, have organized eight new auxiliaries. One of the old has disbanded, and some are silent. But we have gained more than we have lost.

"Every individual is intended of God to be a minister of good to the world," and never before in the history of the world have so many doors been open to the ministry of God's children. May God give us a new sense of the value of human souls, and the faith to expect great things from him!

The Week of Prayer and Self-Denial, beginning Oct. 7, is near at hand. Let us, by God's help, make it a season of deep spiritual blessing to our souls. Let us put into it self-denial and service, and, above all, importunate prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon our work and workers, for without this we can do nothing. Let us remember what Jesus is able to do—"exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." His word never returns void. "He giveth power to the faint and to them that have no might. He increaseth strength."

Mrs. MacDonell, our General Secretary, says: "What a season for power we may make this, if we but use it aright! We need silver and gold; we need women anointed for service. We want the hearts of our law-makers, that they may make good laws that will uphold our work and help the effort we make for God's glory and men's good. Pray for these."

Programmes for Week of Prayer have been sent to the auxiliaries, and we trust that none will let this opportunity for good pass by without availing themselves of all its blessed privileges.

At the last meeting of the Board in St. Louis it was decided to urge the collection of one dollar per member over and above the dues and contingent funds, owing to the fact that the half of our dues is not sufficient to carry on the connectional work. Let each one of us respond to this appeal as the heart and conscience, enlightened by the Holy Spirit, may dictate. We must not forget that the hope of the Home Mission Society lies in an increased membership and the regular payment of dues.

Three new enterprises have been taken up by the society. One, to place in the Scarritt Bible and Training-school a special teacher of home mission work. The call for trained workers at home is constantly growing, and must continue to grow, owing to the influx of foreign immigration and the rapidly increasing population of our cities. Another work is among the miners of the Bluefield district in West Virginia. There are 40,000 of these people, many of whom are foreigners and many in the depths of ignorance. Miss Louise Whitman, of Pulaski City, Va., has been appointed to this work, and in October will go to her post of duty. Let us follow her with our prayers. The third enterprise is work among the negro women of the South. Mrs. Hammond says: "It is the same kind of work done by our mothers which made the old colored 'mammies' what they were, and the lack of which makes this younger generation what we find them." Five thousand dollars has been appropriated by the Board to build a hall at Paine Institute, Augusta, Ga., for the industrial training of colored women and girls. Teaching them to become good seamstresses and cooks, under Christian influence, may help, in some degree, to solve a few of the social problems confronting us.

In order to bring this great work before the people, we must urge the circulation of our literature. We must increase the subscription list of Our Homes, and seek to establish the Reading Course in every auxiliary. This new Reading Course, beginning with "Harmony of the Gospels," should be used to fit us for the Master's work. We should be "workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Now, dear sisters, I pray that God will place upon each one of us a realization of the needs around us; that he will give to each one a deep sense of personal responsibility, and help us to "press forward toward the mark for the prize of our high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

MEMORIAL.

Mrs. Elizabeth Covington Magruder was born near old Washington, Adams county, Miss., July 20, 1810, and departed to her home in heaven on July 30, 1900. A long, beautiful, useful, eventful life was hers. She was a member of one of those families more or less connected by blood and marriage, mentioned by Claiborne (Vol. I., page 259), who says: "The immigration from Maryland, chiefly from Calvert, Prince George and Montgomery counties, consisted, for the most part, of educated and wealthy planters—the Covingtons, Graysons, Chews, Calvits, Wilkinsons, Freelands, Wailes, Bowies, and Magruders, who for a long time gave tone to the territorial capital." They took large part also in giving form and order to the industries, the institutions and the laws of the Territory which was soon to develop into a great commonwealth. Amidst the scenes and activities of those formative years in the growth of the State, Mrs. Magruder grew up and took her part. The wide circle of her family connections, and the cultivation and intelligence centered at the capital, gave her social and educational opportunities which she was not slow to embrace.

Her father was Levin Wailes and her mother Eleanor Davis, natives of Maryland, reared and married there. Mr. Wailes was a county officer and surveyor of public lands. Soon after his marriage, in pursuance of this latter office, he moved to Georgia, where he continued for several years in Columbia, Elbert, and Richmond counties. There most of his children were born. The eldest was Prof. B. L. C. Wailes, son-in law to Gen. Leonard Covington, and State geologist of Mississippi, whose official report is still authority on that subject. Another son was the venerable and saintly Edwin Howard Wailes, so long one of the chief citizens of Woodville, Miss. A third son was the youngest child, born in Opelousas parish, La., Mr. Hoy Wailes, an excellent man of high character, who, from his manhood, lived a citizen of Louisiana. An elder daughter was married to Mr. James Rose, for many years flour inspector of New Orleans. Another daughter became the wife of the Rev. Wm. M. Curtis, a leading member of the Mississippi Conference, and whose effective labors were given for a time to planting Methodism in the city of New Orleans. In the early part of 1810 Mr. Wailes moved with his family to the Territory of Mississippi, and settled near the capital, where the subject of this notice was born. After some time spent in surveyor's work in Louisiana, he returned to Mississippi and settled permanently in Washington, and filled the office of surveyor-general. Here his children were educated in the best schools at hand.

In the decade of the twenties Elizabeth Female Academy was founded—a pioneer school for the education of young women—and brought to a high grade of efficiency under the successive superintendence of the Rev. Dr. B. M. Drake and other leaders of Methodism in that section. In this school Mrs. Magruder received the scholastic training which so aided the home life in fitting her for the high place she was to fill in social and domestic affairs. Her beautiful womanhood opened its rare grace and virtues on a time which called for sterling character and wise industry in adjusting the energies of our people to the truest and best forms of life. Her sympathies and co-operation were always given to these ends. Great questions of domestic and civil polity were passing to their natural solution, and every genuine home shared the cares and responsibilities of current issues.

It was about 1830 when Major John Hawkins Magruder, of the Maryland family, who had married Eliza Wailes, settled the large Hazlewood estate, seven miles east of Canton. The noble hospitality and refined Christian culture of this home made it the charm and pleasure of the many who sought its ennobling society. It was a typical Southern home. Seven children were born to Major and Mrs. Magruder, when this lovely Christian woman was taken from the family. In due time the subject of this notice came to fill the place of the departed sister, and so well did she fill the part of mother to these seven that the youngest of them was thirteen years old before she learned the difference. From the day when she became mistress in this family to the end—more than sixty years—her life was identified with everything that made the noble life of Hazlewood. Into its interests and affairs she threw the full force of her ardent, unstinted devotion as wife, mother, and mistress. Fourteen children grew up around her to call her blessed and to lay the crown of honor on her head, in whose hearts the virtues of her beautiful character were instilled. These children were trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. She took full part with her husband in giving every possible care to the domestic integrity and religious instruction of their slaves. No slave was ever sold away from his family in that home, and the children of these slaves were baptized at the same time and place with those of the white family. The entire discipline of the household was arranged with loyal adherence to the Methodist Church, to which they belonged, whose doctrines and polity they embraced, and whose institutions they warmly supported.

Early in life Mrs. Magruder gave her heart to God, and took her place in his church. From the beginning she was a model of consistency, an example of faith, of patience, of humility, of unselfish concern for others. She was strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, though beautiful in the simplicity and modesty of her professions. Her care was constantly and regularly bestowed on the ministers and affairs of the church. Her pastor was the Lord's man to her, and the cause of Christ was her cause. Her communion with God afforded her the joy of his salvation. This was the power that sustained her through a long life of devotion to duty, that comforted her in the trials and experiences of forty years of widowhood, and that gave her strength and victory in the fierce conflicts and sad losses of civil war. The grace and cheerfulness of her dignified bearing, and her gentle, loving sympathies, made her the charming friend of the many who so often found social retreat and refreshment in this hospitable country seat. Her wide reading and deep interest in current affairs made her an engaging companion to young people, over whom she had a strong Christian influence. Those who knew her best, especially in the sacred intimacies of home life, loved and revered her for her exalted virtues and pure character.

To the end of life she was the cheerful, charming correspondent of her children and grandchildren. They will still remember how full these letters were of delightful information, of deep interest and affection, and how charming in form and style; how treasured as notes from grandma. The last of these notes of greeting and blessing were sent out from her own graceful hand to some of these grandchildren on the ninetieth anniversary of her birth—so well were her powers preserved to the end.

Who can estimate the value, the effect, the glory of such a life as this? Every other victory grows pale and hidden before the splendor of this triumph. "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die." She kept alive her family altar, conducting the devotion herself when there was no other to do so. Secret prayer was the place of her constant communion with God. The Word of God was her daily study, his will was her law, his house her glad delight; the "house not made with hands" is her eternal home. Many blessed things she said in those last hours of suffering, when she was patiently and consciously passing from the mortal to the immortal life. They are the treasure of those who sat by and heard them; but her life is the God-given treasure to all who knew her—an example which her neighbors and the large circle of her family connections may follow as she followed Christ.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss.

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

How to Build Up the School.

There are but few people of genius in Sunday-school work, or in any other calling, for that matter. The common people are in evidence everywhere, and the greater part of the work in God's economy is done by humble toilers, unnoticed and unknown now, but who will shine as the stars at the last great day. To these humble superintendents and workers we commend the following from Dr. Trumbull's Yale Lectures:

"The second instance which I cite is that of a Sunday-school in a purely country township, a township without a village in it. The superintendent in this school had no mission experience; nor had he any special fitness for his place, save a quiet, earnest persistency of purpose. He was lacking in personal magnetism, and was slow and heavy in his manners. His Sunday-school was a small one, having, say, forty or fifty scholars, when he was chosen as its superintendent. He wanted the school membership increased; but he knew of no other way of bringing this about, except by going for one person at a time, and sticking at him until he had him in as a scholar. He fastened his eye, for example, on 'Squire Brown, who ought to be in Sunday-school on his own account, and as a means of bringing others in. He invited 'Squire Brown, accordingly, to join one of the Bible classes. Then he asked 'Squire Brown's wife to urge her husband to accept his invitation. If this was not sufficient, he had 'Squire Brown's children ask their father to come to their Sunday-school. Then, perhaps, he induced other members of the Bible class to join in the same request; and he went to the pastor to have him say a word in that direction to 'Squire Brown. This work was followed up untiringly, as though the superintendent was really living only to the end of seeing 'Squire Brown in the Sunday-school. When 'Squire Brown finally came in, as he was pretty sure to do, there was at once another outsider—from the congregation or in the field beyond it—on whom the superintendent's eye was fixed; and the same process was repeated with him.

"This was slow work, but it was sure work, and it was a work which any determined man can do. As the superintendent grew gray in the service, the membership of his Sunday-school was enlarged. At last he had one hundred and fifty persons in the school—a number equal to fully nine-tenths of the entire congregation; and the Sunday-school was called the 'Banner Sunday-school' of the county. It had evangelized a large portion of the country population of its township, while it had quickened the life of the church of which it was a part; and it had illustrated a work which ought to be going on in every country township of America."

TRAINING COURSE.

We beg teachers who read this to consider the questions submitted last week.

1. How do you prepare the lessons?

2. How do you secure attention in your class?

Your replies need not be lengthy. We would prefer fifty ten-line experiences to one of 500 lines. And we will appreciate it so much if the teachers from all over our two States will take part in this symposium, and give others the benefit of their experience. The apostle says, "He gave some . . . teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, . . . for the edifying of the body of Christ." A teacher, then, is called of God, and should make preparation for his work in assisting the ministry to edify the body of Christ. This preparation can come only from a study of the Bible, carefully, systematically and devotionally; from prayer earnest and importunate, and from experience, from observation, and from an exchange of views. Let us try to sharpen one another's wits by telling what we know of the subject.

The Sunday-school Board recommends the observance of a missionary programme on Missionary Day of each month. This will give life, spirit and zest to the occasion, and will create greater interest in missions than can be done by simply taking up a collection. The collection for missions should be taken up by all means in every school, but let something be done to teach the children how the money is to be used. The programme need not be elaborate, but have something about our missionary work. Teach the children that the main business of the church is to extend the kingdom of Jesus Christ, and that our Lord expects them to do their part in this work. There are many schools whose members think they are too poor or too weak to observe Missionary Day, or even to take up a collection for missions. Such a course will only tend to their own leanness. No school is too poor to have the mind of Christ; and where there is the mind of Christ, there will be a desire to extend his kingdom; and where there is such a desire, there will be ways and means to express it.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

NORTH KEMPER.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: North Kemper circuit has had a gracious revival. Rev. R. A. Breland, of Wesson, did the preaching. We were also assisted in three meetings by Miss Lena Garrett, of the E. M. F. College, who did excellent work in teaching, song, and altar work. It was a glorious surprise to this historic old county. Many people followed the services from church to church. Not a service but was attended with saving power. Old church members were dug up, and cleaned up from tobacco, snuff and whiskey, and were soundly saved. Doubtless, 60 or 75 people were either converted, reclaimed, or sanctified. There were 2 received by profession of faith. Every interest of the church has been strengthened. The doctrines of the Bible and Methodism have been faithfully inculcated without inveighing against the government of the church. These people are loyal, and if properly pastored, will remain so. Prayer meetings and reading circles have been appointed over the circuit. Our people have been starving to death, spiritually, because they will not read or pray.

Brethren, call Breland to help you. Like the primitive Methodist preacher, he takes the Bible in one hand and the Standards in the other, and preaches nothing he can not clearly prove by both. This is the only solution of the problem of Methodism under heaven. Right here I forever rest the case.

Moses, Miss., Sept. 11, 1901.

FROM COLUMBIA CHARGE.

We have just closed a very fine revival at Hopewell. The whole neighborhood seemed to come together and work for the success of the meeting. God graciously blessed every service. We had Bro. D. Scarborough, of East Hattiesburg, to assist us. He was converted in that church and licensed to preach here. He has many relatives there. His parents had the privilege of hearing every sermon. Every one has confidence in his preaching; therefore, his preaching had great power with the people. The church was greatly blessed, and seventeen were added to the church on profession of faith. Bro. Scarborough is fine help in revival work.

Bro. W. W. Simmons, our presiding elder, who was once pastor of Hopewell Church, and whom every one there loves, preached for us Wednesday and held our third Quarterly Conference. I fear our church is not keeping pace with our temporal prosperity. This wave of prosperity is carrying so many of our people away from God and the church. We have many good, loyal people who are helping us, for which we are thankful.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

SIMSBORO CHARGE.

The Simsboro charge is improving. Every interest is being looked after, and is in good shape. We have held some good meetings; quite a number of conversions and fifteen accessions to date, and one or two protracted meetings yet to hold. Ministerial support is in arrears—more so than should be. We expect to pay our missionary assessment in full. We have pulled down the old barn of a church at Antioch, and have built a nice new church in its place; have ceiled one, and there is some talk of ceiling another, especially by the pastor. There is much yet to be done on the work. It will take persistent, determined work, seasoned with patience and forbearance, to get the membership to consecrate themselves to God's service as they should. We have many true and devoted Christians in the bounds of the work, notwithstanding the seeming apathy of some others. I have done most all the preaching myself; had help in one meeting; was alone in the others so far as ministerial help was concerned. Preached thirty-five times and conducted other services in twenty days. Held two old-time class meetings, which was something new under the sun to many. People, forty five and fifty years old, were never in one before. They were profitable to all present. Our church will do well to return to this old path in God's service. My health has been perfect; have had some little sickness in my family; nothing serious.

Fraternally,

THOS. J. MARTIN.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DURANT STATION.

DEAR DR: We are getting along very well with the work generally. Our protracted meeting closed about a week ago, with fine results. Bro. Theo. Copeland, of St. Paul's Church, Birmingham, Ala., was with us, preaching and working to the delight of all. Some of the results of our meeting were: Christians revived, backsliders reclaimed, sinners converted, prayer meetings and Sunday-schools better attended, and quite a number of new family altars, and as all Christians took part in the meeting, all denominations are blessed in the spiritual quickening.

Bro. Copeland is fine help, intelligent refined and chaste in all his speech and work, and clear and forcible in his appeal to the church and the world, and, being a pastor, he leaves the church more in touch and sympathy with the general interests of the church than some special revivalist. Bro. Copeland carries with him the well wishes and prayers of our people for his success through life.

Well, we are looking toward Conference, when we will (D. V.) answer to roll call, and give an account of our work for the year—always a reminder of the roll call and final accounts at the last day. May it be with joy, and not with sorrow.

God bless you and our paper.

Fraternally, J. H. SMITH.

"LUCKY"

Is often the name given by careless and thoughtless people to those who are careful and thoughtful. "What a lucky woman," is said of one whose health and beauty proclaim her free from womanly diseases. The luck often consists in her having thoughtfully considered the merits of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and proved its ability to cure the diseases peculiar to her sex.

"Favorite Prescription" is a reliable medicine for the cure of womanly diseases. It establishes regularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness.

"I had poor health for nine years," writes Mrs. Arminitie Watkins, of Amie, Kanawha Co., W. Va. "Had female weakness, was very irregular and would suffer untold misery. Our family doctor did not do me any good and I concluded to write to you. When I wrote I had no idea that I would ever get well, but when your letter reached me I began to have hope. I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's medicines as directed and began to improve in strength. I was soon able to do the work for my family of six. I took eight bottles, three of 'Favorite Prescription' and five of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and two vials of 'Pellets.'"

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. W. T. J. SULLIVAN, D. D.
REV. J. T. MURRAH.
REV. H. C. MOREHEAD.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1901.

The holiest man in the community is the man who lives nearest to his Lord, and comes nearest in imitation of his character.

Finding truth is like finding pearls of great price—every one found not only adds to the treasure-store, but to the happiness of the finder.

If you have wronged your neighbor, the surest way to gain him and ease your conscience is to confess the wrong and ask forgiveness.

The pulpit is the preacher's throne of power; not a cover behind which to shelter a coward while he shoots hard and abusive things at his congregation.

The living truths of the Bible, like a fountain throwing its spray in the sunlight, never fail to present new beauties to the eyes of those who love God.

Hearts hardened and made stubborn by constant resistance to the truth can be softened and subdued only by appeals from a good heart, carried home by the Holy Spirit.

A man who is more concerned about preserving a good reputation than about keeping a good character need not be surprised if some day his character spoils his reputation.

Fidelity to Christ, both of the church as a whole and individual members in particular, demands that they be one with him in purpose and effort to give the gospel to all the world.

A professed Christian who declines to join his brethren in sending the gospel to heathen lands is lacking either in the spirit of liberality, else he does not understand his true relation to God and his fellow-men.

The preacher who publicly exploits his doubts about any point of Christian doctrine may be applauded as a man of independent thought, but he is sowing seeds in the minds of the young and immature that in due time will turn out a harvest of free-thinkers and outright infidels.

Assurance of the universal spread of the gospel was given by our Lord when he said to his disciples, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

THE ECUMENICAL CONFERENCE.

The Ecumenical Conference of Methodism convened in London, City Road Chapel, on Sept. 1. This Conference is made up of representatives of all orders of Methodists from all parts of the world. The number of delegates appointed was in proportion to the membership of the respective churches, thus giving the Methodist Episcopal Church the largest representation. Southern Methodists come next, then the Wesleyans, if we mistake not, and so on down to the smallest.

Bishop Galloway, of our church, preached the opening sermon, which was followed by the administration of the Holy Sacrament. Dr. W. T. Davidson, president of the English Wesleyan Conference, presided at the opening session. Addresses of welcome were delivered, to which responses were made, all in the heartiest style. Letters of greeting were read from two of the chief dignitaries of the Anglican Church, in one of which expression was given to the wish that the Methodists might some day unite with the English Church. What answer the Conference finally gave, if any, to that expression, we do not know.

The Conference had not more than fairly opened when the "Brother in Black" asserted himself, and at once became the hero of the occasion in the eyes of the English. One Bishop Walters, of New Jersey, informed the English brethren that the whites in the South were trying to discount the negro, in the estimation of the English, by making it appear that the negro is without character and unworthy of confidence. He fully enlightened and edified them on the subject of lynching, and the English applauded. It is said that during his tirade some of the Southern delegates left the room. The English-Boer war was also up for discussion, and the government severely criticised by English speakers. Speeches pro and con were delivered until, on appeal to the chair, the discussion was ruled out of order. It was at this point that Dr. Hoss said it would be "a piece of impertinence for the Conference to dictate to the English Government."

Since the occurrence of this last episode the daily papers—at least our Southern papers—have given us very little information of the doings of the Conference. The programme, as published, is being followed, and we dare say the Conference is of great interest. We trust it will be of much benefit to Methodism at large. The Conference is advisory only; nevertheless, it may give utterance to views worthy of being adopted and crystallized into law by one, or more, of the bodies of Methodism. Of this we may have more to say hereafter.

WHOLE MULTIPLICATION TABLE.

Mr. John Wanamaker, a practical man, who for many years has been the zealous superintendent of one of the largest Sunday-schools in America, is quoted as saying: "When you save a man or a woman, you save a unit; but when you save a boy or girl, you save a whole multiplication table." That simply means, we suppose, that when a man or a woman is saved, as a rule, the work ends right there; but when a boy or girl is saved, the work multiplies indefinitely. We do not know that Mr. Wanamaker is correct—that is, if he assumes that the salvation of a man or a woman is incapable of multiplication: but we do know that the possibilities for good in a boy or girl thoroughly converted are vastly greater than in those who are saved in mature life.

This fact, if nothing else, should stimulate us to exert ourselves to the utmost to save the boys and girls. We are sure to succeed if proper efforts are put forth. The investment pays, whether made in time, labor or money. We often labor in vain when we give attention solely to men and women. If they are not hardened in sin, they are often set in their ways, and it is impossible to move them. It is not so with boys and girls. They yield readily to invitation, especially if that invitation is extended by one in whom they have confidence.

There can be no doubt that our most fruitful field is among the children. We not only actually count a larger number of converts among them, but we secure consecrated and active workers. Nor does the work stop there. These boys and girls grow to be men and women, have homes and families, and reproduce their lives in their children. We do not always know what power we have put in motion when we have saved a child.

We have little patience with one who looks with contempt on the conversion of children. No matter how small they are, they belong to Christ, and ought to be tenderly guarded and kept in the fold. No man is fit to be a pastor who will not look after and feed the lambs. They should be guarded, lest they stray.

LET US PUT AN END TO LYNCHING.

Now is a good time for the whole country to look at the matter of lynching in a calm and dispassionate manner, and resolve that it shall stop. The shooting of President McKinley was a terrible provocation, and a word of encouragement from him, or from any prominent officer about him, would have set the multitude wild, and the assassin would not have lived five minutes. His words, "Let no one hurt him," when told that his assailant was an anarchist, ought to have great weight throughout the country. It is true that the crime for which the largest number of individuals are lynched is horrible beyond measure, and deserves the severest punishment known to the law, but the summary vengeance meted out to culprits, as demonstrated through a long series of years, has failed to cure the evil. Torture at the stake does not seem to lessen the number of assaults. We seriously doubt whether any sort of a remedy, under present conditions, can stop them entirely. But we do believe that trial and conviction, followed by orderly execution in public, besides securing the ends of justice and saving our people from the demoralization of mob law, would have a tendency to deter the evil-minded. At any rate, since lynching neither stops assaults nor lessens their number, it would be better for all concerned to let the law take its course.

But, alas! letting the law take its course is the very thing our people are afraid of. There are so many loopholes, and technicalities, so many causes for delay, and so many influences brought to bear on executives, that culprits often escape entirely, or are let off with punishment wholly inadequate. These things stir indignation, and arouse the mob spirit. These evils could be largely, if not entirely, remedied by a stern and unyielding judiciary. If not, the people could remedy them by legislation. An eminent English jurist who has considered our troubles in an impartial manner, has recently said, "In criminal trials" in America "it seems to be the main object of the courts to discover a jury who will liberate the prisoner, not carry out the law." This "straining the law to defeat its own purpose" together with "the absurd straining for loopholes, which the courts appear to encourage, is, in my opinion, the first step toward anarchy."

True, the execution of a criminal without due process of law is not anarchy as generally understood. It is the expression of an excitable and impulsive populace, impatient to visit the penalty of the law on an offender. But the practice is dangerous and insufferable, because it tends to weaken respect for law, and to visit upon minor offenses the full penalty for capital crimes. It is also blind and heartless, failing as it does sometimes to identify the criminal, thus causing the death of innocent individuals. More than this: it is an excuse for the worst elements of a country to combine and shed blood over the protest of judges, attorneys and all good citizens of a community. In this way, Carrollton, Miss., made up of the very best class of people, will go down in history as the scene of an awful lynching, whereas not a single person living in the town took any part in the unlawful work.

We freely acknowledge the difficulty of putting an end to lynching by law. It is next to impossible to identify a set of masked men. And when unmasked the trouble is to find witnesses, and juries willing to convict. There is too much of what Lord Salisbury calls the "mistaken leniency of modern society." There is but one sure and certain reliance. That is the gospel. We must preach that, not as the law of man, but as the law of God. The strong, moral sentiments of our fathers must be instilled into the hearts of the people, at least in a sufficient number to restrain the lawless and disobedient. To the law must be joined the gospel if our land is to be redeemed from the curse of the mob.

BISHOP GALLOWAY'S SERMON.

We have received a copy of the Methodist Recorder — Ecumenical Conference daily edition, number containing Bishop Galloway's great sermon at the opening of the Conference. The subject of the discourse is: Christian Experience—Its Supreme Value, and Crowning Evidence, founded on I. John i, 3; and Acts iv, 20. The sermon is characterized by the editor of the Recorder as a timely restatement of Methodist fundamentals. This it may be, but it has the old-time Methodist ring. It is far and away ahead of anything an ordinary man is capable of presenting, yet it so preserves the terminology of the past, and is so full of Christian experience, that John Wesley himself would find no fault with it. Coming as this sermon does from one of the chief men of Methodism—a great leader in every sense—it ought to put to shame that small class who think old Methodism has answered its purpose and ought to be laid aside, and that our doctrines ought to be re-dressed in twentieth century language and brought up to date.

SECULAR VIEWS OF THE MINISTRY.

While in some quarters, notably in the Protestant Episcopal Church, complaint is being made of scarcity of young men preparing for the ministry, in other quarters we read of societies being organized to prevent what farmers would call over-production. This may sound strange in the ears of those who believe that the ranks of the ministry are supplied by men called of God to the work. It seems monstrous that any set of men should undertake to thwart the purpose of Providence, and it is to many unaccountable that a great and growing church like the Episcopal should be lacking in men to fill the ranks of her priesthood. To those, however, who look at the matter in a commercial view, there is nothing strange in the one case nor monstrous in the other.

The ministry is not a paying institution, and for this reason it is said that young men in the Protestant Episcopal Church "decline to take orders." They see by a survey of the field, that hundreds of clergymen have no work, and that many who, at fifty years of age, having given their lives to the care of souls, are ruthlessly thrown aside, and left without means of support. This discourages young men, and they decline to enter a field in which they are liable to be stranded at a time when help will be needed. Efforts to entail the production of preachers have for their inspiration the same commercial idea. Overproduction gluts the market and reduces prices. This makes somebody suffer. If there are too many preachers, the living for each will be too scant. If it is kept down to the lowest point, those already in, with the few who are needed as recruits, will have a better chance. That is the coolest and most deliberate method of ruling God out of his church that we have ever known. We have read of men robbing God of the tithes, but never before of men undertaking to regulate the number of preachers. Better let the Lord have his way.

A BIT OF INCONSISTENCY.

It seems to us a bit of inconsistency for men to stand in the pulpit and declare the almost universal corruption of the church, and attempt to prove their assertions by naming isolated cases of moral defection that have come under their own observation, and then plead with all apparent earnestness for men and women to come out of the world and join the church. If they believe what they say about the church, they can not deny that the world is as good as the church, and to leave the one for the other is no better than "jumping out of the frying-pan into the fire." If not more than five members of the church out of every hundred are genuine Christians—as we have heard asserted—then we are constrained to believe that the church, in proportion to numbers, is worse than the world. Why men of good sense and religion talk so, we do not know. Certainly it does not tend to impress men on the outside with the beauty of religion or the importance of the church. On the contrary, we rather think it disgusts and repels them. Such preaching does harm!

MISSIONARY ISSUES.

Missionary Issues of the Twentieth Century is the title of the book in which is recorded the sermons and addresses delivered at the Missionary Conference held in New Orleans last Spring. The book was prepared for publication by Rev. Geo. B. Winton, of our Mexican Mission, and issued by order of the Executive Committee of the Missionary Conference. Those who were not fortunate enough to attend the Conference will find in this book an account of all that was done and said, and while they will miss the inspiration of the presence and voice of speakers they will obtain full knowledge of the living question of the day. It is a small library of mission literature.

The sale of the book in advance of its appearance was large—quite up to the expectation of the publishers. Now that it is ready we trust its circulation may be much more extensive. It is a book of 600 pages; price, one dollar. Address G. W. Cain, Nashville, Tenn.

Centenary Notes.

More than 120 students, and quite a good number expected soon. Faculty able, and college never had a brighter future. Let the Methodists of Louisiana help us.

A word just now from all the preachers would do us good.

I. W. COOPER.

PERSONAL.

We have in hand a communication on "Impressions of the Missionary Conference." It has no name attached, nor was it accompanied by any note. Of course, we can not print it. Will the writer please give us his name?

Bishop Keener and family, after spending the Summer at Ocean Springs, have returned to their home in the city. The Bishop is in usual health; not strong, but quite as well as men of his age. He was on the streets of the city the early part of this week.

Dr. J. D. Vinoll was secretary of the Missouri Conference at its last session, having been elected for the fortieth time. If that does not break the record in the secretarishlp, will some one give us the information? We suppose Dr. Vinoll laid aside the goose quill long ago, and writes with a gold pen.

A note from Rev. J. W. Dorman, Holly Springs, Miss., in the last quarter of the year, expresses hope of winding up well. He says "the bad crops will make it hard for the people to meet all claims, but they are anxious to do it, and I hope will." Brother Dorman's friends join him in this expression.

The Daily Signal, of Crowley, La., printed in full the address of Dr. C. W. Carter, delivered in that city Thursday, the nineteenth, on the occasion of the President McKinley memorial service. It was an eloquent and deserved tribute to the honored dead, and does great credit to the head and heart of Dr. Carter.

Our friend and brother, Rev. J. W. Cunningham, of St. Louis, was elected president of the Veteran Preachers' Association at its recent session during the Missouri Conference. Brother Cunningham must be "up in years," but his sprightly letters, which appear in our papers—occasionally in this ADVOCATE—indicate no abatement of natural force. May he long live!

Mrs. Stevens, widow of our brother, W. M. Stevens, who recently died at Meridian, is recovering from an attack of illness. She is making her home now with her mother at Tylertown, Miss. She is deeply grateful to friends in Meridian, and elsewhere, who have shown her sympathy and kindness in the hour of affliction and bereavement. May the Lord be kind to her and her little ones!

A cable dispatch from London announces the death of Judge Woods, of Selma, Ala. He was a delegate to the Ecumenical Conference; was taken sick with pneumonia about the time he arrived in London, and passed away a few days since. Judge Woods was prominent in Alabama Methodism, being at the time of his death president of the Board of Trustees of the Southern University. He will be greatly missed.

Rev. I. W. Cooper, president of Centenary College, on Sunday, the fifteenth, dedicated the new and handsome church at Winnfield, La. He was greeted by a large and enthusiastic audience. Rev. J. P. Haney, the pastor, is in favor with his people. On the Wednesday following, the last service, more than twenty persons united with the church. Many courtesies, by the pastor and others, were extended to Dr. Cooper during his stay.

Rev. J. A. Randolph, of the North Mississippi Conference, and chaplain in the Philippine Army, has recently finished the translation of the Gospel by Matthew into the Visaya language. The translation will be published by the American Bible Society. It will give more than a million people the first book of the New Testament in their native tongue. It will accomplish untold good. Brother Randolph is to be congratulated for his achievement.

Rev. F. R. Hill, D. D., well known in New Orleans as a fine preacher and pastor, is closing his second year at Broadway Church, Louisville. The year has been one of great success, the membership in number having gone beyond anything in its history. Every interest of the church is in a gratifying condition. The official Board unanimously requested the Doctor's return. Nearly twenty years ago we heard a Bishop say, "Dr. Hill is the best pastor in our church." He has lost nothing in the roll of years.

Forest District Items.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Tidings reach me of gracious revivals now prevailing at White Plains, Walnut Grove circuit, C. M. Crossley, P. C.—Number of accessions not yet reported; Garlandville, Montrose circuit, W. W. Morse, P. C.—Number of conversions, 2 accessions, with more to follow; Morton, W. D. Dominick, P. C.—Town being stirred from center to circumference, many conversions (three of the pastor's children among them), 10 accessions so far. At the Lake Camp Meeting very many professed conversion, 23 joined our church, 6 went to the Baptist, and 1 to the Presbyterian. At Shiloh Camp Meeting no one kept account of the conversions; 62 accessions—P. D. Hardin, P. C., assisted by W. D. Barr (who was also at Lake) and other brethren. One service, with various and gracious results, was led by Miss Bettie Hughes, our returned missionary. A number of infants were baptized. Montrose, W. W. Morse, P. C., assisted by W. T. Griffin—50 conversions (including three daughters of the P. C.), and 13 accessions; Carthage circuit, M. L. White, P. C., W. W. Murray, assistant—School-house near Alice P. A Voice from the Jackson Epworth League.

Our League is in a flourishing stage. Each member seems possessed with an earnest desire to put forth individual efforts; as a result, the past Summer has been a fruitful one. The co-operation of our pastor furnishes our Leaguers greater zest for the work.

The Charity and Help Department has been unusually active this season in doing good and needed work. The Missionary Department is not in the background. It has in charge the funds from subscriptions, etc., and is an active branch.

Our devotional meetings have, during the past Summer, been held from house to house, with ever-increasing interest and attendance. They have been taken also to homes where inmates are unable to attend any church meetings. One home, in particular, we have in mind is that of a dear, sweet old Christian lady, a devoted and constant attendant of her crippled and helpless son, who so heartily enjoys these prayer meetings he can never attend elsewhere. The programmes are ably arranged in various ways, so as to bring it to it quite a number of Leaguers who never took regular parts are this Summer. At present special subjects are being selected for prayers at our weekly devotional meetings.

The Literary Department, too, has not been idle. The League reading course has been completed at the bi-weekly reading circle. Lessons, or portions of books, are prepared prior to these evenings, and are then reported, and discussions of an interesting nature follow.

Pleasant features of the League are the social gatherings, sometimes independent, sometimes in connection with the reading circle, at which, intermingled with merry fragments of conversation, are amusing games.

We desire not to remain where we now stand, but, with help from a divine source, hope to reach greater heights, from which our lights may shine out brightly and with effect.

EPWORTH LEAGUER.

Greensburg Fitting-School.

EDITOR ADVOCATE: This training-school of the Methodist Church began its first session under its new name, Tuesday, the tenth instant. On that day addresses were delivered by Mr. W. T. Holland and Rev. P. M. Brown, the music for the occasion being furnished by our instructor in music, Miss Susie M. Boddie.

The opening was a fairly successful one. Forty-six were enrolled the first day, and this number is certain to be added to considerably in the near future.

Our school has been under the control of the Louisiana Conference for about nine months, but has, so far as we are able to see, received very little consideration from that body, being left alone to progress as best it can. This is not right. The school was founded at considerable expense and donated to the Conference, and it is only right that the Methodists of the State should do what they can to help it reach its widest sphere of usefulness.

Our faculty is competent, our accommodations are ample, and we believe we are entitled to patronage from those to whom the school belongs, and in whose interest it is being conducted.

ALBERT J. PRICE, Prin.

Opening of Millsaps College.

The tenth session of Millsaps College begins Wednesday, Oct. 2. Entrance Examinations in Latin and Greek, Oct. 1. Entrance Examinations in English and Mathematics, Oct. 2. Recitations begin Oct. 2.

All students are urged to be on hand promptly at the beginning for examination and classification. The authorities of the college have every reason to expect a large attendance and a successful year's work. The equipment of the college is more complete and the surroundings more pleasant than ever before, and every reasonable effort will be made to promote the comfort and happiness as well as the moral and intellectual growth of the student. All loyal Methodists are relied on to aid in advancing the cause of Christian education.

KOSCIUSKO CIRCUIT.

DEAR DOCTOR: We have just witnessed a splendid revival throughout the Kosciusko circuit. Rev. Claude M. Simpson, of Camden, did most of the preaching. He preached with power from on high. Forty-five additions were made to the church. All except three were received on profession of faith. Near fifty persons professed conversion. The membership of the charge is greatly strengthened in religious faith. We thank God and give him all the glory. Pray that as we grow older we may grow more needful in the work. Your brother,

LUTHER W. FELDER, P. C.

PARIS CIRCUIT.

DEAR BROTHER BOSWELL: I have held six of my meetings; two more to hold. Have had up to date seventy conversions, and fifty accessions to our church. The Lord has been with us in great power. Souls were converted in the old-time way at the altar. We are building one new church, and hope to get it completed by Conference. Paris circuit is on the up grade. Pray for us.

Your brother in Christ,

J. H. ROGERS.

PLEASANT HILL, MISS.

DEAR BROTHER BOSWELL: The Lord is blessing us on the Pleasant Hill circuit, Sardis district, North Mississippi Conference. Seventy five or eighty converts up to date, with more to follow. That is, our faith calls for more. You are giving us a good paper. God bless you.

Yours in Christ, R. P. GOAR.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

CARTHAGE, MISS.

DEAR BRO.: We have held meetings at Rocky Point, Singleton, Conway and Bethel. Results: 37 accessions to church, 31 adults and 6 children baptized. I have been assisted by Bros. W. W. Murray and Geo. W. Shearer. We are now at Alice, Neshoba county, North Mississippi Conference. That Conference ought to send their preachers here and help these people. The communters are numerous.

Yours, etc., M. L. WHITE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

CALHOUN, LA.

DEAR EDITOR: Our protracted-meeting season has about drawn to a close. We have added during the year about seventy members. Conversions and reclamations reach near that number. Quite a number have made a deeper consecration. Several family altars erected. Finances very well up. I think we will be able to report two new church buildings by Conference, and, I hope, a new parsonage.

Bro. Notestine, our presiding elder, was with me in one meeting, where we received eighteen into the church, and had quite a number of conversions. Bro. L. S. Riggs was with me in one meeting, where we received nineteen into the church, and had about twenty-eight conversions and reclamations. He did us good work.

I am also indebted to Bro. B. H. Sheppard for valuable services rendered. Yours fraternally,

H. W. LEDBETTER.

DOWNSVILLE, LA.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We are alive over on the Downsville charge, Arcadia district. Our revivals for the season have been held. We have had quite a number of conversions, and fifty-one have been added to the church. We expect to bring our Conference assessments up in full. Our people are responsive to the interest of the church. The ADVOCATE gets better all the time.

There are three stories and basement, main building 200x60 feet, with wing 50x60 ft., wide verandas, large and airy study hall, class rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed rooms lofty and well ventilated, electric lights, water on every floor, with fire plugs every fifty feet, Peck Hammond system of heating the building taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building. Peck, Hammond system of sanitation, fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewerage; all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils in weather necessary at any time.

Character: 1. Christian.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. Thorough.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. Thorough is the key word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. Successful. The purpose and work of the school have commended it to patrons. Growth. Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 126, 147, 151, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, 8; at present, twenty. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach. Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than most fully could be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

Send for catalogue, giving full information and illustrated to show floor-plans and special adaptation of the building to the work. Address

Smart Shepherd Dogs

An old sheep-man has been relating a few instances in the Philadelphia Times, showing the intelligence of shepherd dogs and the assistance they render their owners.

Last Winter in the Northwest was one long to be remembered by the ranchmen. Stock raisers in Colorado, Wyoming, and Idaho have many sad stories to tell of the thousands of cattle and sheep that perished on account of the severe cold and by starvation, due to heavy snows on the ranges. It became so cold that the lives of the herdsmen were put in hazard in attempting to round up the stock from the plains, which would wander aimlessly away in their efforts to find shelter and food.

Jud Bristol, the most noted sheep raiser in the Northwest, located at Fort Collins, Colo., in speaking of the troubles experienced during snowstorms, says that to the shepherd dog must be given credit for the saving of many hundreds of his sheep and possibly the lives of some of his herdsmen, due to their great intelligence and faithfulness. When questioned as to the intelligence of these animals, Mr. Bristol said: "I could fill a book with the wonderful reasoning powers of these dogs, instances that have come directly under my notice, illustrating beyond a doubt that they are often more thoughtful than their masters.

"The most noted breed of shepherd dogs known to Western sheep-men started with a pair of New Zealand dogs brought to Colorado in 1875. I now have several of the breed on my ranges, and their work is remarkable.

"I remember one pup in particular. I say pup, as he was but six months old when he was taken on the range for work. He had done excellent work for a few days, and on one afternoon the weather indicated an approaching blizzard, and my men began rounding up the sheep to get them in the corrals. There were sixteen hundred in the bunch, but when we counted them in we found about two hundred short, and at the same time it was noticed that the pup was also gone.

"Well, all hands immediately started out for a search. We hunted most all night and a part of next day, but were unable to find them until late in the afternoon. They were found some five miles from the corral, located in a little draw and with the faithful dog standing guard. The poor dog was nearly famished, as he had been for thirty-six hours without food or water. He was looked upon as a hero after that, but with the exposure and subsequent overfeeding he died not long afterwards.

"The mother of this pup was a fine animal. One night the herder brought in his flocks and, having had a hard day of it, he hurried them into their pens, and went to the cabin to cook himself some supper. He missed the dog when he arrived at the house and thought it strange, as she usually followed him. However, he did not take the trouble to search for her. Going to the corral next morning, there he found the dog guarding an open gate which he had left in his haste the night before. The dog had suffered the pangs of hunger and thirst rather than to allow the sheep a chance to escape.

"Another illustration of this dog's smartness. One day she was sent with a new herder to an outlaying ranch, some fifteen miles away. When night came the dog returned in a very excited condition, and by her actions we knew that something was wrong. We mounted our broncbos and soon reached the ranch, and found that the new herder was nothing more than a tramp, and after getting a good square meal he had taken up his old vocation, leaving the sheep cared for only by the faithful dog.

"A few months ago there was a young man from the East came out to work for me, a tenderfoot, as we called him, and the herders took great pleasure in filling him with hair-raising stories, until he was firmly of the opinion that each time he went out on the range he would be killed by the bears or scalped by the Indians. He came rushing in one day declaring that he had seen a bear. We would not believe him and sent him back to work. A few days after he came in again, and reported having seen the same animal again. We thought possibly that there might be a wolf, as there were a great many of them around, so we went with our guns and foxhounds, and, sure enough, across a draw on the side of a hill we saw a black animal, and while we knew it was not a bear, we couldn't make out what it was. Well, we started a foxhound and the shepherd dog out on the trail, and we followed. They soon chased him over the hill out of sight, but shortly afterward we met the shepherd dog coming leisurely back. We went over the hill, and in a gulch we found the foxhound standing over the dead animal, which proved to be a large black Mexican sheep. Now, the facts were that as soon as the shepherd dog found it was a sheep she had given up the chase and returned to the flock, while the hound knew nothing more than to catch and kill it if he could."—The Presbyterian.

Stonewall's First Recorded Victory.

The following incident in the life of General Thomas J. Jackson, which, I believe, has never been given to the public, but which I had several times from the lips of my venerable uncle, Mr. Conrad Kester, who lived at Weston, in Lewis county, Va. (now West Virginia), some three miles above the "Old Cummins Jackson Mills," where young Jackson lived with his uncle, will serve to show that those sterling qualities of head and heart which so characterized his life in after years were innate in the boy, and even at the early age of ten years his high sense of honor and keen perception of right, fixed in his mind so high a standard of morality that he could not easily be induced to lower it.

At the time mentioned, the West Fork river, on whose banks stood the old mill, was well stocked with fish, among which none was sought after so eagerly as that noble game fish called the "pike." "Tom," as he was familiarly called, partially supplied the demands of the limited fish market at the little village of Weston.

One day Tom proposed to Mr. Kester that he would let him have all the pike he caught a foot in length or over at the price of fifty cents each. Mr. Kester accepted the proposition, so the solemn compact was concluded.

Tom continued to perform his contract faithfully, and told Kester every pike he caught of the "regulation length," until one day he was seen by Colonel Talbot going through town, making straight for Kester's, bending under the weight of a pike thirty-eight inches in length, when the following colloquy took place:

"Hello, Tom. That's a fine fish you have. I want to buy it."

Tom, without apparent interest in what the Colonel was saying, and without halting, laconically replied:

"Sold to Mr. Kester."

"That can't be. You have not seen Mr. Kester. I will give you a dollar for it."

"I tell you it is sold, and is not mine to sell."

"What is Mr. Kester to give you for it?"

"Fifty cents"

"I'll give you a dollar and a quarter for it."

Tom cast upon him an indignant look and remarked:

"If you get any of this pike, you will get it from Mr. Kester."

On presenting the fish to Mr. Kester that gentleman said: "Tom, this is a splendid pike. I think I shall have to give you a dollar for it; fifty cents is not enough."

Tom replied: "No, sir; that is your pike at fifty cents, and I will not take more for it. Besides, you have bought a good many from me that were pretty smart."

This the transaction closed, and Tom was doubtless thereby made stronger for the fierce struggles which awaited him in his future eventful career.—Judge McWhorter, in Baptist Standard.

Jack, the Pet Monkey.

Jack, my pet monkey, was full of mischief, but he was so entertaining that I didn't mind his mischief, says an animal lover in an exchange. Sometimes, it is true, I had to keep him caged, but that was a difficult matter, for he would find a way to undo almost any fastening. He was very sociable with my visitors, and if I would allow him, he would never fail to investigate the contents of their pockets.

He would stow pennies and buttons in his mouth, and would then eat candy and nuts, afterward taking out the pennies and buttons that I thought he had swallowed. He tried on gloves, opened letters, smelled flowers, wiped his mouth on a handkerchief, and even tried to put on a pair of spectacles. I have seen him try to put hairpins in his hair, and when he failed he would straighten them out into toothpicks.

One day he got into the kitchen, and when the cook was not paying particular attention to him, he jumped upon the table, seized a pail of water that was standing there, and emptied the contents on the sleeping cat. He never lost an opportunity to play a joke on old Tab, or on the younger cats, either, for that matter. He often succeeded when he was caged in enticing cats close to the bars, when he would seize their ears and pull them until the victims fairly squalled.

This habit of his was well known to a neighbor of mine, and once when she was visiting me with her baby the little one, unnoticed for the moment, crawled up to the cage to have a good look at Jack. The mother saw it and rushed to rescue the child, but Jack was too quick for her, and had grasped it by the shoulders before she could reach the spot. He had no intention of pulling its ears, however, for he drew it gently to the bars and kissed it right on the face.—Churchman.

Why He Was Loved.

"I wonder why Samuel Darrow is so much loved?" said a visitor at the house of a friend of the Darrows.

"I know," piped a little voice, "it's 'cause Sam loves everybody."

"How do you know Sam loves everybody?"

"'Cause I sees he does. Now, there's little Jim Blake, his father drinks, and som times Jim don't bring any lunch to school. Then Sam divides his lunch with little Jim a ways. And when the boys made fun of Tim Short because his elbows were out, Sam give 'em a look that they won't forget in a hurry."

"A look! What would boys care for a look!"

"Well, sir, if you'd seen Sam look, you'd understand. It was just as if he'd said: 'Now, ain't you 'shamed of yourselves making fun of a poor little fellow who wears the best he's got?'"

"Doesn't that look of Sam's make the boys angry?"

"No, sir; it makes 'em ashamed, and they like Sam all the better for it."

"What else does Sam do?"

"Oh, I couldn't begin to tell you all he does, but he's forever doin' something for somebody. That day tiny Dick Mills got hurt, Sam carried him all the way home in his arms, an' Dick just loves Sam. When Burt Brown broke his leg, Sam went to see him every day, and when Billy Chester was sick, you'd ought to've seen the nice things Sam took him."

"But what has Sam Darrow done for you?"

The little fellow's face flushed; then he said in a low voice, looking up depreciatingly: "You wouldn't think I came near being a thief and a liar once, but it's so. I found something I wanted, and no one knew but Sam. 'I'm going to keep it,' I told him; 'they won't know who's got it.' Sam give me that look; then he said: 'But you will know, and so will God.' So I took it back to the owner."—Mrs. W. S. Farley, in N. Y. Observer.

One Girl's Secret.

"Mother, may I go out visiting this afternoon?" asked little Agnes Mayhew.

"Yes, you may. You may go to see Ella, or to see Louie, which ever you like."

"I'd rather go to Louie's," said Agnes, quickly.

"Why?" asked Aunt Esther, who was sewing by the window. "Hasn't Ella a great many dolls and beautiful toys? And then there is her pony cart."

"I know," said Agnes. "But it doesn't matter how many nice things she has, just as soon as we begin to play she begins to wish she had something different, and it unsettles my mind so much. But when I play with Louie, if we want anything that we haven't got, she can generally think of something else that will do as well, or else she says that we can do without it very nicely. She's lots cheerfuller about doing without things than Ella is, and it's much more fun to play with her."

Aunt Esther looked across Agnes at her mother and smiled. "The same old truth," she said. "It's the spirit within that makes the world without fair or dark."

"What is spirit, mother?" asked Agnes, presently.

Her mother thought a minute. "Well, dear, it's the way we think in our hearts. If we have happy, thankful thoughts, they give us a contented spirit, and that makes the world bright for us. Nothing else can."

Agnes nodded her head very wisely. "Yes, mother, I believe that's just the truth. Louie's got a contented spirit, and she enjoys it a great deal more than Ella does all her dolls and her pony cart and everything. Besides, it makes her just lovely company for us other girls to play with."—Selected.

Give us, O give us, the man who sings at his work! Be his occupation what it may, he is equal to any of those who follow the same pursuit in silent sullenness. OBITUARIES.

Dr. JOSEPH M. WILLIAMS was born in Wilkes county, Ga., April 13, 1820. He took his medical course in and received his diploma from the Medical College, Charleston, S. C. In young manhood he turned his face westward, and located about fifteen miles west of Grenada, Miss., in the vicinity of Chochuma, while the Indians were still there. By devotion to his profession and tender ministries to his patients he soon took position as a physician, and was deservedly popular among all classes. In his practice he was very successful. Night and day he responded to the calls of the sick, not consulting his personal comfort, but unselfishly devoting himself to the sick and suffering. He was as successful in accumulating property as he was in the treatment of disease. It could not have been otherwise, coupling economy, good business judgment, and wise investment of his means, with his ability and success as a physician. His means he very wisely invested in real estate, and thus became identified with planting. In all of his dealings, with the most ignorant colored laborer as well as intelligent, cultivated merchants, he was so scrupulously honest as to secure and hold the confidence and esteem of all down to the very last. To all who knew him in this particular he was above reproach. Many of the negroes now on the farms have been there for years, because they knew him and preferred to remain with him. Among his excellent traits of character was the virtue of speaking evil of no one. So careful was he in this matter that it was observed by many of his friends as well as his family. Not being constitutionally strong, becoming much worn in the practice of his profession, and having accumulated nice property above a comfortable living, he retired from practice in 1872, and devoted the remainder of his life to planting. In 1850 he was married to Miss Lucy Kendall. She was indeed an helpmeet to him. By her he was revered and truly loved. The doctor, in turn, was a devoted husband, and a considerate and loving father. I have never known greater respect and more affectionate regard for a parent than those children—grown to womanhood, and each of them in charge of her own home—gladly gave to their father. In early life Dr. Williams professed faith in his Savior and joined the church, but his unsettled state—moving from one section of the country to another—when church membership was not appreciated as it should be, he allowed it to lapse, and to the great regret of his family and many of his friends, he never renewed it. This was, doubtless, due—in a measure, at least—to the fact of increasing afflictions and growing infirmities of life. He was latterly very hard of hearing, and became more and more timid and shrinking in his disposition. Years before his departure he assured his anxious and devoted wife that his trust was in Jesus, and that he had no fears of death. We entertain the hope of meeting him again. * * *

Died Aug. 17, 1901, at the plantation home, Dixie, La., Mrs. MATTIE LIPSCOMB DICKSON, wife of the late M. A. Dickson, aged sixty-four years. Deceased was born near Clinton, East Feliciana parish, but for many years has been a resident of North Louisiana. "Death loves a shining mark." A lovely Christian woman has gone to rest from the labors of earth. Such was the life of the deceased. She lived for the happiness of others. In my frequent visits to her home I always found her the same gentle, quiet, loving, sociable Christian. She was the mother of four sons, and one daughter who was transplanted to heaven in infancy. She lived to see her four sons happily married, and so devoted were her children to her that each one wanted her to make her home with them. She was at the home of her youngest son, who was recently married and gone on a bridal tour. She was preparing to receive the son and his bride when she was suddenly taken ill and died ere they could return. Her eldest son, Dr. Willie Dickson, was also absent. Although hastily telegraphed in regard to her condition, yet, ere he could arrive, the bright light of her eye was gone, and her beautiful soul had fled to God, who gave it. The deceased was of such a lovely and pure Christian character that not only was she much beloved by her large circle of relatives, but by all who knew her; and we know there was great rejoicing in heaven by her admittance. Her dear father and mother and many loved ones had gone on before, but we feel her loss to us, who are left to mourn her departure can never be filled. Our loved ones who are gone on before beckon us to heaven. "Oh, how precious the thought that there is a land of rest, where sorrows and tears are unknown forever!" Oh, how grand is the Christian's hope! COUSIN MARY.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

ROY SCOTT, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Willie Scott, was born July 2, 1890, and died Aug. 23, 1901. Only eleven years were given him to brighten the home circle and strengthen the ties of affection that bound him to fond parents and loved ones. His illness, which was congestion, was of short duration, and all that loving hands could do to stay the dread destroyer was done. The summons came, and as his life was slowly passing away, he fully realized that he would soon be in the presence of his Savior, and in concert with his heart-broken parents he repeated in clear and distinct voice the Lord's Prayer, and as the last words were passing from his lips the gentle spirit of Roy was borne from earth to heaven, and placed in the bosom of his Savior. Roy had been for some time a member of the Cane Ridge Sunday-school, and was always attentive and faithful as such. The dispensation that has removed him from our midst falls like a crushing blow on his fond parents, other loved ones and friends. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we tender our sympathies to his family, and assure them of our prayers in this time of sorrow.

Resolved, That we will cherish the memory of our little friend, and bow in humble submission to the will of God in this dispensation, knowing that he doeth all things well.

MRS. SUE W. NEVIL (nee Porter), wife of Robert P. Nevil, was born July 30, 1853, and died Aug. 31, 1901, at 5:30 P. M. She was married to R. P. Nevil, Dec. 10, 1884. She joined the Methodist Church in young womanhood, and was ever zealous for her church and its interests. She was anxious about the progress of the church, and especially in the whereabouts and welfare of her ex-pastors. Her home has been for many years a welcome place for the weary itinerant, and many have found comfort, rest and shelter there. Sister Nevil was a lover of the ADVOCATE, and anxiously looked for its coming. She was for a long while confined to her room, and was a great sufferer. She much desired to get well. She said to the writer one day, as she pointed to her two boys, "I went to live to raise my children," which was, perhaps, her greatest interest and concern in the world. May God bless the husband in this hour of sadness, and the precious children left behind! She also leaves an aged mother, with several brothers and sister. May we all meet in heaven!

H. M. YOUNG.

MRS. MARY D. WHITTINGTON, wife of J. W. Whittington, and daughter of Jacob R. and Winnie Fonville, was born Oct. 3, 1836, and fell on sleep July 4, 1901. She was married to J. W. Whittington, Feb. 4, 1855, with whom she lived happily until death separated them. She joined the Methodist Church in 1855, and was a true, faithful member unto the end. Sister Whittington was a most patient sufferer; for many months she endured without murmur or complaint. "Precious in the sight of the Lord are his saints," and such was she. One said to the writer, when speaking of her, "She must be a good woman, for everybody gives her that title." She spoke several times of her departure, but never without the evidence of her readiness for the change. Her last words were: "God has been so good to me, and I suppose he has let me live long enough, and this disease might as well carry me away as any other. I am willing to go if it is God's will." She leaves a faithful husband and five children behind. Wife and mother has gone on to await their coming. May we all meet in heaven! H. M. YOUNG.

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

Consecration is not the act of our feelings, but of our will. Do not try to feel anything. God is working in you to will, whether you feel it or not. He is giving you power at this moment to will and to do his good pleasure. Believe this, and act upon it.—Meyer.

Economy no more means saving money than it means spending money. It means the administration of a house, its stewardship; spending or saving, that is, whether money or time, or anything else, to the best possible advantage.—Ruskin.

Told by Pain

If you have pains you should look after them quickly. Pain shows something is wrong. The sharper the pain the more danger there is in delay. There are thousands of women to-day who are bearing awful pain almost continually, rather than tell a physician about the shooting pains in their lower abdomen, about the agony of falling of the womb and the distress of leucorrhœa. They let the months pass and their trouble becomes harder to cure and more distressing. But modest women can secure exemption from the embarrassment of a private examination. When pain tells them of danger they can cure themselves by the use of in the privacy of their homes. You can be cured without distressing publicity. With these facts before you there is no reason for the delay which is increasing your misery and wasting the days of your life. Why not stop the pain today?

Belen, Miss., March 9, 1900.
I have used one bottle of Wine of Cardui and one package of Thedford's Black-Draught. Before I began to take your medicines I had pains in my back, hips, lower bowels and my arms. Sometimes I thought I would go blind. My head ached and I was so weak I could hardly walk across the floor. Now I can only feel a little of the pain in my side and I am going to use your medicines until I get cured, for I believe they will certainly cure me. I have been married twelve years and am the mother of seven children. I thank you for your wonderful medicine and what it has done for me.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

It is reported that President McKinley's life was insured for $315,000.

Russia has succeeded in negotiating a loan of $200,000,000 in France.

Plans for the consolidation and direction of all the Vanderbilt roads are under way.

The Russian grain crop in many sections of the Empire is reported to be unsatisfactory.

The Philadelphia Medical Journal stated that no medical skill could have saved Mr. McKinley's life.

It is reported that Armenians in Bitlis are embracing orthodoxy in order to obtain Russian protection.

The contract for the erection of new buildings at the navy yard in Algiers, La., will be soon awarded.

Justices Titus and Lewis of New York have accepted their assignment as counsel for Leon F. Czolgosz, the President's assassin.

Scott Haywood, an owner of oil lands near Jennings, La., stated that the well recently reported at that place was a "gusher."

It is reported that a powerful American syndicate will introduce new methods into the cotton manufactories recently purchased in Mexico.

The Schley naval court of inquiry resumed its sittings at Washington. Admiral Schley stated that he had no objection to any member of the court.

The Sovereign Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows decided that a proprietor of a hotel bar was ineligible for membership in the order.

Gen. Leonard Wood, in a conference with President Roosevelt and Secretary Root, pointed out the unsatisfactory features of the new Cuban electoral law.

The Czar of Russia and Emperor of Germany have, it is said, guaranteed the peace of Europe, for the next ten years, in so far as they are able to do so.

The movement, started in Chicago, to erect a monument to President McKinley has been held in abeyance for the present by order of the committee in charge of the matter.

The London Spectator commenting on the new President of the United States, stated that he would "not try to quarrel with England, but would show her no special favors."

It is reported from Brussels that Gen. Bothe will hold the 150 British prisoners, recently captured, as hostages against the carrying out of Kitchener's banishment proclamation.

President Roosevelt went walking twice on Friday, without guards. His action is taken to mean that in his opinion bodyguards have never succeeded, and never will succeed, in staying the hand of an Anarchist assassin.

In an engagement between the British and Boers near Harshell, on the Orange river, the British lost heavily. Colonel, the Hon. Andrew Murray and Capt. Murray, his adjutant, were killed. The Boers captured one of the British guns.

After a suspension of three days, as a mark of respect to the dead President, the business of the Federal government at Washington was resumed. President Roosevelt met the members of the Cabinet at the White House. All except Secretary Long will probably retain their portfolios permanently.

Commander Seaton Schroeder of the battleship Massachusetts testified before the Schley court of inquiry regarding the cruise of the flying squadron from Cienfuegos to Santiago, and the bombardment of the Spanish ship Cristobal Colon as she lay in the mouth of the harbor at Santiago on May 31. The commander said that the cruise was not as expeditious as it should have been.

School Openings.

The University of Mississippi opened Sept. 12 with a largely increased attendance over former years. There have not been as many young men present at the opening exercises in fifteen or twenty years past. This great school seems to have taken on new life.

The Woman's College, of Oxford, Miss., had a fine opening on the eleventh of September. Rev. J. W. Malone says he never before had so many young ladies present on the first day. His rooms will be full, and every chair at the table occupied. He had to do his work this year by correspondence. A spell of bilious fever has been followed by chills, making it necessary for him to stay at home. Some fifteen or twenty young ladies are to come in next week.

Help Needed.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: Through the ADVOCATE permit me to solicit the help of the presiding elders and preachers of the North Mississippi Conference to assist us who are too poor to accomplish the work, though much we love the Lord. We want to build us a new house out of an old one by using the material of the old that will do for the new. Many of our brethren know our necessities; also our poverty. Anything sent us will be thankfully received.

Please send any and all contributions to H. Lipscomb, Mashulaville, Noxubee county, Miss.

Madison County (Miss.) Local-Option Election.

Madison county still continues in the wet column. It is unnecessary for me to voice our suspicions through the ADVOCATE as to how we were defeated. Three weeks before the election, when I saw what our opponents were doing, and how conditions were being changed by—well, their methods—I had no hope of victory. A harder battle I never fought. Rev. Richard Wilkerson, of Aberdeen, came at our call, and rendered most efficient service. His physical endurance is wonderful; his address is matchless. I shall not soon forget those midnight rides over Madison county with this most delightful companion.

The official ballot shows there were 415 votes for prohibition and 508 against—a majority against us of 93 votes. Sixty-one of these were negroes, which makes the white majority 32. One hundred and fifty dry men were away from the polls.

A Prominent Memphian Writes.

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised me to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced using Lemon Elixir.

TERMS { ONE YEAR, $2. TO PREACHERS, }

Glances at the World.

Vice-President Theodore Roosevelt took the oath of office as President of the United States less than twenty-four hours after the death of Mr. McKinley. He took the oath privately and in an unostentations way. No panic of any sort followed the death of the President, and what fears were excited by the coming in of Mr. Roosevelt have been allayed, for he has assured the country that he will adhere to the policy of his predecessor. He is the youngest man that ever occupied the President's chair, being only forty-three years of age, but he thoroughly understands his position and the responsibilities of his great office. At the first meeting of his Cabinet he showed that he was familiar with the workings of each department of the government. This was quite a surprise to the officials. At this meeting of the Cabinet one of our leading journals says that "to all who came in contact with him the President gave two distinct impressions. One was that he entered upon his responsibilities with great dignity and earnestness. The other was that his elevation to his exalted station will in no material way change the independence and democratic simplicity of his life. He transacted business expeditiously, but with the keenest attention to and evident comprehension of every detail. With his hand upon the lever, the great governmental machine moved along without the slightest friction. It was evident to all observers that the government of the United States was in firm hands, guided by a clear and cautious, yet prompt and decisive brain."

The assassin of President McKinley was arraigned for trial last week in Buffalo. The trial occupied but a part of two days. The jury required but few minutes for consultation, and brought in a verdict sustaining the charge of murder in the first degree. The prisoner was condemned to death, and will be executed at the New York State prison one day during the week beginning Oct. 28. The execution, according to the law of New York, will be by electricity, and in private. The prisoner was carried from Buffalo to Auburn on the twenty-seventh of September. The sheriff had a hard time lodging him in the penitentiary. A mob of several hundred men collected for the purpose of lynching the criminal. It required the strong efforts of the sheriff and police to save the man. The man was much agitated, and broke down, and for the first time since the fatal shooting showed any sign of regret. He confessed that he had done wrong.

The sentiment of the country is a unit on the question of suppressing anarchy, but the method of accomplishing the work will be difficult to determine. As the laws now stand, free speech is guaranteed, and anarchy may be proclaimed to the full, and the proclaimer go unmolested. Nothing but an overt act can justify arrest. To make the teaching of anarchy a penal offense, the Federal and State Constitutions, it is said, must be changed. If so, anarchy can go on unchecked for a long time, for years will be required to change the Federal Constitution. It has been suggested, however, by the Chicago Inter-Ocean that there is a shorter way, and quite in keeping with our laws. The Inter-Ocean says: "We have but to call to our aid an engine made and designed for occasions and to meet emergencies when the civil law is silent or helpless. We have in the military law a code of justice created by civilization, the outgrowth of the needs of law-abiding men, exactly adapted to dealing with the anarchist and anarchy. Let Congress enact that whosoever preaches or practices the principles of anarchy shall be deemed a public enemy, declaring war upon the nation, and shall be dealt with by the military authorities according to the laws of war. Then will anarchy speedily be suppressed, and the anarchis forced to change his ways, or be exterminated."

The Naval Court, called to investigate the conduct of Admiral Schley during the blockade of Santiago harbor and the big fight in which he destroyed the Spanish fleet, has been in session in Washington for a week, or more. It promises to be a tedious inquiry; there are so many witnesses to examine, and so many questions to ask. Many of the questions and answers we do not understand, having never studied naval science, and, of course, we are incompetent to form an opinion. But, as far as we are able to judge, nothing has yet transpired to show that Admiral Schley was in anywise culpable. In the opinion of several under-officers Admiral Schley did not do the best he could have done, nor as he ought to have done, but the court ruled at the outset that facts, not opinions, were to count. That was a strong point in favor of the accused. Since the inquiry opened Admiral Sampson has asked that he be represented before the court by counsel, but the court ruled that he was not on trial, and denied his request. The investigation has aroused a great deal of interest.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.

BY JOHN A. WOODVILLE, ESQ.

This is an age of centralization. Whether the policy is good or bad, the fact remains that in all things combinations and unions are the order of the day. In order to succeed, it seems necessary to join together and combine, to focus and centralize. In the commercial world, perhaps, the principle is carried to a greater extent than in any other. Expenses are lessened, more business is done, better work and service secured. Why not take a leaf from their book, and apply their principles to the Master's work, so far as it may be found proper and right?

Our church at the Seashore Camp Ground owns a magnificent tract of land on the Gulf coast, with a large tabernacle, a commodious and comfortable two-story residence for preachers, a spacious restaurant, and a fine hotel. But we are not securing the service from this magnificent plant that we should. An annual camp meeting is held for eight days, productive of much good, and of recent years a Tri-State Epworth League Conference has been held annually, which has proven of great profit and benefit to all Leaguers who have attended. But how much more could be accomplished through this great property of our church if we only did some combining and centralizing on our own account! Everything prepared and waiting for us; all the facilities and advantages at hand inviting us to take hold.

The charter granted to the Board of Trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground by the State of Mississippi stipulates, among other things, "The object and purpose of this corporation shall be . . . for the holding of camp meetings, and for other religious, charitable, and educational purposes." Under this grant the trustees gladly extended the use of the grounds to the poor children of New Orleans for three days in August, and at the meeting of the Board held since the children were there, all were in favor of again giving the use of the grounds to aid this worthy cause.

The brethren composing the Board of Trustees would gladly welcome any movement by our church for the holding of Institutes, Conventions, Conferences, and meetings "for other religious, charitable, and educational purposes." If the Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama Epworth Leagues would only decide to hold their Epworth League State Conferences at the camp ground right after camp meeting, what a gathering would we have? It is eminently practicable and feasible. Each State for the transaction of its business could have the tabernacle for itself, say, three hours each day, and then a great union meeting at night. Ample accommodations exist for several thousand persons. It would bring together the best and brightest minds in our church. The contact and close touch all would be brought in to would result in each League learning the good points of the other and profiting thereby. Renewed enthusiasm would be created. Great plans could be devised and executed for the advancement of the work. Coming immediately after the annual camp meeting, the mighty forces there set in motion could be utilized and accelerated, and a world of good accomplished. In union there is strength, and if these three meetings could be held at the same time and place, the result would be so vast that it would be a bold person indeed who would even try to measure its effect. And then, with all the conveniences, advantages and facilities at hand, what is to prevent the Sunday-school Associations of these three States taking up the thread where the Leagues left it off? The very fact of the camp meeting and Epworth League Conferences having just been held would draw out more Sunday-school workers; would serve to bring about renewed consecration and interest in our work; would, perhaps, induce some of the famous workers to attend and contribute to the success of the meeting by giving of their time and talents. Everything that is needed is waiting, and it only remains for those interested to take hold and push forward to success the movement which is fraught with great results. The same plans and provisions made and put in force for the Epworth League could be followed by the Sunday-school as far as practicable. The best and leading spirits in each would meet and mingle together and fraternize, and by mutual counsel further each other's interests, for what profits one profits the other. So closely are they bound together, so identical are their interests, that they are really one. There is no doubt that such meetings would be attended by the brainiest, most progressive and leading ministers and layman of our church, who, immediately after the close of the Sunday-school Conference, could start an Institute for the younger preachers, who would attend in great numbers, and while, no doubt, such a meeting would be intended especially for young preachers, it would be open for all, and all who attended would be edified and built up in the Spirit. In other parts of our church these Institutes are held with great effect, and it only needs a little energy to start one on the camp ground. The laymen of our church would be benefited by it as much as the preachers, and would evidence in a very practical manner the results of the meeting. Renewed devotion to the interests of the church, closer attention to the business entrusted to their care, would mark the effect of these meetings.

There are many men and women in our church who are foremost in the Epworth League and Sunday-school work, and if a few of them would only take hold and agitate the movement and bring it prominently before our people, arrangements could be made for holding these meetings.

GEORGIA LETTER.

If Methodism ever loses her hold on the heart of the people, she has nothing to fall back upon, and her decay will be as rapid as her growth has been wonderful. She has had in the main, as her one aim, the conversion of the unconverted, and to that everything has been subordinate. For years there was no dissension or discussion as to her doctrines. They were:

1. The depravity of the human heart and the universal sinfulness of men.

2. The fullness and freeness of the atonement of Jesus Christ.

3. Justification by faith.

4. The witness of God's Spirit to one's acceptance with him.

5. The possibility of entire sanctification and perfect love in this life, and the certainty that it would come to all true believers before death.

On this last point there has been since the days that Mrs Palmer sent forth her "Way of Holiness," in which she aimed to show the shorter way to the attainment of the highest blessing, some dispute among equally good men. Mrs. Palmer was not anti-Wesleyan, but extra-Wesleyan, and she has been attacked on two sides. First, by those who did not believe in perfection as Mr. Wesley taught it, nor as she taught it. Secondly, by those who believed in it as he taught, and rejected her amended teaching, "The Shorter Way."

I do not propose to discuss this question, but to lay aside all technical terms, and enter into no speculations and make dogmatic statements which I think require no proof. I am sure all who pretend to be orthodox Methodists believe:

1. That a sinner must be convinced of his sinfulness by the Holy Ghost.

2. That he is not only convicted for his outward transgressions, but for sins of the heart, such as pride, hatred, envy, lust, ambition, and others of like nature.

3. That if he becomes a Christian, he must at once turn away from all sin, as far as it is in his power.

4. That he must renounce and seek final deliverance from all those evil tendencies which have brought forth such actual sins as he has committed.

5. That he must make a full surrender to God, and consecrate, as far as he can, all his powers to God's service.

6. That the voluntary withholding of anything which he feels he ought to give, or the holding to of anything which he believes is offensive to God, vitiates his repentance and renders it useless for him to go further.

7. That when he has made a full surrender and an entire consecration, he must take Jesus Christ as his Savior. He must believe in his atonement, that his merits do secure him pardon and a new life, and that for Christ's sake God can and will and does forgive him and save him. If he does this, he receives the pardon of all his sins. The pardon is full and free, and takes away the guilt of all outward sins, and of all heart sins.

All Methodists believe that the true believer receives at once the gift of the Holy Spirit; that he loves God supremely; that he loves his fellow-men universally; that he has a change in his feelings more or less decided, and feels the love of God shed abroad in his heart; that he knows Jesus Christ as his Savior, and loves him as his Lord; that he has no consciousness of anything offensive to God abiding in his heart; that he has power to do all that he believes God requires at his hands, and to abstain from all God forbids.

All Methodists say that the true believer begins at once to live as he knows he ought to live. He prays in private regularly and frequently; he joins the church; he gives of his substance to God's service; he watches his heart, and when he finds that there is in it anything offensive to God, he seeks its expulsion; he makes an effort to do all God demands, and when he fails—as he feels that he often does—he makes humble confession, and asks for pardon and grace.

I am sure there is no intelligent Methodist who will say I have not stated the case fairly, if not fully. If this is true, we will find, on looking into the membership enrolled, a few who come up to full standard here presented. They have truly repented of their sins; they are fully consecrated to God; they have the inward witness of their acceptance; they enjoy religion; their lives are consistently good; they have a very lowly estimate of themselves; they sadly confess that they are not what they feel they ought to be, and are always ready to join those who are called to confess their sinfulness and seek for a pure heart, but they are always ready to say that, unworthy as they are, they have the love of God shed abroad in their hearts; they love their brethren, and are ready to do all that in them lies for the advancement of God's cause. Sometimes they claim a higher experience, and say they have the perfect love that casts out fear; more frequently they say "they are groaning after it."

Then there are Methodists in name who have none of these experiences. They do not profess to have; they are in the church, and they are not grossly immoral, but they know they are not religious, their friends know it, and their pastors know it; they recognize the fact that they owe the church something, and are very liberal, often, in their gifts and payments; they have their type in Honeycutt in Post Oak. The church loves them, the preachers love them, and many prayers are offered for them. They are not cut off, and, alas! they are not saved, nor seeking to be.

Lying between these two classes are a great number who, while they are not satisfied with their Christian lives, are yet assured of their sincerity. They feel that they are not what they ought to be, but they can not say they have backslidden, and they do not want to give up the church; they are religious at times, and sometimes are very happy; they are consistent occasionally, but they are inconsistent a larger part of the time. Can we bring them up to the true standard of Methodism as it was set in the olden time? Can we get them to seek for the inward witness of the Spirit and for hearts cleansed from all sin? They are lukewarm, self-satisfied, and blind. Can we awaken them? We certainly can not by entering into philosophic discussions about original sin and a second blessing. Nor do I think they will be awakened by vulgar abuse and denunciation, but they must be awakened in some way, or they will certainly go back to the world and be lost. They can not, and will not, stay where they are.

I do not want to assume the role of a censor, but I must say I have been very much alarmed at the church pride, the boastfulness and the church ambition which I have seen manifest in these late years; and as much at the zeal for party, and the anxiety to define and contend for matters of second moment, as though they were the only things worth contending for, which has come from other directions; to see they are dividing into hostile camps on speculative questions that are almost as unimportant as those concerning vestments in the days of the Reformation. In the meantime the enemy has been getting nearer and nearer. Atheism, deism, agnosticism, latitudinarianism, and, worst of all, rationalism, are at our very gates, and we are not prepared to meet them.

I have the utmost respect for the thinking men among us who are capable, as I am not, of understanding and discussing these profound questions of religious psychology; but, really, I think matters of vaster interest confront us now, and I am like the old brother who was working in the altar, and another was called on to pray. His prayer was according to the old-time formula. He was telling the Lord all about himself, when the impulsive old brother cried: "Come to the point, brother; come to the point. These sinners want religion mighty bad."

Let us quit boasting of our being "Christians in earnest," and show that we are by getting our own people truly converted, and then we may go forward. Man can't read calculus who do not know the multiplication table. It may look like lowering our dignity to get down to the foundations, but we had better have less dignity and more souls.

THE J. S. OAKLEY MEMORIAL.

Soon after the departure of Bro. Oakley the suggestion was made that it would be a beautiful and appropriate thing if the Sunday-schools of his former charges would raise a memorial fund to perpetuate his memory; also that it should be not less than one hundred dollars, which should be devoted to some useful purpose at Millsaps College, to be forever known as the 'J. S. Oakley Memorial." Following the advice of brethren upon whose judgment I rely, I undertook to secure the funds. From many quarters came words of approval. The receipts to date are as follows: Macon, $1.80; Black Hawk, $12; Carrollton, $15.55; Rosedale (E. H. Moore), $10; Acona, $7; Durant, $10; Pickens, $5; Starkville, $10; Winona (pledge), $10; Water Valley, Main Street (pledge), $10; Water Valley, Wood Street (pledge), $10; total, $101.35. Some have made no response to repeated solicitations; others said they wanted to help, but were not able; some at places where Bro. Oakley never served as pastor wanted to share in raising the memorial, and, of course, gladly were permitted to do so.

I now make this public statement of the matter, so that if Sunday-schools, communities, or individuals want to join in this appropriate memorial to one who was worthy, they may do so. If all who were helped by Bro. Oakley's ministry will send a contribution, a large amount will be secured. If each one who, on reading this, feels moved to give, will do so promptly, the above amount will be largely increased. Much better use can be made of two hundred dollars than of one hundred. The funds must be all in hand during the month of October. Remit to me by bank check or postoffice money order.

What Our Editors Say.

CONSOLIDATION OF METHODISTS.

One of the daily newspapers heads its account of a day's doings by the Methodist Ecumenical Conference in London with the words, "Unity the Keynote." So far as the spirit is concerned, there was no doubt unity in the fullest sense of the word, among the delegates, but in the sense in which the term is employed by the journal in question, there was no general desire expressed for organic union among the representatives of the different bodies. The tendency of the present age is almost in every line toward consolidation, but the fact still remains that consolidation of mercantile or industrial interests is altogether a different thing from the consolidation of religious denominations. Indeed, the tendency among these is toward greater sub-division rather than in the direction of organic unity. Consolidation may have advantages, but there is doubt whether these would not be gained equally well and quite as fully by that fraternity and unity of spirit which makes them all equal members in the great brotherhood of Christianity.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

THE BOY PREACHER.

It is strange, but true, that there seems to be an inclination to sacrifice everything that imparts dignity and influence to the pulpit to the one idea of sensationalism. "A boy preacher" is a phrase with an element of the marvelous in it, to some minds, bordering on the miraculous. And, besides, there are those who appear to think that the pulpit is a kind of experiment station where anybody may try his gifts and exploit his sensational mind and body without stint. Why should not that boy take up other professions, the law, for instance, or medicine? If he may be trusted with the most weighty embassage the world ever saw, why not these also? An immature mind and body may astonish, by thought and action, an already expectant and curious audience, but to burden a child's mind with the heavy responsibility of the ministry and start him forth as if he were a full-fledged preacher is little short of stark madness.—Central Methodist.

THE PROCESS OF GRACE.

God's work in the soul is one continuous work with four stages. The first is conviction and goes on into regeneration, which is the second; that continues into entire sanctification, which is the third; and that continues into glorification, the fourth—one work. (Phil. i, 6.) But while this work goes on God may give a great many temporary blessings in answer to prayer. They come because the saving work is going on, but they are not that work—only encouragements to it; and it will not do to substitute any blessing for the work that makes perfect in love.—Florida Christian Advocate.

CHANGE OF FORM, NOT OF ESSENCE.

We who try to help men to their better selves should be concerned about the emotion, not its expression; the substance, not the shadow. If, for example, the "mourners' bench" must pass with the explosive repentance which called it into being, why need we grieve? That men will not weep in public is by no means a sign that they have ceased to repent. If an earnest conversation in the home will move a young life when a "rousing exhortation" in the church will not, is not the preacher's duty clear? The mere matter of method need not concern him so that he succeed in saving a soul from death. The genuineness and power of an emotion can be much more safely gauged by its effect upon the springs of action than by any merely physical demonstration. If Christian activities are any sign of Christian life, then he is a much mistaken man who believes that in our day religion is decaying.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

Our church has by no means overstressed the importance of Christian education. Well nigh all our duty as a church, as real followers of Jesus Christ and genuine exponents of his truth is found in the great underlying principle of missionary work—love for the lost, and in education, which, loyal to Jesus Christ, enables us to know more and more of God, and his will in Christ Jesus concerning us. Our institutions of learning, therefore, stand for more than mere denominational enterprise, and to foster and endow them means vastly more than pandering to sectarian narrowness. These institutions of our church stand for the most liberal culture, the most accurate scholarship, but for these saturated with his Spirit and loyal to him who is the Truth and the Way. Our colleges are the conservators of what is best for us, the promoters of the best things that should be permanent among us.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

A SINNER SAVED.

Some time ago a preacher, in one of our North Carolina city churches, preached a sermon, not directed to any special individual, yet based upon the fact that sin is in the world and that Christ is a Savior. At the close of the sermon the preacher was approached by a gentleman who wished a conference in the pastor's study. The gentleman told the old story of sin. He was on his way to a distant city to commit a great sin. He wandered into the church to while away the time. He felt that the message was for him, because he was a sinner. The Holy Spirit brought him to repentance. He renounced his sinful purposes, and without going farther, turned his face homeward the next morning a saved, happy man. Let the reader make the application.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

STANDING FIRM.

There are two ways to stand firm—in one, a man is obstinate in his prejudice; in the other, firm in principle. In the former position, the occupant seems to think that his citadel is in invective, and if he be in public life, makes himself notorious by his "flings" at anybody and everybody who differs with him. In the other position the man does not yield one iota, but as he holds his ground, he impresses even his enemies, that he is firm because he believes he is right.—Southern Christian Advocate.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

BAPTISM OF THE ISRAELITES, AND A FEW PROPHECIES.

Immersionists tell us baptism was not practiced prior to John the Baptist. They dread to go back before his day, because everything back there is sprinkle. But it has been seen that baptism was practiced by the Jews several thousand years B. C. Moreover, every Gentile who renounced his idolatry and accepted the Jewish religion was not only circumcised, but baptized. This was called "proselyte baptism," and was without an administrator. The converted Gentile washed or baptized himself. The practice grew out of the Jewish ablutions by sprinkling. St. John did not introduce a new rite at all, but only gave it a peculiar meaning.

Paul, in I. Cor. x, 1, 2, refers thus to the baptism of the Israelites: "I would not that ye should be ignorant: how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, and were baptized (baptiz) unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea."

Notwithstanding Paul's admonition, many immersionists are still "ignorant" of the baptisms which antedate those apostolic. They are also ignorant of the "how," which is as clear as noonday.

In Exodus, chapter xiv, the account where Israel crossed the sea, at which place they were baptized, is as follows: "And the Lord caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry land; and the waters were divided, and the children of Israel went into the sea on dry ground, and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand and on their left." The account tells us that there were "about six hundred thousand, besides children" (infant baptism). The "mixed multitude" which went along increased the number.

"Circuit Rider" heard a Campbellite elder say they were all immersed. But it is difficult to conceive how an immersion could take place on "dry ground." That is, perhaps, the only "impossibility," even to the Almighty himself. They were not even "surrounded" by water; no water was under their feet; none above, except the sprinkling from the clouds.

"Circuit Rider" heard another very bright Campbellite brother say "God had the Israelites boxed in, and that was the manner of their baptism." "Boxed in!"—with a cloud above, dirt beneath, water on either side, "pillar of a cloud" behind, and air, wind, or space in front. Beautiful! This is a brand-new rendering of "baptizo," and all the lexicons, in giving primaries, should take note. But what absurdities a ridiculous theory will lead men to!

Paul says the Israelites were baptized, and the record reads, "on dry ground." How was it done? The inspired writer says it was by effusion.

In Psalm lxxvii David is commemorating the deliverance of Israel at the sea, and he says, "The clouds poured out water."

It was not the cloud that went before them by day "to lead the way," because that had been removed "behind them" to keep back the Egyptians, but it was the natural clouds, higher up in the heavens, which poured out the baptismal waters.

In a public debate, had several years ago with a Campbellite preacher, "Circuit Rider" remarked that "the water fell on their heads." The learned elder bounced to his feet with the statement that I had "no right to say the water fell on their heads; that it was not in the text." The reply was, "The water certainly fell on their heads, unless the Israelites were all standing on their heads, and the rain baptized the bottom of their feet."

Hard pressed, our immersion friends have objected to the baptism altogether, because, if the 'clouds poured out water," the animals which journeyed were also baptized. The reply is, Paul only says "our fathers" were baptized. If our immersion friends want to claim kin with the camels, etc., we can not object. They ought to know their own kin.

Moreover, the "boxed-in" theory would include the animals, without any escape, unless they got out through the empty space in front. Easy enough, though, for the Lord to send a shower upon the people without a drop touching a single animal. But, as Dr. Boswell recently told us about "baptized pocket-books," why not baptized animals also? Did not the Lord need them in his service? The only immersion in the text was that of the Egyptians. They illustrate the true meaning of the word, but their immersion is nowhere called baptism.

Not only does every instance of baptism in the Old Testament favor sprinkling, but all the prophecies referring to baptism under the gospel dispensation. Isa. lii, 15, "So shall he sprinkle the nations," is prophetic, and refers to baptism under the gospel. It should be read in connection with our Lord's "Go baptize the nations." Ezek. xxxvi, 25, "Then will I sprinkle clean water on you," is also prophetic as above.

Let the reader read the context of these verses, remembering that six hundred million Christians practice sprinkling for baptism only, and all will be clear. Moreover, the early fathers of the church, such as Jerome, Cyril, interpreted the verses as referring to baptism. Read also Isa. xliv, 3, in connection with Acts xi, 15, 16.

ADDENDA.

The Baptist Chronicle, published at Alexandria, La., is taking exceptions to the articles of "Circuit Rider." In the issue of Sept. 12 it makes quotations from Pindar, Lucian, Hippocrates, Strabo, and Polybius, proving (?) that "Circuit Rider" was mistaken when he said scholars have shown that "baptizo" did not mean immerse before the time of Polybius, B. C. 203.

"But attention is respectfully called that The Chronicle's illustrations fail to illustrate, for reasons known to every school-boy. Plutarch was not born until A. D. 90 (in Chæronea, a city of Boeotia), nor did he write till many years after. Lucian was born more than one hundred years after Christ (city of Samosata, in Syria). Strabo was either contemporaneous with Christ, or, at the remotest, antedated him by only a few years. Will The Chronicle correct its mistakes, and tell its readers that the above writers wrote several hundred years after the birth of Polybius? Hippocrates was really born B. C. 430, but he never once used "baptizo" in the sense of mode. One passage is indeed attributed to him, but it is believed by scholars to be spurious. "It is disputed by able critics." It is well known, however, that he used 'bapto," the root of "baptizo," in the sense of mode—at least, dyeing by effusion. "When it drop (epitaxee) upon garments they are (baptetai) stained." (Ditzler.)

The passage The Chronicle thus attributes to Pindar is a butchery, "As when a net is cast into the sea the cork swims, so am I supplanted."

The connection of the passage proves just the reverse. Pindar was speaking of the "malice" of his enemies cast upon him, and, according to Ditzler, the following is the correct translation, "For, as when the rest of the net is toiling deep at sea, I am as a cork above the net unbaptized by (the waves of) the sea." The idea is, the abusive epithets fell harmlessly upon him.

The quotation from Polybius is also out of order, because scholars admit that he used the word in the then "rare and minority sense" of immersion. However, it has been shown that he wrote after "the breakdown and change in the Greek language," as did Plutarch and others.

In whatever way "baptiac" may have been used at any time in classic Greek, it cuts no figure. Attention was called to classic Greek simply to show that Baptists have little ground for crowing, and that the cause of effusion is not without testimony even outside of the Bible. It is altogether a question of the Scriptures, and the word is there used synonymous with purification, which was by sprinkling.

BROTHER DEAVENPORT'S TROUBLE.

BY REV. K. M. HARRISON.

BROTHER EDITOR: Our dear Bro. Deavenport finds it difficult to see how any heathen can be saved without the written or preached Word or Gospel. Please give me space, and I will see if I can give him any light on the subject.

Now, it is not claimed that all, or even a majority of heathen, are saved. This, we fear, is not the case where the gospel is preached. But can God save men who have not the written or preached gospel? If so, how? We answer, "Through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." Let us read. "He—God—laid the iniquity of us all upon him." Again, "We see Jesus, who, . . . by the grace of God, should taste death for every man." Again, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." Again, "He—Christ—is the propitiation for our sins, and not for our sins only, but for the sins of the whole (heathen) world." And again, "We thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead, and that He died for all" (heathens and any). Thus "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." It follows, therefore, that as God laid our iniquity upon him, and he bore it upon the tree of the cross, that he did there and then—in the language of our Discipline—"make a full and perfect propitiation and satisfaction for the sin of the whole world."

The result of this is, that man is born into the world, reconciled unto God by the death of his Son; therefore, it follows, as a consequence, that all who die in infancy in heathen lands, as well as here, are saved through "the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." To illustrate: If my infant here, and the heathen's infant in the heart of benighted China or Africa, die before they know right from wrong, or before they commit actual sin in unbelief, they are both alike saved through Christ without a knowledge of the written or preached gospel. Thus all infants and idiots in heathen lands are saved just as they are here. And besides this, if any adult heathens live and die so abjectly ignorant as not to know right from wrong, they, too, are saved as the idiot, because Christ died to redeem them from Adamic sin, whether they knew it or not. And besides these, as God has written his law or his will in their hearts, and they have even the dim light of nature, if the intelligent heathen does by nature the things that God's will requires, therefore, he is saved, not without Christ, but through Christ, for "if any man wills to do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." Hence I believe Socrates was saved, with thousands of other ancient and modern heathens. Paul so teaches me when he said to the Athenians, "Whom ye ignorantly worship, I declare unto you." Paul was emphatically a preacher of God, as revealed or manifested to him in Christ; yet he declares that whom he preached the heathen ignorantly worshiped.

So, brother, while the heathen, feeling about in the darkness after God, some may, and a few do, occasionally find him. How many more would find him if they had the blazing light of the revealed gospel! If you stood in the highway, and had a bright lantern in your hand, and heard your brother groping around in darkness searching for the highway, would you not feel disposed to carry your light to him? If you loved him, you would. Therefore, our Lord has said to us, "Go teach all nations," "Go preach the gospel to every creature." Who is ready to do this? He who loves his brother and is willing to obey his Lord. Marching orders are given; who will obey?

Amory, Miss.

THE ARMY CANTEEN.

The gauge of battle has been thrown down plainly in sight, if a recent issue of "Midas' Criterion," a leading liquor dealer's organ, may be credited as authority. The statement made points to one of the hottest campaigns before the next Congress that the temperance forces have ever waged. A repeal bill for the anti canteen law, passed by the last Congress, will be introduced in the House, it being assumed that if that body can be induced to vote for repeal, the Senate will follow without much urging.

A campaign of misrepresentation of the effect of the abolition of liquor selling in the army canteen was begun as soon as the first pay day thereafter had ended. Wild debauchery, in countless new saloons, that were said to have been opened outside the army posts all over the United States, was reported, and in consequence the guard-houses were full of arrested soldiers.

The disorders at Ft. Snelling first found their way into print, Fts. Myer and Sheridan and the Arsenal at Washington, D. C., quickly following with reports of wild irregularity and difficulty of preserving discipline. There are more than one hundred army posts in the United States; if the reports of carousing at these few military stations were true, instead of the need of a liquor canteen to preserve order, there would but be proven the weakness of the military discipline at these points and the need to court-martial a few officers.

As a matter of fact, however, commandants of posts, district commissioners, mayors, chiefs of police, chaplains—among them Dr. W. H. Milburn, the blind chaplain of Congress—and private soldiers unite in denying these statements of increase of drunkenness and insubordination; in every instance they deny that a single new outside saloon has opened, since the passage of the anti-canteen law, near any army post.

Generals Miles, Shafter, Wheeler, Guy V. Henry, Ludlow, Benton, O. O. Howard, Rochester, Bliss, and fifteen others, also forty-five colonels in our own army, have expressed strong opposition to a liquor-selling canteen; and the greater part of army chaplains have given like testimony. Leading admirals and other naval officers advised against furnishing intoxicants to officers and men until the Secretary of the Navy issued an order for their prohibition. Generals Wolseley, Kitchener, Roberts, Gordon, of the British Army, the French General Tallieni and the Czar of Russia have condemned the use of drink on campaigns or in garrisons, or camps.

Yet, notwithstanding all these rebuttels of evidence in favor of a repeal of the anti-canteen law, the leading daily press continues to publish this "fake" news, with the apparent connivance of the War Department and the army. "It is the duty of the press of the country to make the people understand. The great daily newspapers owed it to themselves and to the people to publish the truth and nothing but the truth about the effect of the anti-canteen law, and this they have not done—and the whole nation has a grievance against the whole metropolitan press."

The present situation is an occasion for grave reflection. On one hand we have the will of the people of the United States expressed in the anti-canteen victory in the last Congress; on the other hand is military power in open rebellion, in open contempt of civil power. "It intends to slap American motherhood in the face with a gauntlet." We call upon every editor and speaker, every preacher and right-minded Christian, every thinker, to join the home and the church in preventing the reinstatement of the saloon in the American army, and to clip the wings of a militarism to which, until the present administration, the American people have not only been strangers, but enemies.

MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS.

"A SIGNIFICANT MOVEMENT."

This, to my mind, is a loud call of the church to enter a wide-open door of opportunity to prepare our undergraduates and many more preachers to do a greater work and meet far greater responsibilities that are now upon us than our class have ever known before.

Surely the editor's suggestion of a Biblical and Theological Institute under the management of the Examining Committees of the contiguous Conferences at Saashore Camp Ground is a sublime conception, and should meet a hearty response at once. It is greatly needed; more, it is demanded by every consideration of the prosperity of the church of which we are leaders. It is practical, and the effort is inviting. While endorsing heartily the above suggestion as to place, I would offer as an alternative Millsaps College as an advantageous point in many particulars. And, again, should a united effort of Conferences fail, I would recommend a faithful effort on the part of our North Mississippi Conference committees. A similar suggestion to that of Rev. W. W. Drake for the Louisiana Conference.

And, Mr. Editor, I wish to express myself very heartily in favor of the fitting or training-school for the North Mississippi Conference, of which you speak. It should receive sympathy and assistance from both Millsaps and Vanderbilt, as it should add considerably to each. Let the Board of Education, and others interested, proceed to planning and negotiating for the means, methods, locality, etc.

Respectfully,

J. H. SHUMAKER.

An Ancient Foe

To health and happiness is Scrofula—as ugly as ever since time immemorial.

It causes bunches in the neck, disfigures the skin, inflames the mucous membrane, wastes the muscles, weakens the bones, reduces the power of resistance to disease and the capacity for recovery, and develops into consumption.

"A bunch appeared on the left side of my neck. It caused great pain, was lanced, and became a running sore. I went into a general decline. Fearful Arraignment of the Liquor Traffic

A SERMON ON

TEMPERANCE,

By the Rev. George R. Stuart,

CLEVELAND, TENN.

Coworker with the Rev. Sam P. Jones.

The author has had numerous calls from all over the country for this sermon. In order to meet this demand he had it published in pamphlet form. He proposes to use the profits of its sale in the interest of the cause for which the sermon was preached.

It is sold by the single copy for 10 cents; by the 100, at 7 cents per copy; by the 1,000, at 5 cents per copy.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss.

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

Lessons from the Institute.

The Sunday-school Institute was held at Jackson, Miss., on Sept. 18 and 19. It was thought wise to condense the programme and hold the Institute only two days. The attendance was small—much smaller than was expected; but we believe we voice the sentiments of all present when we say it was a most profitable occasion.

The two lectures by Prof. Ricketts on "Methods of Teaching," and the two by Prof. Moore on "Methods of Bible Study," were very instructive, and were just what our teachers need to train them for service. Bro. W. A. Gunning's handling of "The Modern Sunday-school and Its Management," gave a clear conception of the school and its methods and aims. Rev. G. M. Hull, who has been a staunch friend of the Institute from its inception, spoke earnestly and inspiringly on "Personal Work by Teachers," and led the consecration service. We were cheered in the work by the presence of Dr. Black and our beloved Presiding Elder Holloman and his excellent wife. Bro. J. C. Cavett, as host of the Institute, was all that could be desired, and his zeal and wise counsel were appreciated. The good people of Jackson, who assisted by their presence and entertainment, receive our most heartfelt thanks.

This Institute was but the beginning—but an entering wedge. It was an innovation—the first Sunday-school Institute ever held in Mississippi, and, like all innovations, was not appreciated by many it was intended to benefit. But there was enough of success to encourage the friends of the Institute idea to go on with the work. They will learn by the experience there gained, and profit by the mistakes there made.

The Sunday-school teachers of our two sister States need the Institute to train them for effective work. Our fathers used wooden plows, but modern life requires plows of steel, and to be run by steam. Conditions have changed, and skilled workmen, whether in material or spiritual things, are the demand of the hour. But if the mountains will not come to Mahomet, then Mahomet must go to the mountains. If the teachers will not, or can not, attend the District Institute, then let us have county and town Institutes, and Normal classes in every school. Let us agitate and agitate, until there is a healthier Sunday-school sentiment. As for us, with voice and pen and prayer, we desire to be an humble instrument in God's hands of furthering this great cause.

In the ADVOCATE, of Sept. 19, Dr. Boswell had a strong editorial on "Saving our Young People." We can add nothing to what he said, but on one point we wish to add a note of warning. He lamented the fact that so many children, grown folks, Sunday-school teachers and Epworth Leaguers, do not stay to the preaching services. Part of the blame for this state of affairs, wherever it exists, lies with the parents and part with the children. With them and for them we can only plead and pray. But wherever superintendents or teachers persistently ignore the preaching services of the church, they should be laid upon the shelf and others put in their places. We know that it is often difficult to get the right kind of men and women to take these positions in the school. In such case it is better to have fewer classes. An officer or teacher who willfully ignores the preaching services is worldly-minded, and a worldly-minded officer or teacher will do great harm. They are stumbling-blocks, and it is better to do without them.

In the midst of the universal mourning for President McKinley, let us remember the wise words he recently wrote to the Sunday-school Times: 'Every youth who is taught to observe the principles of justice and forbearance becomes an intelligent friend of the doctrine of peace; and every endeavor which aims at such instruction is deserving of the highest commendation."

We learn of a few schools that will observe Rally Day, and they claim it is one of the best-known methods of reaching delinquents and arousing the school spirit. Prepare a good programme, send out a general invitation, and as far as possible get the teachers to visit and invite all the absentees from their classes.

One good lady, the wife of a pastor, who has to act as superintendent of her school because no gentleman can be found who will undertake the work, told us that some teachers from her section would not attend the Institute because the programmes asked all to bring their Bibles, notebooks and pencils, and they were afraid they would be required to do something. What a sad commentary on the spiritual life of the schools! Would to God we could do something to arouse them from their apathy.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

COCKRUM, MISS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I send you a brief report of our work. Our first meeting was at Palestina. Bro. W. N. Duncan began the meeting the third Sunday in July. I was not able to be with him until Wednesday. I found him hard at work. Towards the last of the week the Spirit was poured out upon us, and there were a number of conversions and nine accessions.

Our second meeting was at Cockrum the first Sunday in August. Through the mercy of the Lord I was able to preach Sunday and hold services Sunday night. Bro. Babb came Monday, and preached for us until Saturday. We had a gracious revival in the church. All were delighted with Bro. Babb and his preaching. As the result of the meeting a number of family altars were established and two prayer meetings were inaugurated.

Our third meeting was at Green Leaf the second Sunday in August. Bros. Porter and Duncan were on hand Sunday. There was a fine prospect for a good meeting, but the continued rains interfered very much and we were rained out on Friday. There were several conversions and three accessions.

Our fourth and last meeting was at Independence the fourth Sunday in August, held in connection with the third quarterly meeting. The presiding elder did some very plain and pointed preaching, leaving Tuesday morning, and we closed same day. We hope that seed sown will bring forth fruit to the glory and honor of God.

We have been able to be present at the three last meetings, except a part of the time at night. We were not able to be out first Sunday, but were able to be on hand the second. We can not tell how it will be from now on. The brethren agreed to preach for us at the different churches. The brethren have been very kind to me, and have done very faithful and efficient work. B. O. Duncan has been a very able and earnest helper. I am now looking out for a place to settle down, as I feel sure I will not be able to take work another year, and while this is a sad thought to me, I feel that the Lord has been very gracious to me in allowing me to do what I could the past thirty years—twelve years as a local preacher. So I submit to the will of a loving Heavenly Father. The Lord bless you in your work.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

PORT VINCENT CIRCUIT.

On the thirty-first ultimo a series of meetings commenced at Meadows Chapel, continuing night and day until the sixth instant. The pastor, Rev. J. L. McManus, was most ably assisted by Rev. J. A. Coburn, of East Feliciana. While our Brother Coburn had a hard struggle against physical weakness all the time, yet he was filled with that zeal and consecration which is born of the Holy Spirit. Large congregations greeted the preaching of the Word by these faithful servants of the Lord, and six converts were given to them for their hire. That number may seem small to those who are accustomed to large accessions, but in this particular field six is accounted a great triumph for the truth. Our visiting brother was accompanied by his accomplished wife and little son. Her fine voice and skillful performance on the organ added greatly to the success of the meetings.

The Christians were much strengthened, and renewed devotion seemed to fill their hearts. Each one praised the Lord and testified to the spiritual benefit he had received. May God's richest blessings abide with our brother and his family.

MRS. C. D. SIMMONS.

FLORIEN CIRCUIT.

DEAR BRETHREN: On the fifth ultimo we closed another revival meeting on my work, conducted by Rev. G. D. Purcell, who did all the preaching, except two good sermons by Rev. Roy Williams, a local preacher. Bro. Purcell did me a good work. The results of the meeting are that the church was revived, some conversions and a few accessions to the church. When the meeting closed the members of the church and people of the community generally seemed to be in good spirits, and encouraged to move on in the Christian life.

I want to hold four more revival meetings on my work this year. I am praying for and expecting great victory ere the close of the year. I am expecting to carry up a good report to Annual Conference. Brethren, pray for me, that I may be successful in the ministry. I will close by saying Rev. J. S. Sanders, evangelist, will hold a revival meeting on the bounds of my work, beginning Sept. 27, at Hornbeck, La.

Yours, trusting Jesus,

E. L. CARGILL P. C.

LIGHT, MISS.

DEAR BROTHER BOSWELL: We closed Shiloh Camp Meeting on Thursday night, twelfth ultimo. It was a great meeting indeed. Large attendance, a large number of conversions, 62 accessions to our church—59 on profession of faith, and 3 by letter. Bro. Mellen, the presiding elder of Forest district, was present and helped in the meeting. I love him very much. This is Bro. Hardin's fourth year on this work. He is in great favor with his people. Quite a number of ministers attended the camp meeting, and helped by their prayers and sermons occasionally. It was a great feast of good things from the hands of our Master.

The Lake Camp Meeting was a great success, even better than it was last year.

I began with Bro. Dominick at Morton, Sunday, the fifteenth ultimo. Truly,

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1901.

It is not the loudest and most incessant talker, but the man who puts talk into action, that makes the world move.

There may be justification for giving sparingly to a good cause, but if it be done grudgingly, the giver will fail of reward.

If men were as much ashamed to sin in the sight of God as they are in the presence of each other, the great bulk of little and mean things would soon cease.

If a "live Christian in a live church always gets more than he gives," what is to be said of a dead church brought to life through the active work of a live Christian?

If every man would daily keep in mind his personal responsibility to God, and that God will call him to account, fewer penitent tears would be necessary at the close of the day.

Men who hide their stinginess under the plea of poverty, and think to ease their consciences by giving what they wrongly call the "widow's mite," deceive nobody but themselves.

Consideration for the feelings of fellow-men who occupy inferior stations and corresponding treatment are evidences of the true gentleman, and will insure the respect of the rudest and most uncultured.

No man can fulfill his mission in this world as a Christian unless he purposes in his heart not only to enjoy all he can of the gospel, but to do all he can to give the gospel to all the nations of the earth.

One good man in a neighborhood who quietly tries to perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord is worth a train-load of that class of persons who are heard for their much speaking, and always sound trumpets before them when they do alms.

Notwithstanding the warning our Lord gave the disciples as to their fate, they counted not their lives dear unto themselves, but with the great commission ringing in their ears, they went forth everywhere and preached the Word.

A good religious experience is worth much, and it may be related as occasion offers; but the brother who does nothing else to convince the world that he is a disciple of Christ will soon discover, if he will look around, that when he opens his mouth, he is as one that beateth the air.

THE SURE FOUNDATION.

"We have not followed cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty." It is evident from these words that St. Peter had been preaching Jesus as the sure foundation, the chief corner-stone in Zion. To the "strangers scattered" abroad he writes, not to apologize for his preaching, but to comfort and strengthen them by the assurance that he had been an eye-witness of the majesty and power of the Lord Jesus, and could, therefore, proclaim with confidence all that he had seen and heard.

Upon Jesus Christ as the sure foundation did Moses and the prophets build. So did all the apostles; so have true Christians through all the ages. There is no other rock of safety—"none other name under heaven given among men whereby we may be saved." Christ is as able to save to-day as he was the day he arose from the dead, seeing he is in heaven seated at the right hand of God, and ever liveth to make intercession for men.

But if the foundation be destroyed? That were impossible. The foundation is self-existent and eternal—Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God." The doctrine of Christ's eternity and self-existence is rational and logical. It is thus set forth by Daniel Drew: "That which was in the beginning must have existed prior to the beginning; that which existed prior to the beginning must have been without a beginning; that which was without a beginning must have existed from eternity, and that which existed from eternity must be God." And so we believe.

It is no argument against the eternity and self-existence of our Lord to say that the only demonstrable fact we have is the knowledge of his existence limited to the years in which it is affirmed that he was in the flesh. Nor does the fact that he was manifested in the flesh militate against his divinity or the idea of his pre-existence. The very terms in which the doctrine is stated in the Scriptures, without any attempt at concealment, carries with them the idea of pre-existence and divinity: "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth." In other words, he that existed from eternity assumed human shape, lived among men, and manifested the glory of God. What if this is a mystery? It is no more unreasonable or incredible than the facts of creation and inspiration through the power of the Holy Ghost.

Of course, we must accept John's statement concerning the Word as a matter of revelation—a revelation confirmed by the Son himself, who said to the unbelieving Jews "Before Abraham was, I am." There is no trouble in believing the statement. As our Lord showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs—appearing to Peter, then to the eleven, and afterwards to more than five hundred brethren at once, and in other ways proved his identity—so, by infallible proofs before his crucifixion, he demonstrated his power and Godhead. When we see such power as Christ exercised joined with matchless wisdom and a spotless life, we are prepared to accept him as God's Son, manifest in the flesh. And, more, we are prepared to appreciate the faith of his apostles, and to accept their testimony concerning him.

No argument can destroy the force of these great truths, or undermine the faith of one who has built his hope of heaven on the sure foundation, for underlying and sustaining his reason is the satisfactory experience of salvation through Christ. There is no way to upset experience except by making shipwreck of the faith. Even that does not necessarily mean that one who has lost his hope in Christ has withdrawn intellectual assent to his divinity and power to save. But loss of experience must precede both the loss of hope and the withdrawal of assent to the atoning merits of Christ. In either case the apostasy may be so complete as to cause the apostate absolutely to forget that he was "ever purged from his old sins." But as long as he holds on he experiences the joys of salvation, and nothing can shake him from his sure repose. He may be wholly unable to answer many questions, and for a time may be confused, but like the blind man to whom Jesus gave sight, he can confidently say, "One thing I know, whereas I was blind, now I see." That sort of an answer does not always silence gainsayers, but it is an infallible cure of doubt, and a strong refuge to the soul harassed and perplexed by enemies.

In these days of great learning and criticism, when strong efforts are being made to eliminate as much of the supernatural as possible from our religion, and to reduce our Holy Scriptures down to what the scholars call "the fundamentals," leaving nothing in reality but the historic Christ, and an atonement out of which has been drawn every atom of redeeming blood, it becomes doubly necessary for the ordinary Christian to hold on to his experience, and boldly testify, as did John and Peter: "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you;" "For we can not but speak the things we have seen and heard." They were eye-witnesses of his majesty. We are no less the witnesses of Christ, for there is born in us a hope of eternal life that is unspeakable and full of glory. We stand on the sure foundation, and nothing can shake our faith. Jesus is our refuge and safety; our comfort as "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

THROWING OFF THE SHACKLES.

If changing from orthodoxy to liberalism does nothing more for a man than free him from the shackles of theology, even though that theology be irrational, it has not helped him enough to talk about, let alone to lift him into notoriety. What are the shackles of theology, anyhow, and what is the freedom into which one comes when the shackles are thrown off? The truth is, there are no such shackles. Men are not seized and dragged into a theological pen, like wild mustangs, lassoed and corralled in spite of their efforts to get away. To give expression to such an idea is evidence that the man has been deceived; else, in entering the ministry of any orthodox communion, he perpetrates a fraud.

The supposition is that, when an intelligent man makes application for admission into the ministry of any denomination, he knows what he is doing, and the church to which he makes application causes him to be examined—not merely to find out what he knows, or whether he believes its doctrines and accepts its polity, but to determine also whether he knows his own mind.

It is supposed, also, that he is honest, and really believes the doctrines of the church whose ministry he has entered. Having once entered, there is no law, human or divine, that binds him to remain any longer than he desires. He may retire at any time, whether his views change or not. But while he abides, he is expected to conform in his teachings to the doctrines of the church. Consistency requires this, and his own vows thus bind him. If there be a creedless church to which he may go and preach all sorts of doctrines, so much the worse both for him and the church.

The question naturally arises: If a man is anxious to be freed from the shackles of theology, why should he seek the communion of any church? Why not be a free-thinker, and use a free lance, and be done with it? If we see the matter aright, he can not change from one church to another without having accepted the theology of the one as well as having renounced the creed of the other. Why, for example, should one leave an orthodox church and unite with the Unitarian? For the sake of liberty, we are told. Not so. He does it because he has espoused the doctrine of Unitarianism. Is a Unitarian minister allowed to preach what he pleases? Perhaps so. But what about his honesty if he preaches doctrines contrary to Unitarianism? If he takes no vows, certainly his conscience binds him to preach the truth as he sees it, and nothing is more intolerable than the truth. He would be knavish as well as foolish to stand in a Unitarian pulpit and preach doctrines which it is the avowed purpose of Unitarianism to destroy. Unitarianism denies the doctrine of the Trinity as held and taught by orthodox Christians. This carries with it a denial of the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ. Can a man stand in a Unitarian pulpit and proclaim the divinity of Christ, and his power to save men from sin? If not, where is his liberty? What has he gained in the way of liberty by going from one extreme to the other?

We do not doubt the honesty of men who change from orthodoxy to Unitarianism, but we are bound, as a rule, to class them with those whom St. Paul declared had "fallen from grace." Without exception, when a minister leaves one evangelical church for another, and gives his reasons to the public, he magnifies the grace of God in Christ, but such is not always the case when one turns from orthodoxy to Unitarianism. Christ is nothing save as a model. The doctrine of atonement through his blood is irrational, and is set aside as unworthy of consideration. Reason guides, not faith. Freedom of thought is gloried in, not the cross. A whole discourse can be delivered and Christ entirely ignored. The emancipated soul can talk about his freedom of thought, but say not a word about freedom from sin. All such boasting is vain.

To reach such a point may cost a struggle, but when the struggle is over, and the step taken, let there be silence. The cheap and shallow talk indulged at times is simply disgusting. For a college-bred man, who has taken a course in theology, it is an outrage on common sense and common honesty to be prating about getting loose from ecclesiasticism, and throwing off the shackles of theology. He has never been in bondage. He has simply renounced one creed and adopted another. That is all there is of it.

ANARCHY AND THE SALOONS.

There can be no doubt that anarchy is both born and fostered in the liquor saloons of our country. They are fit places for such work. But if we wait to get rid of the saloon in the hope of getting rid of anarchy, it will be a long time before we see the last of the monster. The saloon is an institution of the country, so strongly favored by the people who are re-enforced every day by hordes of foreigners born and bred to the drink habit, that, however zealous and active anti-saloon men and all orders of temperance people and prohibitionists may be, it will be years in accomplishing the overthrow of the home of anarchy. In the meantime, without decisive action of some kind, the enemy will prosecute his purposes, and strike down other rulers of our land.

For years past we have heard much talk of high license as a means of lessening the number of drinking-places, and making the saloon respectable. But so far the enforcement of high license for such purposes has been a failure. It has swelled the revenue, but the number of saloons steadily increases, except where prohibition rules, and the saloon is no more respectable to-day than it was ten years ago. The theorists who advocated this policy seemed to have overlooked the fact that unprincipled men could raise any amount of money to pay a license fee. High license doubtless drove out a number of moneyless men, but their going out only made room for others, and, perhaps, worse men. If there is anything in high license as a remedy, now is the time to prove it.

But the trouble will be to get politicians and liquor leagues to see the dependence of anarchy on liquor, and on saloons as hot-beds for its propagation. And yet everbody else seems to see it. We never read of an anarchist meeting that is not held in somebody's drinking-place. Both men and women who inflame the passions of the idle and vicious go to a saloon, and there get together their disciples, and those whom they seek to bring under their influence. Let us, then, overthrow the saloon. We exhort to this because every saloon closed, especially those characterized as dives, lessens the number of the breeding-places of evil; if not of anarchy, of something else that is detrimental to society and the State. In the meantime let our statesmen deal directly with anarchy. We are sure that if all the low dives of our city were closed, breeding-places for anarchy would be considerably lessened. Perhaps if strenuous efforts were made to root out and destroy anarchy, there would be fewer dives. Though not wise enough to devise a plan, we are perfectly willing for some one else to work out the problem.

HON. A. H. GEORGE.

Hon. A. H. George, of Carrollton, Miss., a strong personal friend of the editor of this ADVOCATE, is a candidate for the office of Secretary of State, to succeed the late Col. J. L. Power. There are three other candidates for the position; so we learn from the daily press. We do not know the gentlemen—not even their names—but we know Hon. A. H. George. He is a worthy citizen, never failing to stand for law and order, even in the face of mobs. He is honored and trusted by his fellow-citizens, filling, as he does, the place of State Senator by their voter. He is a consistent and devoted Christian, and is always found on the right side of all moral questions. We believe him thoroughly competent to fill the office of Secretary of State, and that, if elected, he will administer its affairs faithfully, and in the interest of the State. We wish his competitors no harm, but feel free to say we would be glad to see our friend elected.

Bishop Candler gains on the respect and affection of the Missouri brethren as he lengthens his stay in the State. Between Conferences he put in some strong and telling work in St. Louis at the Church Extension Rally recently held in that city. The Bishop paid a high tribute to the aggressiveness of St. Louis Methodism. Other cities might take lessons from St. Louis.

SPECIAL ATTENTION.

We are sending out accounts this week to a large number of our subscribers. The amount each owes is small, but we hope for many responses. Our expenses now are far outrunning our receipts. We need the money. Please, friends, respond promptly, and help us. Do not wait until Conference. The accounts were made out by an inexperienced hand, and possibly mistakes have been made. If so, we will gladly correct. But let us hear from you at the earliest moment.

JNO. W. BOSWELL,
Editor and Publisher.

PERSONAL.

Rev. Richard Wilkinson, pastor of our church at Aberdeen, has been enjoying a pleasant vacation with relatives in Ohio.

Rev. Thos. Carter, professor of Greek in Tulane University, has just completed a tour, embracing portions of Southern Mississippi and Louisiana, in the interest of the university.

The good women of Parker Memorial Church have fixed up the parsonage in fine style. It is an elegant little residence. The bachelor pastor has moved in and is as happy as any man in the city.

Rev. H. B. Carre, professor in Centenary College, preached at Rayne Memorial last Sunday morning and afternoon, in the absence of Dr. LaPrade, who was called to St. Louis to dedicate the new Immanuel Church.

Rev. W. H. LaPrade, Jr., for several years past a member of the St. Louis Conference, has been transferred to the North Georgia Conference. He will doubtless have a hearty welcome, being a native of the country.

Prof. H. M. Hamil, who has accepted work in the Sunday-school Department of our church, entered upon his duties the first of this month. Much is expected of him, for he is said to be an expert in his chosen line.

Dr. W. B. Murrah, president of Millsaps College, who has been to England as a delegate to the Ecumenical Conference, is expected home some time this week. We hope he will be greeted by a mighty host of boys at Millsaps.

Rev. Fielding Marvin, son of the sainted Bishop E. M. Marvin, is taking high rank in his Conference, and is regarded as one of its ablest men. This is gratifying to the many thousands of the late Bishop's friends, who are scattered all over the South.

To the great delight of the Carrollton Avenue congregation, Bishop Keener attended the service Sunday morning last, and assisted in the administration of the holy communion. Mrs. Keener also, who has been feeble for a long while, was able to attend. Dr. S. S. Keener, the presiding elder, did the preaching, morning and evening.

A note from our brother, H. G. Goodwyn, editor of the Colfax (La.) Chronicle, informs us that Randie, the little son of Rev. W. H. Hill, has been sick for three weeks, and now lies in a critical condition. The family are very much distressed, as well as exhausted, with their long and faithful vigil. We ask the prayers of the brethren in behalf of the afflicted one, and also the sorrowing parents.

Bishop Galloway, after a long absence, attending the Brazil Mission Conference, and the great Conference in London, reached home last week. He is in fine health, and expresses himself well pleased with what he saw and heard at the Ecumenical. Now, we hope the brethren will allow him to rest until the middle of November, when he will resume his round of Conferences. But who ever heard of preachers giving a Bishop any rest?

A union service in Hot Springs, Ark., was held in the Opera House in memory of Mr. McKinley. Dr. Julien C. Brown, pastor of Central Church in that city, was selected to deliver the sermon. It was an eloquent tribute to the great man and prince who had fallen. The leading paper of Hot Springs says the sermon created a sensation—the congregation being swayed at will by the great preacher. He closed with his audience in a flood of tears.

Notice.

To the Pastors, Sunday-school and Epworth League Workers of the Meridian District:

The Sunday-school and Epworth League Conference for Meridian district will convene on the evening of Oct. 22, at 7:30 o'clock at South Side (Meridian) Church, and continue through the twenty-fifth.

Each Epworth League and Sunday-school is expected to send one delegate. Please elect your delegate at once, and forward name to Rev. L. F. Alford, South Side, Meridian. All pastors in the district are especially invited to be present.

The programme has been arranged, and as soon as the parts have all been assigned, will be published.

Let the pastors and workers do all in their power to make the Conference a success, and be present at the opening session, and stay to the close of the Conference.

Our programme is gotten up somewhat on the Institute plan, and we intend to make the Conference practical and helpful, and ask that all who attend feel free to take part in the discussions.

Come to give help and receive help, praying the blessing and guidance of God upon our gathering, that it may be a great uplift to our work among the young people of our district. Very sincerely,

W. D. HAWKINS,
Dist. Sec.

The Shiloh Camp Meeting.

"The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

In the history of this grand old camp ground, where so many battles have been fought, and so many victories won for our Lord, there has never been a more glorious victory than the one gained during the meeting recently held. The meeting began on Friday night, Sept. 6, and continued until the night of the twelfth. There was not a single dull service. The Holy Spirit had charge from the beginning, and the meeting grew in power and interest until the close.

It was the greatest meeting I was ever in. I never saw so many direct answers to prayer, many of which I might mention. I never saw Christians work so earnestly. There seemed to be but one purpose in every heart—to get people saved. It was an old-fashion Methodist revival, where sinners under deep conviction came to the altar and were gloriously saved, and Christians got happy and shouted aloud the praises of God. We did not attempt to count the conversions, but one hundred is a low estimate. I think there were many more. We had sixty additions to our church, several new family altars, and many Christians lifted into a richer and sweeter experience and fuller consecration to the Lord's work. Some old feuds were settled, enemies reconciled, some who had not spoken in many years. These are only some of the results; eternity alone will reveal the great and blessed results of this meeting.

Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., led the meeting, and did more than half the preaching. Bro. Bass is a man full of the Holy Ghost and faith. He preaches the old-time gospel with the old-time power, and sinners are saved in the good old-time way. He is thoroughly orthodox, rides no hobbies, fights nothing but sin. He loves the church, and every sermon helps the church and helps the pastor. God bless Bro. Bass; we will never forget him.

The following brethren were also present, and assisted in the preaching: T. L. Mellen, A. F. Watkins, C. N. Guice, D. C Langford, R. Selby, W. D. Dominick, and R. S. Gale. The preaching was all good.

Bros. R. A. Sibley, Sr.; Geo. W. Huddleston and J. F. Robinson were also present, and aided much in prayer and otherwise. May God bless them all!

One of the most pleasant and profitable features of the meeting was the presence of Miss Bottie Hughes, of our China Mission. We will not soon forget the address she gave us Thursday morning. God bless Miss Bottie! Her coming has been an inspiration and benediction to us.

There are other godly men and women who labored faithfully in the altar and were very helpful in the meeting. I would like to mention each by name, but their names are written in heaven, and their reward is sure. The singing was good; led by Bros. Will Bass and C. N. Guice. We used the Young People's Hymnal. We thank everyone who contributed in any way to the success of the meeting, and "unto Him who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, unto him be glory by Jesus Christ, world without end. Amen!"

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

ABBEVILLE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: About one year ago my good friend and college mate, Rev. P. R. Knickerbocker, gave me a cordial invitation to come to this Conference. It was very unexpected to me, and having been a member of the Alabama Conference for three years, and knowing it to be one of the best, it was with some misgivings that I decided to come. Thus far I have no cause for regret.

We have been making some progress on this work, both in material and spiritual things. In the way of furnishing the parsonage we have spent about seventy-five dollars. In repairing and improving churches, one hundred and fifty.

I have secured over forty subscribers to Go Forward, and am going to do my best for a full report on missions. I know that we will pay more for missions than this work usually pays for all purposes included in the Conference assessment, and I am not going to slight the other cause, either.

We have had some good meetings, which were a blessing to the church, and in which we received several members on profession of faith. Have baptized over thirty infants and children.

This being a strong Catholic community, it is impossible for Methodism to do what she is really capable of doing. Emerson says that coal is a civilizer, and that it is portable climate; meaning thereby that the rays of a tropical sun can be carried to the polar circle. But after reaching that cold region it can only warm and light a few homes. Methodism is a civilizer, and is portable Christianity—aggressive Christianity. It contains the benign rays of the great Sun of Righteousness; but within the polar circle of Catholicism it only warms and lights up a few homes.

I was very much pleased with what you and Brother Drake had to say about a Summer Institute at Seashore, and have been listening for some one else to second the motion. That move is in keeping with the growth and aggressive spirit of Methodism, which has developed the best set of preachers to be found in our fair Southland.

Some weeks ago I heard an intelligent Baptist state to a large audience that they had over five hundred preachers in this State, and that for a large class of them he would not give twenty-five cents per carload. Of course, I do not know about their ability—he dare. But I hope the day will never come when anyone would think of placing such a low estimate upon the Methodist ministry of this country. Therefore, I hope that new avenues will be continually opening for our approach to the great centre of Truth.

A. C. SMITH.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

LEAKSVILLE, MISS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Thinking that some one might be interested in a few words from this field of labor, I pen the following items, viz.:

The protracted meetings of this work are fast coming to a close. Many have been saved, while many, as usual, have put off 'till a more convenient season.

Our first protracted meeting, in connection with a "Missionary Rally," was conducted by that saintly man of God, Dr. Weems, of the Mississippi Conference, now pastor of Central Church, of Meridian. He moved our little town as never before, won the hearts of many, causing many of them to strive for a more Christian-like life. The people want you to come again, Doctor.

Our next meeting was to have been conducted by the pastor of East End, Meridian; a man noted for his power with God and man. But washouts on the railroads caused by the heavy rains prevented his coming to our rescue. The pastor did all the preaching, and we had a good time, spiritually. The Lord was with us and blest many souls. No accessions to the church. By way of parenthesis, would say we had none when Doctor Weems was with us.

Our next meeting was carried on by the skillful labors of Rev. J. T. Nicholson. We had a gracious outpouring of the Spirit then. Bro. Nicholson preached in his usual power and demonstration of the Spirit. Had four accessions by faith, the church greatly revived. He was honored with the pleasure of acting presiding elder, pro tem., our beloved presiding elder, Bro. Guice, being absent. Glad to say this church (Adamsville) was the first on the Leaksville circuit to pay up all claims in full. The people of this church would be glad to have him come and preach again for them.

Our next meeting was held at the Breland Chapel, Bro. Allen Breland doing all the preaching. God has honored his work. A number of the members were reclaimed from a backslidden condition, several bright conversions, some entered the experience of entire sanctification. Ten are to be received into the church as a result. We are now in the midst of a protracted meeting, with Bro. Breland still doing the work as God directs him.

Glad to say that Leaksville circuit is gaining ground religiously. I think I am safe in saying we will carry up our Conference claims in full, and preacher's salary in advance of last year. The Lord be praised for his wondrous work among the children of men. Let the good work continue.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

TYRO CIRCUIT.

We have just closed a revival at Looxshoma, Miss. None who attended had seen such Holy-Ghost power. Men spoke as by inspiration. More than one hundred adult sinners were saved at the altar, and they glorified God. The people came for many miles. When the large church would receive no more, hundreds would stand quietly without till the services were over. The whole community was transformed by the Spirit of God. Money was pledged, and the church will soon be repaired there. That was the fifth revival on the circuit. In all, there have been more than one hundred conversions. Many backsliders have been reclaimed and the people revived until nearly all can testify to the witness of the Spirit. A great spiritual wave has swept over the charge. Tyro circuit is at the front. We have good people, and God is doing great things for them.

Eighty-five per cent. of the general collections has been secured in cash and subscription. They will be paid in full. Some necessary repairs have been made on the parsonage and nice furnishings put in lately.

We are indebted to Rev. O. L. Savage, of Courtland, Miss., who thrilled and helped the people of Mt. Vernon for one week with his preaching, prayers, and songs; and to Rev. W. S. Lagrone, the presiding elder, for four edifying and uplifting sermons at Free Springs.

God bless you, Dr. Boswell. You are giving us a fine paper.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

A CHRISTIAN TRAINING SCHOOL for Girls, opened in 1891. Is this school the school for your daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. The rear three stories and basement main building 200x52 feet, with wing 60x40 feet, wide verandas, large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights, water on every floor, with hydrogloss every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building), Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (hire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewer); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

Character: I. Christian—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. Thorough—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "Thorough" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. Successful—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to patrons. Growth: Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 126, 127, 151, 176. Number of officers and teachers: In 1891, six; at present, twenty. Value of grounds and building in 1891, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach. The practical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Don't Know it.

How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours, a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys: if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble: too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What to Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in 50c. and $1. sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful discovery and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

The Boy Lincoln's Love for a Pet Pig.

"One beautiful, moonlit night, we were walking on a country road, and noticed, just ahead of us, six little pigs with their noses close together. Lincoln said: 'Those little things are lost; let's help them to find their mother.' We stirred them up, and, with grunt, sniff, and snort, they ran down the road. At length they found a hole in the fence, and the mother in the field, just beyond. Lincoln said: 'I never see a pig that I do not think of my first pet. When a boy, six years old, I went over to a neighboring farm. A litter of striped piggies had just been born, and I was so interested that they could not get me away from them. The man filled me with supreme delight by saying, "You may have one of those pigs, if you can get him home." "I will attend to that," I said. I had on a tow shirt, reaching to my ankles—one which my mother had woven—and fastened at the neck by a wooden button my father had made. I made a fold in the garment, and in it, as a sack, I carried my pig home. I got an old bee-gum—a hollow log—put cornshucks, stalks, and leaves into it for a bed, and tucked him away for the night. He squealed for his mother nearly all night. In the morning I carried him feed meal and bran, bread, milk—everything I could think of—but he would not touch any of them. He did not seem to have time or energy for anything but to squeal.

"'At length my mother said to me: "Abe, take that pig back home; it will die, if you keep it here." What my mother said was always the truth and the law to me, and, though it almost broke my heart, I took the pig back. His mother was so glad to see him, and he so glad to see her! After she had given him his dinner, he looked so pretty that I could not stand it, and I begged the man to let me take him back. I put him in the tow sack, as I had done before, and took him to our house. Mother protested and I cried; she broke down and relented, and said I might try him one day more. He would not eat a thing I brought him, and mother sent me back with him again. I carried him back and forth to his meals for two weeks, when we taught him to eat, and he was mine for good. That pig was my companion. I played with him, and taught him tricks; we used to play hide-and-go-seek; I can see his little face now, peeking around the corner of the house, to see whether I was coming after him. After awhile he got too heavy for me to carry around, and then he followed me everywhere—to the barn, to the plowed ground, and to the woods. Many a day I spent in the woods, brushing the leaves away, helping him to find the acorns and nuts. Sometimes he would have a lazy spell and rub against my legs, and stop in front of me, and lie down before me, and say, in the language which I understood, "Abe, why don't you carry me, as you used to do?" When he grew larger, I turned the tables on him, and made him carry me; and he did it just as happily as I ever performed the same service for him. Father fed him corn—piles of it—and how he did eat! He grew larger—too large for his happiness and mine. There was talk around the house of the hog being about fat enough to kill. At the table I heard father say he was going to kill the hog the next day. My heart got as heavy as lead. The next morning father had the barrel of water ready, and was heating the stones that were to be thrown into it, to make hot water for the scalding. I slipped out, and took my pig with me to the forest. When father found out what had happened, he yelled as loud as he could: "You, Abe, fetch back that hog! You, Abe! you, Abe! fetch back that hog!" The louder he called, the farther and faster we went, till we were out of hearing of the voice. We stayed in the woods till night. On returning, I was severely scolded. After a restless night, I rose early, and went to get my pig for another day's hiding, but found that father had risen before me, and fastened my pet in the pen. I knew that all hope was gone. I did not eat any breakfast, but started for the woods. I had not gone far, when I heard the pig squeal; and, knowing what it meant, I ran as fast as I could, to get away from the sound. Being quite hungry at noon, I started for home. Reaching the edge of the clearing, I saw the hog, dressed, hanging from a pole, near the house, and I began to blubber. I could not stand it, and went far back into the woods again, where I found some nuts that satisfied my appetite till night, when I returned home. They could not get me to take any the meat; neither tenderloin, nor rib, nor sausage, nor sonse; and, even months after, when the cured ham came on the table, it made me sad and sick to look at it.

"'The next morning I went into the yard, and saw the red place on the ground, where my pet's throat had been cut with the knife. Taking a chip, I scraped the blood and the hair, that had been scattered, into a pile, and burned it up. Then I found some soft dirt, which I carried in the folds of my tow shirt, and strewed over the ground, to cover up every trace of the killing of my pet. The dirt did not do its work very well; for, to this day, whenever I see a pig like the little fellows we have just met in the road, my heart goes back to my pet pig, and to the old home and the dear ones there.'"

Tears filled the captain's eyes when Mr. Lincoln finished this simple, touching recital of his lost pet's fate. "It gave me a clearer insight into the great heart of Lincoln," he said, "than years of close association could have done.' The kindness of his heart was not merely veneer—it was the grain of solid wood. He could not help being tender any more than the song birds about his cabin could keep from singing, or the sweetbrier his mother planted could avoid being fragrant. It was easy, even then, for me to see how the boy, so tender to his first pet, might grow to the stature of the man who became one of the noblest exponents of American manhood, and whose career will be quoted as a model as long as our nation endures.—Success.

It's His Customer.

A New York merchant called to a little bootblack to give him a shine. The little fellow came rather slowly for one of his guild, and planted his box down under the merchant's foot. Before he could get his brushes out another large boy ran up, and calmly pushing the little one aside, said:

"Here, you go sit down, Jimmy."

The merchant at once became indignant at what he took to be a piece of outrageous bullying, and sharply told the newcomer to clear out.

"Oh, dat's all right, boss," was he reply. "I'm only going to do it for him; you see he's been sick in the hospital for more than a month, and can't do much work yet, so us boys all turn in and give him a lift when we can."

"Is that so, Jimmy?" asked the merchant, turning to the smaller boy.

"Yes, sir," wearily answered the boy, and as he looked up the pallid, pinched face could be discerned even through the grime that covered it. "He does it for me—if you'll let him."

"Certainly; go ahead;" and as the bootblack plied the brush the merchant plied him with questions. "You say that all the boys help him in this way?"

"Yes, sir. When they ain't got no jobs themselves, and Jimmy gets one, they turns in and helps him."

"What percentage do you charge him on each job?"

"Hey?" queried the boy—"don't know what you mean."

"I mean what part of the money do you give Jimmy, and how much do you keep?"

"Bet your life I don't keep none; I ain't such a sneak."

"You give it all to him?"

"Yes, I do. All the boys give up what they get on his job. I'd like to catch any feller sneaking it on a sick boy."

The shine being completed, the merchant handed the urchin a quarter, saying:

"I guess you're a pretty good fellow, so you keep a dime, and give the rest to Jimmy."

"Can't do it, sir; it's his customer. Here you be, Jim."

He threw him the coin and was off like a shot after a customer for himself—a veritable rough diamond. There are many such lads, with warm and generous hearts under their ragged coats.—Presbyterian.

Be on the Watch.

Mildred sat under the shadiest tree she could find that was near the pump. The shade and the pump were both indispensable: it was such a sizzling hot day. The sun had baked all Mildred's mud pies "to a turn," and they stood in little uneven rows, parched and browned and crisp, waiting to be eaten!

"Oh! dear me, how hot it is!" sighed Mildred, trying to cool her warm little face on the soft grass; but even the grass under the shady tree was hot.

"But, I'm glad I'm me instead of a horse," mused on the little voice, while Mildred watched a wagon toiling up the little hill toward her.

"That's Mr. Cooper's horse, an' I guess he's most melted, the way he looks. He's all covered over with soapsuds. I'm glad he isn't me."

The poor horse toiled on with drooping head and steaming sides. When he got to Mildred's pump he stopped wistfully, but the trough was empty.

"G'lang, Dobbin; you can't have any," Mr. Cooper called, crossly. "I'm too wore out to get out o' this wagon again, to say nothin' of pumpin' a mess o' water. You've got to wait—g'lang!"

"Yes, oh! do wait!" cried Mildred, jumping up suddenly. For Dobbin had looked down at her with pleading eyes; and, then, s'posing she's been Dobbin!

"I can uncheck him. I'll stand up on the edge o' the trough," she said, cheerfully. "And I'll pump. He looks so thirsty."

Every time the pump handle went up Mildred went up, too, and then came down again on the wooden platform with steady hits. She could get more water that way.

And so Dobbin had his long, cool drink, and actually went off at a brisk little trot.

After that a good many other panting horses came plodding by, with wistful side glances toward the pump, and Mildred's clear, pleasant little voice offered them all a drink. People rarely stopped at Mildred's pump. It wasn't a public watering place and the trough was small and usually empty, and perhaps people had found out how hard the pump handle worked up and down.

It was hot, hard work. Mildred's face got very red and wet, and her feet ached with the thuds on the platform, and her arms—oh, dear me, how they ached with the pump handle!

Between times she rested under the shady tree, feeling so thankful in her heart that she wasn't a horse!

Aunt Winnie watched her from her invalid-chair in the window.

"Girlie," she said, softly, when Mildred went in at supper time, "do you know what you've been doing?"

"Yes'm, resting—and pumping," Mildred said, promptly.

"And giving a 'cup'—a great many beautiful, kind cups—of 'cold water,' dear," Aunt Winnie added, with a hug.—Zion's Herald.

Good-Night.

There is a tender sweetness about some of our common phrases of affectionate greeting, simple and unobtrusive as they are, which falls like dew upon the heart. Good night! The little one lisps it, as, gowned in white, with shining face and hands, and prayers said, she toddles off to bed. Sisters and brothers exchange the wish; parents and children; friends and friends. Familiar use has robbed it of its significance to some of us; we repeat it automatically without much thought.

But consider. We are as voyagers, putting off from time to time upon an unexplored sea. Our barks of life set sail and go onward into the darkness; and we, asleep on our pillows, take no such care as we do when awake and journeying by daylight. Of the perils of the night, whatever they may be, we take no heed. An unsleeping vigilance watches over us, but it is the vigilance of One stronger and wiser than we, who is the Eternal Good. God and God spring from the same root, are the same in meaning. "Good-night" is only "Good-night," or "God guard the night." It would be a churlish household in which these gentle forms of speech were ignored or did not exist.—Our Young Folks.

Shadi's Prayer.

A missionary lady had a little Hindu orphan named Shadi living with her. She had taught him about Jesus, and one night, when he was six years old, she said to him:

'Now, pray a little prayer of your own."

And what do you think Shadi's prayer was? It is this:

"Dear Jesus, make me like what you were when you were six years old."—Child's Gem.

MRS. CHARLOTTE APPLEWHITE (nee Everette) was born in Macon county, Ga., May 30, 1819; married Samuel Applewhite, Feb. 5, 1835, and died at her home in Webster parish, La., where she had lived since 1861, July 14, 1901. Sister Applewhite was converted and joined the Methodist Church, South, in 1845, and lived a devoted Christian life. For a long time she had been a confirmed invalid, being bed-ridden for ten or twelve years. It was the writer's privilege to often visit her in her affliction, and as long as life shall last will the memory of those sacred visits remain as a permanent, abiding possession. Such patience, such fortitude, such devotion to her Lord one rarely witnesses in this life. She could not go out and toil in the Lord's vineyard, but her sweet submissiveness and patient suffering were such an inspiration to the faintest hearts that they could enter into the thickest of the fight, or bear the burden of the day. She was always bright, cheerful, and happy—happy in the Lord. Her life was like the caged nightingale. While she could not flit and chirp among the trees, adding joy and pleasure to the glad dawn of life's early day, she could remain within her cage and make music and melody for those engaged in the serious burdens and drudgery of life. How often, when under some sore disappointment or discouragement that comes into the life of a young preacher, we have been sent from her presence to our knees to triumphantly conquer ourselves and face with cheer and gladness the duties of our commission! How thankful we are that we knew her! She died as she lived—patiently awaiting God's will. Her devoted daughter, Mrs. Ola Edwards (her only living child), wrote: "Mama was patient to the last; never complained at her affliction; was rational until about twelve hours before she died. She passed away so calmly; just simply stopped breathing. She told us several times the last week that she would not be with us many days longer; she was just waiting our Father's summons." She is now forever at rest; her pain is ended, her sufferings are over, her patience is rewarded.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

MRS. KITTIE CLARK was born in Alabama. She was left motherless when quite young, but was brought up in the home of her brother, Wyatt Wooten, where those noble principles were developed, which had been inherited from lofty parentage, that marked her after life with true womanly virtues. She came to Canton, Miss., when quite young. Having been reared in wealth, her educational advantages were good. She was married to Mr. Warren Clark in November, 1862. Bright children came into this home, but only to tarry a little while. These ties seemed to strengthen her religious character. After seven and a half years of congenial married life her husband died. In widowhood she has walked for thirty years. During these years she has made her home with her husband's parents. Both of these have died recently. She and her sister-in-law, Miss Douglas Clark, have lived in sweet harmony for several years in their little home in Forest, Miss. For some time she has been fading from the effects of that fell destroyer, consumption. While her sufferings have been great, she patiently waited the Master's pollening touches until he said, "It is enough; come up higher." As home in spirit, Methodist from principle, a true woman in every sense was she. We laid her wearied body to rest after appropriate service in the church in Forest, Miss., Aug. 13, 1901, in the presence of those who loved and admired her.

D. P. BRADFORD,

The loss sustained by the citizens of Aberdeen when it was known that ROBERT LOWRY was dead could not be measured. The sad news on the seventh of August, 1901. His sisters and only brother had come to blend their loving ministrations with those of his devoted friends of Aberdeen, but all were of no avail. The hour had come, and Robert responded without a murmur. The writer had been taken into his confidence, and the secrets of his life had been committed to him. What a revelation! what plans! what secret lores of purpose! It is seldom the privilege of a pastor to have a closer connection with a member's life. Robert Lowry's was a true soul. He had nothing to conceal; he was transparent to a fault. Loyal to his pastor, devoted to the church of which his father was an honored minister for years, ever ready to meet his obligations as a faithful son of the King, with an enviable record as a citizen and business man of the first rank, this man of God went home to meet the King in his beauty. The church has lost a worthy son; the pastor has lost a genuine friend; Aberdeen has lost one of her best citizens. May his mantle fall upon another son, and may a wise Father give a choice blessing to the stricken family!

RICHARD WILKINSON.

MRS. ELIZABETH E. DONAR was born in Little Rock, Ark., Dec. 12, 1830, and died in Hammond, La., Aug. 22, 1901. She was the daughter of Judge John Coulter and Mariah A. Pecter, who came to Louisiana and settled in Thibodeaux in 1833 and from thence to New Orleans in 1835. Sister Donar was converted and joined the Carondelet Street Methodist Church in 1849, her mother being one of the earlier members of that church. She was married to Mr. Dan Fraser in 1852. The result of this union was five sons and two daughters, six of whom are living. She moved with her husband and family to Texas, and was left a widow in 1861 in the town of Orange. She moved back to New Orleans in 1887, and from there to Hammond, La., in 1891, and was married to Mr. A. Donor, of that place, in 1896. It was the writer's privilege to know the subject of this sketch for a few months, but found that she loved the church of her youth, and was zealous for its prosperity. She died of rheumatism of the heart, and was sick only a short time. She leaves a husband, six children, and many relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. May the bereaved trust in Him who can heal the wounded spirit!

W. J. PONTAR, Her Pastor.

WILLIAM CAPERS BURNHAM was born in the State of Alabama, Sept. 2, 1850. At an early age he moved to Rankin county, Miss., where he lived until his death, which occurred at his home near John's, June 23, 1901. Bro. Burnham was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in early life, and ever remained a faithful and useful member. His devotion to the church was beautiful; his place in the sanctuary was never vacant. The pastor had in him a faithful sympathizer, helper, and friend. The Sunday-school, of all church work, lay nearest his heart. For many years he served faithfully as superintendent. The children and young people all loved him and confided in him, because they knew him to be a man of God. His influence was always for good, and to-day, "he being dead, yet speaketh." Bro. Burnham knew Christ, and rejoiced in a conscious, present salvation. His godly life proved the genuineness of his Christian experience. We seldom find a man more particular in his life. He "abstained from the appearance of evil." A widow and seven children are left behind, all of whom, we trust, are on the way to meet him beyond the sky.

P. R. HANDIN.

WIGGINS FLOWERS LEWIS, son of F. W. and Mattie Lewis, was born near Crystal Springs, Miss., Nov. 26, 1872, and died in Pasquena county, Jan. 13, 1901. He was baptized by Rev. Geo. F. Thompson when an infant. His parents have been life-long members of the Methodist Church, and always tried to bring their children up in "the way they should go" by a godly walk, and teaching them the things of God. Wiggins was kind to his parents and obedient at home. Months before his death he began turning his attention to the things of God, and those with him had assurance that the prayers of mother and father were answered. The removal of this first-born son left a sad home and lonely hearts, but the comforts promised in the gospel have been realized by them.

W. T. GRIFFIN.

P. F. VAIDEN, infant son of W. A. and Ida C. Vaiden, departed this life June 18, 1901, aged one year five months and twenty-six days. Oh, how sad is death, though we know it is gain! The little tongue is still; his little chair is vacant. Oh, how we miss him! Home seems so changed without him; but, thank God! "of such is the kingdom of heaven." So, cheer up, father, mother, and children; little P. F. is standing at the beautiful gate watching for you. May you all meet him in that beautiful land, where God himself shall wipe all tears from your eyes! No death there, no sorrow; all is joy.

A Banker Praises Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy.

Worry kills lots of people and sometimes bankers. It impedes digestion, irritates the nervous system and in many ways destroys the health. If you are worried with business or other troubles, Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy will meet and nullify all ill effects. It cures indigestion and dyspepsia, tones up the stomach and thus insures calm, refreshing sleep and a good healthy and invigorating appetite.

What a Banker Says.

Mr. Chas. E. Currier, of the Atlanta National Bank, says: "I often use Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy for acute indigestion, and have always found that it gives immediate relief. I consider it a medicine of very high merit."

Price 50 cents per large bottle. For sale by druggists. Six bottles for $2.50 or sent by express on receipt of price by Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy Co., 107½ S. Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga.

SAMPLE BOTTLE FREE.

The law of associations which goes into effect in France next Tuesday is expected to lead to the bitterest struggle known in that country for many years.

The Board of American Missions will resist the demand of $110,000 as ransom for the release of Miss Stone, of Chelsea, Mass., now held by Bulgarian brigands.

Francis Saisen, the French anarchist, who attempted last year to assassinate the Shah of Persia at the Paris Exposition, died in a penal settlement at Cayenne, French Guiana.

Alarming reports are current in London regarding the condition of King Edward's throat. His Majesty has been put upon a regimen, and is said to be giving way under the strain.

It is reported from Buffalo that the sale of rice in and around that city has increased 50 per cent. since the Exposition opened and the public was introduced to the Louisiana and Texas rice kitchen.

Lord Kitchener has requested the War Office to send him reinforcements of mounted men. The requisition can not be supplied. It is thought in London that Kitchener is forcing a quarrel on the War Office. Radical papers condemn him.

In the first international yacht race at New York, the Columbia defeated the Shamrock II. in one of the closest contests ever sailed in American or European waters, crossing the finish line 39 seconds ahead of the Shamrock II. With her time allowance, the Columbia won by one minute and twenty-two seconds.

The British authorities are showing a disposition to modify the Clayton-Bulwer treaty by agreeing that the United States may fortify the proposed Nicaragua Canal. It can not be denied that the obstructive attitude of England in this Nicaraguan matter has produced a very painful impression in the United States.

We have been so constantly informed since the capture of Aguinaldo that the Philippine insurgents have been pacified and that the war is over, that public attention has been turned away from the islands to other quarters. The information of the massacre of a company of our troops by insurgents of the island of Samar comes therefore as a startling surprise. The men were shot down at their breakfast table, without the faintest suspicion of an enemy at hand.

A Prominent Memphian Writes.

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised me to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced using Lemon Elixir.

R. L. ROCCO,
206 Hernando St., Memphis, Tenn.

A Card.

This is to certify that I used Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for neuralgia of the head and eyes with the most marked benefit to my general health. I would gladly have paid $500 for the relief it has given me at a cost of two or three dollars. H. A. BEALL,

Glances at the World.

It appears as if the trial of persons suspected of conspiracy to murder Gov. Goebel, of Kentucky, more than two years ago, will never end. How many persons thus suspected, and have been tried, we do not know, but the number is, perhaps, half a dozen. Several have been convicted and sentenced—one or two to life imprisonment, and at least one to death. One of the suspects condemned to life imprisonment has been granted a new hearing, and at this writing is undergoing trial. The Republican governor, Taylor, who was also suspected, fled to Indiana when Mr. Goebel was declared elected, and has been there ever since. The governor of Indiana, believing it impossible for the suspects to secure an impartial trial, declined to honor a requisition made upon him by Mr. Goebel's successor. Another governor now occupies the executive chair in Indiana, and Kentucky's governor has made a call on him for the surrender of Mr. Taylor. Before honoring the papers the new governor proposes to know something of the manner of selecting juries in Kentucky, and to this end has sent a commissioner to investigate. The presumption is that he will act on the commissioner's report. It is unpleasant to know that one governor can not trust the courts of a sister State.

Not many years ago it was thought that in course of time the negro race would outnumber the white in the United States. The basis of this thought was the fact that before the war, when they had good homes and careful attention, they were more prolific than the whites. Such is not the case now, or, at least, in the struggle for the survival of the fittest, the negro is losing ground. There has been a steady decline in the percentage of the negroes as compared with the whites. This is because the negroes are not so prolific as formerly, else it is owing to a larger death-rate. The recent decline can not be attributed to immigration of whites, for immigration has not been so large during the past few years. If any fears exist on this subject, they may be allayed. Account for it as you please, the percentage of the negro population is decreasing. To day, as compared with the whites, it is only a fraction more than 11½ per cent. They have held their own in only four States. The proportion is constantly augmenting in the Northern States and decreasing in the Southern. This shifting will go on, and their dispersion among the Northern States, as the Picayune suggests, will help to settle the negro problem.

The Times-Democrat, of this city, under the question, "Isn't the Civil War Over Yet?" quotes the following utterance from one F. H. Challis, of New Hampshire. Mr. Challis writes as a member of the Sons of Veterans. He says: "I confess that it was with some misgivings that I read the letter which President Roosevelt wrote to a Southern friend, in which he said that he was proud of the fact that two of his uncles served in the Confederate cause—one as an admiral in the Confederate navy, while the other had fired the last gun on the Alabama. I have some misgivings as to the future. I don't like to see the pendulum swing that way." What is all our talk worth about "a reunited people," and the "wiping out of sectional lines," if one whose whole life has been devoted to the cause of his country, and has shown his loyalty and love both in peace and war, can not be allowed to express his feelings without having some one shake his head and intimate that the country is in danger? Had President Roosevelt been born and reared in the South, there would have been no excuse for this hint of disloyalty. Verily, it does take some people a long time to learn that the war is over!

Dispatches from Shanghai indicate unrest still existing in China, and the possibility of more outbreaks of Boxers. In fact, there has already been an attack on the German Mission at Swatow; the mission buildings burned, and the missionaries only saved their lives by flight to Hong Kong. The dispatches also state that the "missionaries who have returned to Shanghai to take up their work in the interior provinces have been cautioned not to leave the cities, where they are assured of protection by the presence of foreign officials." This state of things, it is said, is the result of the failure of the allied powers in China last year to demand and secure the proper punishment of the Boxer leaders. This failure, due to leniency, had a tendency to impress the Chinese with the idea that the powers were not strong enough to accomplish their purposes, or were afraid to punish their leaders with death. These same leaders, and others equally strong in their anti-foreign feelings, are now at the head of provinces, and in position to do much harm. Hence the fear of another uprising.

A new emigration law, which took effect on Oct. 1 throughout the kingdom of Italy, provides that Naples, Genoa and Palermo are to be the only ports from which emigrants will be permitted to sail. Venice was one of them, but is so no longer. Under the law emigrants carried to any foreign country and refused admittance there from any cause, such as physical disease, poverty or crime, shall be carried back to the port from which they sailed without cost to the Italian Government or to the emigrant. By the law the companies or steamers engaged in transporting emigrants are responsible in civil damages not only to the Italian Government, but to the emigrants themselves, for knowingly carrying persons subject to rejection in foreign ports. This is a wise law, and puts the entire burden of care for the proper and safe transportation of emigrants entirely on the carriers, or those who manage the emigration business. It is well calculated to put a stop to the bringing of paupers, criminals and diseased persons to this country from Italy. Such a law should be sought in all the other countries that unload their people in the United States.—New Orleans Picayune.

A COUNTER "PLEA FOR UNANIMITY."

BY REV. J. A. MOORE.

On the first page of the ADVOCATE, for Sept. 19, there is "a plea for unanimity" in the Methodist Church, and especially among Methodist preachers, "as to the real state of the heathen." The precise point on which that writer pleads for unanimity is not perfectly clear, as there are two very distinct propositions concerning "the salvation of the heathen" which he does not seem to have clearly separated in his mind.

Now, the question as to whether it is possible for the heathen who never hear of Christ to be saved, is one thing, and, then, granting the possibility of their salvation, the question as to whether many or few of them are actually saved, is quite another. But, as the first of these points presents a distinct theological issue, while the second does not, and, as he is pleading for unanimity on a point suitable to be embodied in a church creed, it seems that the first point is the one to which he alludes. If so, I am surprised that he has not found that there is unanimity concerning the matter, for I should be surprised to learn that not so many as ninety-nine out of every hundred Methodist preachers hold that the salvation of the heathen who never hear of Christ is possible. If this estimate is correct, just so soon as this hundredth man comes over to the true doctrine, we will have perfect unanimity.

The article before us makes three considerations the basis of "a plea for unanimity," and I need not go beyond these.

(1) The first of these is the intelligence there is in the pew. Those of this day in the pew are, I dare say, too intelligent not to repudiate utterly the doctrine that a large part of the human race live, die, and are lost without there ever having been a possibility of their salvation.

(2) Another consideration urged is the "missionary enthusiasm" with which the twentieth century has opened. Indeed, it would be a pity that this enthusiasm, which has been fanned into a flame by adherence to good and wholesome doctrines, should have cold water thrown upon it by such a doctrine as this hundredth man supposedly advocates.

(3) Further, the writer before us pleads for unanimity from the need that missionary sermons and addresses should be effective in forming a "missionary conscience in the church." This certainly calls for sound doctrine. Here there should be no daubing with "untempered mortar." "A wise Master builder" "laid the foundation" in the second chapter of Romans, and only those who build thereon "gold, silver, precious stones," help forward the work, while those who use "wood, hay, stubble," are a positive hindrance.

It is easy to show that the doctrine of this hundredth man does not harmonize with Methodist teaching on the subject. Mr. Wesley says, "I have no authority from the Word of God 'to judge those that are without;' nor do I conceive that any man living has a right to sentence all the heathen and Mohammedan world to damnation." Richard Watson says, "The actual state of pagan nations is affectingly bad, but nothing can be deduced from what they are in fact against their salvability, for though there is no ground to hope for the salvation of great numbers of them, actual salvation is one thing, and possible salvation is another." I need not multiply quotations on this point, as the basis here presented for unanimity appears to be sufficiently secure.

IN THE DELTA.

BY REV. W. T. BROWNING.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have just returned from a visit to the Delta, where I had the pleasure of assisting Bro. S. M. Thames, the popular pastor of Minter City, in a revival held at Philipp, beginning on the fourth Sabbath in September. It is highly refreshing to visit that American Egypt when the corn is in the sear leaf, and that white-fibred plant, the mother of the South's greatness, is bursting its fluffy pods into fields of waving white. The hum of the Munger gin, the scream of the commerce-ladened locomotive, the rumble of the four-muled plantation wagon, the numerous squads of busy cotton pickers, and the great flocks of chattering blackbirds—all witness that Autumn has returned with her bounteous harvest to this land, of all the earth the most favored by Providence.

No one who has not actually experienced it can ever know the keen delight awakened by a visit at this season of the year to the great Mississippi Delta. One's train now dashes into the bosom of a great forest, whose somber shadows fall athwart his car window, and whose many-colored leaves, having performed their little mission in dancing the round of the seasons, are falling in many a meandering course, leaping, laughing, romping, chattering, frolicking, as they sink to their cheerful graves. Then the train darts out into the midst of a great plantation stretching away toward the horizon in every direction, and as level as the surface of the sea. Next you course along beside a silver-sheeted lake, whose banks are studded with great old gnarled cypresses rising as stately and pompous as the columns of Diana's temple. This pleasure derived from rapidly changing scenery, added to a pervasive sense of boundless plenty, awakens a keen sensation of delight.

The meeting at Philipp is said to be the most successful revival ever held in that neighborhood. The preaching for the first few days was done exclusively by Bro. C. H. Pittman, of Charleston. His pulpit ministrations were able, forceful, convincing. He laid the foundation of a revival that steadily increased in interest to the close. During the last few days of the meeting I did the exhorting, with the exception of the eleven o'clock service on the fifth Sunday, which was conducted by the pastor. He preached an able sermon, permeated with accurate logic, convincing the intellect, and with melting pathos, moving the will. After the sermon the Lord's Supper was administered, being participated in by almost the entire congregation. A profitable and delightful service for children was held in the afternoon, and the meeting was concluded with the evening service. There were several reclamations, a goodly number of bright conversions, and seventeen accessions to the church, nearly all of whom were adults. They have a flourishing Sunday-school superintended by Bro. Manly, a good choir, large congregations, and excellent behavior. In short, the work of the Lord is greatly prospering under the efficient pastorate of Bro. Thames. He appears younger than he was ten years ago, is popular among his people, and is very much loved and honored by them.

The meeting having closed, I went with the pastor to Minter City, Sunday night, and had the pleasure of spending Monday with his delightful and cultured family. Sister Thames is very much interested in the Lord's work about her, and has succeeded in organizing an enterprising missionary society.

Revival services at Minter City and at Glendora have been arranged for, and victory at each place is confidently expected. May the Lord's work continue to prosper in the hands of this faithful and efficient man of God!

Winona, Miss., Oct. 2, 1901.

AN OCTOGENARIAN SON OF THUNDER.

Such, in the very best sense, is Rev. Dr. J. W. Harmon. He has just spent half a week with us at Moss Point, preaching on Sunday, both morning and evening. Though nearing his eighty-second birthday, he preached with a clearness of thought and expression and with a strength of delivery that would have done credit to almost any man in the prime of life. It need not be said that there was "unction" in his preaching. Was it ever otherwise with the ministering of J. W. Harmon? We, who heard him here, were warmed in our hearts. Nor was the intellectual standard of his messages lowered. They were thoughtful, timely, well-prepared, elegant works of art; at the same time genuine "works of heart." There was no wandering—the common difficulty with very old and very young men; there was no hesitation, no indication of weakness whatever. I had heard him preach years ago. I knew his power, but did not expect to find it unabated; but so I find it.

During the half a week we were together not a single note of pessimism or complaint or doubt escaped him. His heart is young and hopeful, full of faith and love, and his life is energy incarnate. His presence in our parsonage home was a benediction to all of us, even to Baby Grace, less than four years old. He seems younger in thought and heart, faith and purpose, than many I know who have not reached half his years. There is a reason for this. God grant that we all may find it!

I thank God for the quiet visit of this grand, good, young-old man.

H. W. FEATHERSTON.

NOTICE.

To the Methodists of Mississippi—

DEAR BRETHREN: Two years of special devotion to Christian education have been of untold benefit. The interest of the people has been increased and intensified many-fold. Our schools have enjoyed a largely increased patronage. The influence upon our church has been widespread and wholesome. While the benefit is incalculable, it must be confessed that return in money has been far below the minimum asked for; even much below what we had every reason to believe our people would gladly give.

What is done specifically towards completing the Twentieth Century Thank-offering in Mississippi must be done during the closing months of this year; therefore, I urge you not to lose sight of this most important work. Collect every dollar already subscribed, and secure as many additional dollars as possible. To accomplish this is to plant the very best seed corn for every interest of our Lord's kingdom. Let us sow bountifully, that we may also reap bountifully. Yours truly,

J. R. BINGHAM.

What Our Editors Say.

THE PASTOR AND THE LEAGUE.

It has been a distinct doctrine with us that the pastor is the head of the League, and all our efforts have been directed to the end of bringing the Chapters within the limits of immediate pastoral control and oversight. It is the only way a real and helpful work can be done for our young people. It is our confidence that our brethren of the pastorate will in no case deal hardly or unjustly with the League. We have yet to find a case where it has been so. A true League will follow its pastor loyally. In the administration of the Central Office we have been called upon to answer hundreds of letters from pastors and Leaguers, giving opinions on all matters of League administration, but chiefly on the constitution. This we always do conscientiously and in good faith. We crave the confidence of our brethren and our fellow-Leaguers. It is our wish to serve and help them. But not less do we need their patience and sympathy. No man is infallible; no man can carry all his burdens alone. —Epworth Era.

A SUGGESTIVE QUESTION.

It is a fact that a goodly number of preachers in all churches have in their pulpit ministrations a voice different from that used elsewhere. This is shown in reading hymns, offering prayers, and in the first part of the sermon. The "grand, gloomy, and peculiar tone" is affected. It comes from the nether regions, and instinctively makes one think of a cemetery. This vocal attitudinizing has been carried to such an extent that we have a special tone in the list. It is labeled "the clergyman tone." . . . Why should a preacher in the pulpit be different in voice and manner from the preacher by the fireside or in the steward's meeting? There is nothing so winning as naturalness. If a preacher is dependent on expression, tone, and manner in proclaiming his clerical functions and apostolic character, he is most unfortunate. Be natural, and let a Christian life and its labors be the strongest credentials of our ministry.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

ENCOURAGING.

There will probably be quite an increase in the number of members of the church in Alabama Conferences this year. There certainly will be if the numbers were correctly reported last year. There have been an unusual number of revivals in the last twelve months. There is improvement in nearly all departments of the church; the Sunday-schools are better; more interest is taken in the Epworth League, and greater liberality is manifested. One of the most hopeful signs is in the improvement of our preaching. The preaching is plainer, more simple, more direct. There is less sensationalism, and so far as I know, no clap-trap methods. Most of the pastors with the assistance of their own neighboring brethren have done the preaching themselves. They are their own evangelists.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

METHODISM'S THRONE OF POWER.

The gospel of our Methodism is the gospel of the New Testament. With our ministry it has never been an experiment, but a regenerating and constructive force in the aggressive operations of modern Christianity. Throughout our providential history we have persistently magnified the importance of preaching this gospel, and God has wonderfully blessed our efforts in the salvation of the multitudes and in the transformation of society. While we have made haste to use all helpful agencies in the furtherance of the gospel, nevertheless the pulpit has been, and is, and will ever continue to be our throne of power. "By the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." And in proportion as our preaching has been true to the fullness of the gospel, has our Methodism been fruitful of large spiritual results.—Texas Christian Advocate.

THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

That the Conference should be a time of spiritual power is a conceded necessity. Some of our past annual gatherings have been memorable occasions of such power. The Holy Ghost fell upon all, and a new strength was given for the return to circuits and stations. May our meetings this Fall be veritable Pentecosts! To that end let us begin now to pray. Pass the word around from pulpit to pew, from pew to fireside, and on. Let the Sunday-schools and Leagues and prayer meetings and missionary societies pray that gospel power may come upon the Annual Conference. Not once, but on until we witness a flame of holy zeal that will shine into the very gorges of the mountains of our territory.—Midland Methodist.

WE SAY, AMEN!

A silly, clerical grin, at regular intervals (while one is preaching), or an automatic chuckle, are not calculated to sweep sensible people off their feet. Let the patent pulpit laugh retire to the shades of private life. It has served its generation too much already.—Midland Methodist.

WHOSE SERVANT?

BY E. B PARTIN, M. D.

Whose servant am I? Am I the Lord's servant, or am I the servant of sin? This is a question of vital importance to every person who has arrived at the years of accountability to God. Not only as concerning our happiness in this life, but in that which is to come. The Savior said, "Verily, he that committeth sin is the servant of sin." And again he says, "Ye can not serve two masters." The Apostle John says: "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law; for sin is the transgression of the law. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sin, and in him is no sin. . . . Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed abideth in him, and he can not sin, because he is born of God." We are not to understand that the apostle means that it is impossible for the Christian to sin, for he says in another place (1 John ii, 1): "But if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. And he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." It seems to me an illustration like the following will give the true meaning of the apostle: Take an upright and honest man—one whom we have known for years. We say of him, "It is impossible for that man to steal;" yet we know it is not actually impossible, but that it would be so repugnant to his nature, and so at variance with his character, that we look on it as a thing of impossibility. So also with a perfectly truthful man. We say of him, "He can not lie." It is against his very nature and he can not afford to lie! So with the Christian who has the witness of the Spirit, and feels the atoning blood applied to his heart. He hates sin and will not willfully and knowingly sin against God. Hence the Psalmist says, "Ye that love the Lord hate evil." "Know ye not," says the Apostle Paul (Rom. vi, 16), "that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are whom ye obey? whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness? . . . But now being made free from sin and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life."

THE CHOCTAWS IN MISSISSIPPI.

BY REV. T. L. MELLEN.

In the counties of Scott, Leake, Newton, Neshoba, Winston, Kemper and Jasper live the great majority of the Mississippi Choctaws. They are, with one exception, descendants of those who elected to remain in this State when the most of the tribe went West to the Territory under the terms of the Dancing Rabbit Creek Treaty of 1830. That one exception is an old man who was himself present at the making of that treaty, and is now ninety-one or ninety-two years old—Uniatabi, pronounced O-ne-ah-tub-bee. About ninety per cent. of the Mississippi Choctaws are "full bloods." They are not idolaters, and are honest, truthful, virtuous. They have a single standard of morals for men and women, and that standard is high. Nevertheless, they are ignorant and superstitious. Most of them drink whisky (made and sold by mean white men), and very many of them gamble. So often have they been deceived and defrauded by white men that they are very suspicious, but confide without reserve in those whom they know or believe to be their friends. They love music, and readily learn to sing by note. They listen attentively to the preaching of the gospel, "which is the power of God unto the salvation of" the Choctaws as well as of all other people. That they are capable of being developed mentally, as well as morally and spiritually, one need not only consider what we have done for them in Mississippi (which is very little), but turn to the article in the August number of the Illustrated American Methodist Magazine by Eliphalet Nott Wright, M. D., and read his account of the outrage perpetrated by the honorable Dawes Commission in forcing the signing of a treaty by which the tribal relation was abolished and the Curtis Act of Congress made possible.

Not many years after the organization of the Mississippi Annual Conference our preachers began to labor among the Choctaws under the lead of Alexander Talley, and many were the souls led to Christ. But when the treaty of 1830 was made, and most of the tribe had moved west of the Mississippi, we seemed to have thought our duty done to those who chose to remain in Mississippi, and left them to perish. The work in the Territory, however, was kept up. Those in Mississippi had one friend still left in the person of the Rev. John A. Vance, who, though born of sturdy Irish Presbyterian parentage, was "foreordained from all eternity to be a Methodist preacher." Again and again did he plead with presiding elders, Bishops and Mission Boards and Annual Conferences, but all in vain. At last age and severe physical infirmities kept him from the Annual Conferences. A younger man took his place in pleading with men, and united prayers with his in pleading with God. At last the Rev. A. D. Miller got a hearing for the cause of the Choctaws, and Bro. W. W. Cammack offered himself for the work, and was appointed by Bishop Hendrix at the Brookhaven Conference in December, 1891. For four years did he and his good wife zealously and faithfully do the work of evangelists and teachers. Together they led about fifty Choctaws to Christ. A plain box-house was built for school and church purposes, and by the Choctaws named Tali-chulok, after the little creek near whose head the little house stands. Bro. Cammack and wife acquired a knowledge of the language, and he says that those were the four happiest years of his life. Then the Indian Mission was merged into the Lynwood circuit, and neglected—necessarily so—and languished. The work has been greatly revived under W. P. Donnell, L. D., who has charge thereof. In two and a half years he has led about fifty of the Choctaws to confess Christ, and has had the cordial co-operation of his wife, formerly Miss Pearl Tucker, of Neshoba county, Miss.

The lot of one acre of land on which Tali-chulok Church stands was given by Mrs. Charles W. Tinsley, and the adjoining quarter section of land on which we have a colony of seven or eight families was bought during the pastorate of Bro. Cammack. Last year Mr. J. H. Mars gave two acres of land in Neshoba county, on which Bro. Donnell almost wholly, with his own labor, having very little help from anybody, built Cammack Chapel. Mr. W. S. Lewis has given us two acres of land near Rose Hill, in Jasper county. In the beginning of our mission work Mr. J. W. Toler, of Kemper county, rendered efficient help in the Sunday school work, and in teaching the Choctaws to read music and to sing by note.

REV. A. D. MILLER.

Since December, 1891, there have been 110 professed conversions and accessions to the church; 12 have died—some most triumphantly; 7 have withdrawn, and 6 been expelled. The present enrollment is 85. During Bro. Donnell's pastorate of less than three years about 50 or 55 have been added to the church. James Johnson, a full-blood Choctaw, was ordained a local deacon at Vicksburg in 1899; Simpson J. Tubby is a local preacher; Sam A. Lewis and John Johnson are licensed exhorters; Tom J. Tubby is Sunday-school superintendent; Sam B. Martin, Jesse Porter and John Jasper are on the official roll. Billy Washington, not yet a member, is very helpful in the Rose Hill neighborhood. Adam Brokeshonider is one of our new converts, and one of the oldest Choctaws in Mississippi. The officials are prompt in attending Quarterly Conference, some of them sometimes walking twenty miles to the place of meeting and twenty miles back. The babies are promptly presented for baptism.

The mission needs:

1. Competent men and women for superintendents and teachers in the Sunday-schools and in the day-schools.

2. More buildings for school and church purposes.

3. More lands on which to colonize the Choctaws, where avaricious white men can not defraud them of their homes, and where they will be brought more directly under the influence of the teachers and preachers, and where they can be taught in agricultural and mechanical arts as well as in books and in religion.

4. More money to help accomplish these things, and to print books and tracts in the Choctaw language.

These needs are urgent.

The second Quarterly Reports of Conference treasurer and Conference corresponding secretary of Louisiana W. F. M. S. are herewith presented to the readers of our Woman's Column:

The reports are encouraging, and promise a healthy growth. In view of the liberal offerings of some of our consecrated women, we are constrained to exclaim, "The Spirit of God is moving on the face of the waters." We must be stirred to better deeds, however, and not feel that our obligations are lessened by the generosity of the few.

From our zealous corresponding secretary comes the cry: "If only the women could realize the great need of the gospel in mission fields and feel their responsibility in the sending!"

"The Holy Spirit is powerful and sharper than a two-edged sword," but "the Word is the sword of the Spirit," and we must redouble our diligence in teaching the "Word" at home before there will be a consuming zeal in sending the gospel to the heathen. The women who realize this must talk and teach missions throughout the church until every woman feels honored in becoming a worker. If only we would read our church organs and missionary literature! But, alas! so few realize their high privilege in this direction. The missionary spirit permeates all our church papers, and every single faithful reading should awaken or kindle zeal. As a society, we should compel attention by many meetings and much reading and teaching, thus spreading soul manna before the multitude until all are fed—then will come victory.

MRS. J. J. HOLMES,
Conf. Treas.

Second Quarter's Report of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Louisiana Conference: Number of districts in which work is organized, 7; number of Adult Societies, 21; members, 513; new members, 14; number of Juvenile Societies, 7; members, 222; new members, 23; total number of members, 735; life members, 29; scholarships supported, 11; Bible women, 4; subscribers to Woman's Missionary Advocate, 188; subscribers to Little Worker, 65.

One Juvenile Society has been organized during the quarter at Crowley. Two new scholarships have been taken, one by the Shreveport Juveniles—making the third credited to them—and one by the Greenwood Auxiliary. The Louisiana Conference Society has undertaken the support of Miss Helen Johnston, their own missionary in Brazil, and a dear sister of the Shreveport Auxiliary, because "the love of Christ constraineth" her, has undertaken the support of a missionary in China in memory of her beloved daughter.

There has been an increase in the number of subscribers to both the Woman's Missionary Advocate and Little Worker.

Five Adult and two Juvenile Societies failed to report last quarter to the Conference corresponding secretary, but we hope to receive a full report from each Auxiliary Society for the third quarter.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DEAR SISTERS: Every day the work of our Woman's Board widens and deepens. The hands of those in the field must be strengthened. Promises must be redeemed, or without doubt the work must suffer loss. Do not the women of our church—yea, of our North Mississippi Conference Society—know of the facts and of the necessity of the hour in our foreign fields? We can plead no good excuse for a lack of information when books, leaflets, magazines on the subject are printed by thousands. Very recently a volume weighty with the truths it bears came from the presses of our Publishing House. "Missionary Issues of the Twentieth Century" is its title, and within it may be found an almost inexhaustible store of information. Facts for all. Babes in the work, those bearing the burdens of middle age, those grown hoary in this grand service for the Master, may read the papers and addresses compiled in this book, and learn much to edify and stimulate to greater diligence.

Ah! this work of rescuing the perishing! Who can know its greatness, till the value of a human soul is measured. Think of it as we will, no adequate response greets our ear till we look on Gethsemane, on Calvary. There in the suffering, the death of the loving Son of God, the answer is revealed. The greatness of the price is the measure of the value, and to you, my sisters, and to me is given a part in rescuing souls for which such ransom was paid. Let us run with eager haste and, holding out our gifts to God, cry, "Lord, I pray thee, use me and all I have to help in saving souls from sin and death." Upon this work clearly rests the divine approval, for did not the blessed Savior say, in doing good to others "ye did it unto me"? Surely we, as our Lord's stewards, will no longer keep his money "laid up in a napkin," or buried in the earth to rust or mould. Rather let it be ever brightening by the rapidity of its passage along the avenues of earth, doing good. May we learn the blessedness of giving, not from some one else, but each for herself as an experimental fact.

We have below the report of our Conference treasurer for the present (second) quarter. We have fallen slightly behind the same quarter of last year as a whole; yet some districts are in advance. Figures give unmistakable evidence for or against; therefore, let us study these with this end in view—greater effort, more zeal and deeper consecration to every phase of the Master's work.

The report is given here only in totals, which shows what we are doing as a Conference Society.

Aberdeen district	89 08
Sardis district	53 95
Columbus district	123 95
Corinth district	61 43
Grenada district	47 75
Greenville district	25 30
Holly Springs district	190 90
Durant district	37 20
	$646 76

Of this amount we specify the following items:

Dues	$290 85
Juvenile pledges	10 00
Adult pledges	50 25
Laura Haygood Home and School	45 00
Cuban girls' expenses	12 30
Jas. T. Fant Day School	150 00
Total	$558 40

Remitted to Mrs. McTyeire, General Treasurer.

MRS. G. C. JONES,
Conference Treasurer.

We rejoice to do well; let us resolve to do better.

Get the Most Out of Your Food

You don't and can't if your stomach is weak. A weak stomach does not digest all that is ordinarily taken into it. It gets tired easily, and what it fails to digest is wasted.

Among the signs of a weak stomach are uneasiness after eating, fits of nervous headache, and disagreeable belching.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla at different times for stomach troubles, and a run down condition of the system, and have been greatly benefited by its use. I would not be without it in my family. I am troubled especially in summer with weak stomach and nausea and find Hood's Sarsaparilla invaluable." E. B. HICKMAN, W. Chester, Pa.

A SERMON ON

TEMPERANCE,

By the Rev. George R. Stuart,

CLEVELAND, TENN.

Coworker with the Rev. Sam P. Jones.

The author has had numerous calls from all over the country for this sermon. In order to meet this demand he had it published in pamphlet form. He proposes to use the profits of its sale in the interest of the cause for which the sermon was preached.

It is sold by the single copy for 10 cents; by the 100, at 7 cents per copy; by the 1,000, at 5 cents per copy.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss.

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

Teachers' Training Course.

We have received the following replies to questions recently submitted, and we learn that other replies will be sent uesoon. The questions will be left open for discussion at least during the remainder of October. We regret that more have not given us the benefit of their experience. Methodism received much of its early power from its class and experience meetings, and the Sunday-school has received much of its recent impetus from the organized efforts to bring teachers together in convention and institute work, where they may both receive and give knowledge and enthusiasm.

MRS. A. C. YEAGER,

Of Water Valley, Miss., a successful and experienced teacher, writes as follows:

"How Do You Prepare the Lesson?" 1. By a careful perusal of the Scripture lesson, with intervening chapters to find connecting links. 2. Study Sunday-school Magazine and Peloubet's Notes, praying continually for the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and for wisdom and understanding of the Word, and for ability to impart knowledge to others.

"How Do You Secure Attention in Your Class?" 1. By showing a friendly interest in each scholar, expressing regret for absence, and making each scholar an agent for the class to solicit new members. 2. If interest flags or a spirit of playfulness intruder, an appeal is made to the gentlemanly instinct which is in the heart of every boy, and is very easily aroused when just verging on manhood. Then they are reminded that the Lord is in his Holy Temple.

BRO. R. A. MAGRUDER,

Of Hattiesburg, Miss., who has had long experience as superintendent, Bible-class teacher and Sunday-school worker, sends the following:

"How Do You Prepare the Lessons?" Sunday afternoon I take my Bible and in it find the lesson for the next Sabbath, and also the home readings. Carefully, deliberately, prayerfully, I study through these, and also the connections. I look up all references, and references out of which I have hopes of getting help. Now, having these all marked, I have a definite matter before me for a week of study; and I have them in my mind to that extent that I can often meditate, study and pray over the lesson, even when I can not have my Bible in my hands. Nearly all of my Bible reading and thought during the week is as indicated above. I use the Bible only until late in the week. I study the lesson as a whole, and each verse and part of verse carefully and prayerfully in the Bible, seeking for the practical—those things which I can take and make a part of myself, which will be helpful to me in knowing more of my God, his love for me, his will towards me and his power. Of course, included in these is my duty towards him and my fellow-men.

Having studied every part of the lesson in this way, until I have exhausted my thinking ability, I then, generally from Thursday until Saturday, take up the helps—not some, but all that I have access to—commentaries, Magazine, Quarterly, lesson paper, and others. I am ready then to lay the thought of others beside my own thought, and in the fear of God accept the truth and reject the error. Then, and not until then, when I have made it a part of myself, am I ready to impart it to others. Of course, it is impossible to teach in thirty or forty minutes all we will learn from a lesson studied in this way. So we must then arrange the lesson to suit the time we can give it. Eliminate all but a few of the most important truths, drive them home vigorously to the mind, the heart, the life of the pupil, leaving the greatest for the last, being sure to reach it and finish it.

"How Do You Secure Attention in Your Class?" As I have taken so much of your space in trying to answer your first question, I shall only touch this question in high places. There are many things that are helpful, but there are three things that are essential. First, love. The teacher's heart must be filled with the love of God. You must know and love; and hold the respect, esteem, confidence and love of each pupil individually and personally. Secondly, you must fill to the utmost every moment of the recitation time, using all the pupils, and giving them bright, helpful, spiritual food. Thirdly, be attentive yourself. During preaching, prayer meeting, and the opening and closing exercises of the Sunday-school, give strict attention. Never talk or show lack of attention during these or other church services, when others are talking, reading, praying, etc. Your pupils see you; you are to them an ideal. Whether you will or not, you set an example for them in this as in all other things. These things, especially the first and second, will require some week-day work. You can not fill the recitation time with giving spiritual food without previous preparation in study and prayer, but it is worth it.

CORINTH DISTRICT.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I have finished the third round of Quarterly Conferences, and begin the fourth to-morrow. I am just recovering from an attack of fever of a few days. I got sick while engaged in a meeting twenty miles from home, and nine miles from a physician. I think I am all right now. The district is evidently moving up; the brethren have had good revivals in all the charges, and in some great revivals. There has been something over five hundred accessions to the church. J. B. Randolph, on the New Albany circuit, has had 117 converts and 120 accessions. Early in the year he organized a new church west of New Albany in a growing community with but few members. Now there are more than sixty members. He writes me to-day that he has 90 per cent. of all his collections in cash, and will pay every dollar assessed. Bro. L. T. Sargent, on the Mantachie circuit, has had fine revivals all over his work. He writes me that his people are subscribing more liberally to the general collections than ever before. Bro. W. R. Williams has had some splendid revivals on the Booneville circuit, assisted by Bro. J. M. Bradley. He thinks all finances will be greatly improved.

Every pastor has done well. Some have had larger ingatherings than others. They are all besieging themselves now on the missionary interests of the church. Bro. W. F. Rogers has succeeded in arousing his people to build a neat church-house this past Summer; besides, he has his missionary collections, both home and foreign, secured. This is well for Corinth circuit. I feel specially encouraged by the manifest determination and the character of the methods being employed by the brethren to raise the missionary assessments. Perhaps there has not been such a general failure of crops in this part of North Mississippi in twenty-five years. With two floods and bottom corn seriously damaged, and black rust all through the cotton, it is a gloomy prospect for the people, specially the very poor, but the church here has not seriously felt the pressure yet. One fact, however, I have observed—the very poor and improvident never do anything much for the church, whatever the times may be. Most men who support the church pay about the same, good crops or bad. However, I feel that the spirit of liberality is growing among our people.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

LECOMPTE LA.

We have just closed a splendid protracted meeting at Lecompte. Rev. E. E. Riggs did the preaching. We had a number of conversions, eight received into the church last night of the meeting, four more to follow. We asked for $90 to cover our assessment levied by the Conference, and got $124. We have organized a splendid Epworth League. Congregations large and interesting; Sunday-school excellent. We are going to carry up a clean sheet this Conference on all things. We are getting subscribers to the ADVOCATE, too. Pray for us.

Yours very truly,

W. T. WOODWARD, P. C.

RUSTON—AGAIN.

We have just finished a little meeting which lasted two weeks. It was held in August, so that school children could attend—school not being in session. The regular Autumn meeting will be held later.

Rev. H. R. Singleton, Sr., of Vicksburg, preached the first five days to the delight of large congregations, and the pastor preached the rest of the time. Conversions were not counted, but thirty-three have been received into the church so far as a result of the meeting.

Our presiding elder has solved the evangelist question in our district, to a large extent, by helping the brethren in meetings—not one here and another some other time, but week in and week out right through the "revival season." His work has been eminently successful, and we believe we will report a larger increase than ever this year.

We must come to one of two things—larger districts, or good revival preachers on the country districts.

H. R. SINGLETON.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DOT, MISS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We have just closed a very gracious revival at Galloway Church, in which Bro. M. Ferrell did the preaching. I don't think I have ever witnessed a more visible manifestation of divine power. The meeting began on Saturday at 11 A. M.; on Sunday, which is usually styled "butterfly day," we gained a signal victory. The meeting closed on Wednesday, having been in session five days. There were from first to last about fifteen conversions; some very bright. Thirteen were added to the church, and seven family altars were erected. It was said by one who attended the meeting "that he didn't know how the meeting could be better unless more people would come." All who were not rejoicing in the love of God were penitents at the altar. To God be all the honor, power and glory.

We have had during the year something over twenty conversions, and the church wonderfully revived. We have our collections for Conference assessments nearly all in cash and good subscription. We intend to make a full report at the Annual Conference. Your brother,

R. A. SIBLEY, JR.

CRASH!!

Goes the crockery and the waitress will probably be called clumsy and careless. Her plea of sudden dizziness is not allowed. "What right has she to be dizzy?" they ask. Women who are suffering from diseases peculiarly feminine are liable to sudden dizziness and faintness, and it is only by curing the womanly diseases to which they are subject that dizziness and other ills can be entirely relieved.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well. It cures irregularity, dries disagreeable, weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness. When these conditions are cured, backache, headache, dizziness, etc., are also cured.

"I suffered for twelve years with female trouble," writes Mrs. Milton Grimes, of Adair, Adair Co., Iowa, "which brought on other diseases—heart trouble, Bright's disease, and at times would be nearly paralyzed. Had neuralgia of stomach. I can freely say your medicines (nine bottles in all, five of 'Favorite Prescription,' four of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and two vials of Dr. Pierce's Pellets), have cured me. I can work with comfort now, but before I would be tired all the time and have a dizzy headache, and my nerves would be all unstrung so I could not sleep. Now I can sleep and do a big day's work, something I had not done for over eleven years before."

"Favorite Prescription" makes weak women strong, sick women well. Accept no substitute for the medicine which works wonders for weak women.

SPECIAL ATTENTION.

We are sending out accounts this week to a large number of our subscribers. The amount each owes is small, but we hope for many responses. Our expenses now are far outrunning our receipts. We need the money. Please, friends, respond promptly, and help us. Do not wait until Conference. The accounts were made out by an inexperienced hand, and possibly mistakes have been made. If so, we will gladly correct. But let us hear from you at the earliest moment.

JNO. W. BOSWELL,
Editor and Publisher.

The process of lopping off one sin at a time in the effort to free one's self of evil is as vain as trying to kill a tree by occasionally chopping off a limb.

If a young man has pluck and perseverance, joined with wisdom and prudence, reaching the top is only a question of time, no matter how high the hill or how rugged the way.

If sin brought death into our world and all our woe, it is to the interest of men, both for time and eternity, to co-operate with God, through the agency of the gospel, to effect its overthrow.

The front seats in the synagogue may be occupied by the loudest professors, but it does not follow that the modest brethren who take lower seats are lacking in the graces of the gospel.

The process of development, no matter in what line, may be hard and sometimes discouraging, but if sustained by a true manhood, the individual will be none the worse for his trials in after life.

There may be a feeling of satisfaction to one who accumulates great riches, but true happiness comes only to the man who both accumulates and distributes for the benefit of his fellow-men.

An anti-foreign missionary church may be thoroughly consistent in adhering to its creed, but we venture to affirm that it is never over-burdened with zeal, or over-liberal in supporting the work at home.

To sit quietly and listen to a political talk two or three hours on issues that have long since grown stale, and then complain of a sermon less than an hour in length on a fresh and interesting subject is, to say the least, a trifle inconsistent.

THE LIVING VOICE.

There is nothing like the living voice for propagating and enforcing great principles. For this reason God has called and ordained men to preach the gospel. The printed page may reach the multitude, and occasionally arouse and inflame a mind, but the great majority would remain unmoved. The one man in a community whose mind is thoroughly instructed and whose soul is moved to enthusiasm is more efficient than all the printed pages combined. Even in this day, with the printing press everywhere in use, and its influence universally acknowledged, great leaders of thought and men of action do not depend on it to make known and sustain their enterprises. They meet their fellow-men and talk with them face to face.

When God sent Moses to deliver the children of Israel from Egypt, he sought audience with Pharaoh. Had he sent a written communication, it might possibly have reached the royal table, but it would immediately have found a place in the royal waste-basket. It required the personal presence of Moses, together with the authoritative voice of his mouthpiece, Aaron, to effect his mission. Had John the Baptist issued hand-bills by the thousand, and scattered them all over Judea, but kept himself hid in the wilderness, his printed papers, like a dream, would have been forgotten in a day. But with the "voice of one crying in the wilderness," he not only called the people together, but they heard and believed, and, with one consent, received baptism at his hands. John came preaching. So did our Lord. He went to the people, and declared, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand; repent ye, therefore, and believe the gospel."

Our Lord, depending himself on the living voice to reach the people, commissioned the ministry to "go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." We do not construe this command as forbidding the use of any legitimate auxiliary in propagating the truth. The church may use the printing-press, the school-room, the Sunday-school, the benevolences of every character, but not one of these, nor all together, can be allowed to supplant the ministry. It alone is divinely ordained, having for authority a "thus saith the Lord." Thus commissioned, the man of God must face the people, and by "word of mouth" proclaim the gospel. There is no other way to reach the masses.

If what we have said is true, it is at once seen that the proper use of speech is a matter of the utmost importance. We would not be far wrong should we assert that much depends on the voice itself. As to this latter, we are sure that many preachers would be much more acceptable and useful were they skillful users of the organs of speech. And any man is skillful who maintains naturalness in his public talk. The man whose natural voice is wholly unfit to be used in the pulpit is an exceptional character. As a rule, the attempt to improve on nature is not only a mistake, but makes a bad matter worse. A man who is called a natural orator may be improved by cultivation and instruction, but we have never known the average man to be improved by getting into an elocutionary straight-jacket, or following rules of his own making, nor yet by becoming the slavish imitator of some one else. To attitudinize in the pulpit is bad enough, but to add to an assumed attitude an unnatural and unearthly voice is unpardonable. We have known men of the very best quality—character, voice and manner, agreeable and almost charming in the social circle—to spoil everything the moment they began any kind of religious service. When called on to lead in family prayer they instantly assumed dignity that would do honor to a United States Senator, and began in a voice no more like the natural voice in social conversation than if it did not belong to the same person. It was the same way in conducting public worship. Defects of all sorts will be pardoned, if not entirely overlooked, in a young preacher, provided he is natural. Only his unnatural pose and voice will be criticised and condemned.

Use proper speech. The message of the gospel should be delivered in the very best words at the command of the preacher. It is necessary that the language of the pulpit be clean if it is to retain its hold and power among decent and high-toned people. We verily believe that the reason why there is less respect to-day for the pulpit is because the pulpit has lost some degree of respect for the decencies and proprieties of refined society. This is serious, and the charge is not general; but it is a fact that a few prominent men, by the use of slang—and we do not hesitate to say, the use of indecent language—have inoculated hundreds of others with the virus, and under the mistaken notion that they have adapted their language to the listening crowds, have lowered popular respect for the pulpit.

The demand for proper speech does not imply the necessity of using the language of the schools, nor the technicalities of theology, nor yet the polished periods of the man of letters. These may be used at times, if the character of the audience justifies it. But to talk Latin and Greek to uneducated people, and use long and complex theological terms in preaching to the average congregation, or straining one's self in an effort to be eloquent at any time, is all out of place, and utterly useless. St. Paul's advice to Titus was, use "sound speech that can not be condemned." That covers the whole ground. Let every young preacher study that advice, abide it, and the severest critic will have no occasion to speak adversely.

REV. G. D. PARKER,
Missionary to Brazil.

Farewell to Rev. Geo. D. Parker.

Rev. G. D. Parker, who is in the closing months of a four-years' pastorate at Carrollton Avenue Church, this city, and who, a short time since, was appointed to work in Brazil, will start this week for his distant field of labor. Bro. Parker has done a fine work at the Carrollton Church, bringing it up from almost nothing to a prosperous and useful organization. He has given himself entirely to the work, and looked carefully and diligently to all the interests committed to his hands. He is held in highest esteem by all the members of the church and congregation, and they part with him in tears.

Monday evening, the seventh, on the eve of Bro. Parker's departure, a farewell meeting was held in the church. It was largely attended, representatives from all, or nearly all, of our churches in the city being present, besides well-nigh the whole of the Carrollton membership, including the venerable senior Bishop Keener, who came to bid the missionary farewell and God-speed.

The meeting was wholly informal, there being no speeches or ceremonies of any kind, except the reading of resolutions by the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting, preceded by a few words from Rev. C. D. Atkinson.

The ladies of the church made the necessary arrangements for the meeting, decorating the house in the Epworth League colors—also with plants and flowers; provided music, and served refreshments, ample for all, in the Epworth League Hall. With hand-shaking and hearty expressions of "Good-bye; God bless you," the congregation bade their beloved pastor farewell. In this all the visitors joined. Brother Parker was the recipient of a number of valuable presents from the Epworth League, the Official Board, and from the Ladies' Aid Society.

The Louisiana Conference thus gives to the foreign field one of its most active and useful preachers—one whom Bishop Keener says "has special gifts for teaching." We pray that our brother's life may be long continued, and that he may be as useful abroad as he has been at home.

THE FOURTH QUARTER.

Among Methodists the Fourth Quarter is the "home-stretch"—the closing up of the year's work. To preachers and people, though not always the hardest in point of labor, it is, as a rule, the period of greatest anxiety. The preachers are anxious lest they fall behind in their benevolent collections, and the stewards lest their church is reported delinquent on the pastor's salary. We are persuaded, however, that in these respects, there has been great improvement, especially in our cities and larger towns. And, we dare say, better business methods are adopted and pursued everywhere.

Very little has been said in these columns this year concerning the work of the stewards. They have not yet fallen into the habit of making public their reports. The most, if not all, that is said to their credit is by the preachers, who generally commend them by saying, "We believe the pastor's salary will be met in full," or words to that effect. But we can call to mind no year of our life in which so much has been heard of the activity of our preachers. We speak, of course, of the preachers in Mississippi and Louisiana. They have been unusually active, and unusually successful. A greater number of charges than ever before will meet all obligations, and several districts, it is hoped, will pay in full. Especially will the missionary collections be greatly swelled. The great Missionary Conference, held in New Orleans last Spring, will have much credit for increased activity, and increased collections for all purposes. Not only preachers, but hundreds of laymen in our bounds were benefited.

Every district within our territory, except two in the Louisiana Conference, is now in the beginning of the Fourth Quarter. We hope the brethren will suffer a word of exhortation directed particularly to our stewards. Your preachers have been faithful in presenting the various causes which the church believes necessary to the success of the gospel. They have, doubtless, done this, many of them, when told that they were cutting down their own claims. But, nothing daunted, trusting in God and in the integrity of stewards—"men of solid piety, who both know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline"—they have prosecuted their work, and are now in expectation—perhaps in an anxious state of mind—because small bills have accumulated during the "dull season," and they have nothing to pay. Our preachers never press their own claims before the people. The sentiment of Methodism is against anything of the kind. The consequence is, many of them suffer in silence. We know whereof we speak.

Dear brethren, do not let your preachers go to Conference haunted by an unpaid bill, or the vision of a faithful wife and affectionate children living on scanty fare and in need of seasonable clothing. They have ministered to you in holy things; have been instant in season and out of season; have come at your call, prayed with and comforted your sick, and buried your dead. They have not spared themselves in working for your spiritual interest. Now let them "reap your carnal things." "The laborer is worthy of his hire." As faithful stewards, visit the members assigned to your care, and privately, if need be with earnestness, impress upon them the duty of sustaining the ministry. If in your rounds you meet a brother who says he is "not able to give anything," begin immediately to labor with him, and do not leave him until you have convinced him that you have not asked a gift, but, as the Lord's steward, called on him to pay what he justly owes. When you have made that point, conscience will do the rest.

And we earnestly exhort those who know themselves to be in debt not to wait for the steward to call. He may be slow and delay his visit. Go to him. Pay your dues. This will make you feel better, and it will tend to quicken the pace of the steward. He will not be long in seeing some one else. The people and stewards can be wonderful helps to each other, if they will. A good steward helps to make prompt payers, and prompt payers make good stewards. The preacher ought to cut no figure in this matter at all. An allowance having been made, it ought to be met. If he has been negligent, it will do you good to pay him in full, and let him go. Then you will get a better preacher—at least, you will deserve a better one.

CITY PREACHERS' MEETING.

The regular weekly meetings of the city pastors were discontinued during the Summer months, and first meeting of the present season was held Monday, Oct. 7, 1901, at Carondelet Street Church, at 11 A. M.; Dr. S. S. Keener in the chair. Dr. Jno. W. Boswell led in prayer. Chairman Keener called on each of the pastors for a report concerning his charge. Most of the reports were very encouraging. Pastors LaPrade, Wynn, G. D. Parker, Dodson, Fontaine, reported additions during the Summer.

The most impressive part of the meeting was the farewell service to one of the best-beloved members, Rev. G. D. Parker. After Bro. Parker's report concerning his work at Carrollton Church, Dr. LaPrade introduced the following resolutions:

It is with mingled gladness and sorrow that we look forward to the day when our brother beloved, Geo. D. Parker, will leave us to labor for our Master in the Brazil Mission. We rejoice that God and the church have honored our body by calling one of us to this great work; we sorrow because we are to lose one of our most useful and brotherly members; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we congratulate the church on the acquisition of so valuable a man for mission work in a foreign field, and pledge to the church and to Bro. Parker our prayers for his well-being and success.

Resolved, That our sense of the loss to the New Orleans Methodist Preachers' Meeting and to New Orleans Methodism is keen, and that it behooves us to pray the Lord of the harvest that he will send to our city as earnest and useful a man to fill his place.

Resolved, That we assure Bro. Parker of our warm love, our continued remembrance and great personal interest in his work abroad.

WM. H. LAPRADE,
JNO. F. FOSTER.

NOTES.

Revival services have been held at Mary Werlein Mission lately. Rev. J. F. Foster will begin a meeting at Burgundy soon.

Several new organizations were reported. A Junior Epworth League at Carrollton, and a Woman's Home Mission Society at Algiers.

Improvements to the amount of four hundred dollars have been made on the Carrollton Church during the Summer. Rayne Memorial Sunday-school building will be enlarged and remodeled.

The question for next meeting is, "Is It Advisable and Practicable for the Louisiana Conference, Either by Itself or in Conjunction with Neighboring Conferences, to Hold an Institute for Young Preachers in Connection with the Course of Study?"

Rev. W. H. LaPrade, Jr., of St. Louis, was in attendance with his father, Dr. LaPrade, of Rayne Memorial. He gave a glorious account of St. Louis Methodism. He stated that there had been an increase of 57 per cent. in membership within the last ten years.

DEATH OF REV. P. A. JOHNSTON.

DEAR DOCTOR: Rev. P. A. Johnston, a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference, after several years of patient suffering, quietly fell asleep in the arms of Jesus, at his home in this city, last Thursday afternoon, the twenty-sixth of September, at 4:30 o'clock. For nine days he had refused all nourishment, saying it only added to his suffering. He was buried from the East End Church, the presiding elder and the pastors of our church of this city, also Bro. D. G. Ellis, all taking part in the sad services. He leaves a widow and four children, who bless God for his beautiful life and glorious death.

Fraternally. D. P. BRADFORD.

Meridian, Miss., Oct. 3, 1901.

SCHOOL OPENINGS.

Dr. W. B. Murrah writes as follows concerning the opening of the Fall term of Millsaps College:

Our college session has opened under the most favorable conditions. We have more than two hundred students here now. The attendance will be largely in excess of the enrollment for any previous year.

Bro. L. S. Jones, president, says, under date of Sept. 30, 1901:

Port Gibson Female College has the fullest attendance it has had for many years. Every room is full, and other students yet to come. We are now planning to build an annex, which will accommodate forty girls, with a large dining-room below.

PERSONAL.

Letters that reach this office indicate that Rev. W. D. Bass, who is constantly engaged in assisting the brethren in revival meetings, is a strong and faithful preacher, and increases all the while in usefulness. His work is highly acceptable and efficient.

Rev. T. L. Mellen, of the Forest district, and his band of faithful preachers are prosecuting the work of the church with great vigor, and the Lord is blessing their labors. Bro. Mellen keeps the readers of the ADVOCATE well informed as to their success—an example all presiding elders might follow with good results.

Missionary Rally.

The grand Missionary Rally for the northern end of the Meridian district met at Lauderdale, Sept. 23, at 7:30 P. M. The opening sermon was preached by the writer, using as a text Rom. vii, 9.

The rally proper was called to order on Tuesday morning, with Rev. A. T. Bell in the chair, who made some encouraging remarks. Rev. R. L. Phillips then read a paper on "The Relation of Missions to the Spiritual Life of the Individual," which was full of thought. An open discussion on "The Best Methods of Securing the Missionary Collection," was engaged in, which was helpful.

Rev. B. W. Lewis preached at 11 o'clock from the sixteenth verse of the third chapter of John.

The programme for the afternoon was furnished by the Lauderdale Church, which consisted of several excellent papers on our several missionary fields, and some recitations from the Sunday-school pupils. This was indeed a profitable session, and was enjoyed by all present.

Rev. A. T. Bell preached a strong missionary sermon at night, using as his theme, "The Great Commission."

Wednesday morning session was presided over by our presiding elder, Rev. G. A. Guice. Rev. B. W. Lewis read a paper on "The Value of Domestic Missions." Mr. W. D. Hawkins, of South Side, Meridian, was then introduced to the rally, and made a forcible address on "Missions in the Epworth League."

Rev. P. H. Howse preached a strong sermon at 11 o'clock, his text being Luke xix, 10.

In the afternoon Rev. L. F. Alford read a paper on "The Responsibility of the Pulpit in Reference to Missions." Rev. G. S. Harmon delivered an address on "The Minimum and Maximum of the Church's Duty to Missions." An open discussion was enjoyed by all on "Objections to Missions Stated and Answered."

Wednesday night's session was presided over by A. T. Bell. Miss Mabel Kendal, of Meridian, read a most excellent paper on "The Work of Home Missions." The rally was then resolved into a missionary experience meeting; then self-examination and resolutions for the future. The presiding elder delivered the closing address on "Personal Effort."

The rally was a marked success and a spiritual feast. Only half of the preachers were present. Resolutions were adopted to arrange to hold another early next year. The people of Lauderdale were so kind and hospitable that each preacher went away wishing that the Bishop would send him there next year. The good people there are loth to give up Bro. Harmon, who has served them four years.

Forest District—Revival Notes.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: The revival in progress at White Plains Church, Walnut Grove circuit—C. M. Crossley, P. C.—resulted in 40 or 50 conversions and 29 accessions—a total of 104 on the circuit this year; and planning for a new church at White Plains. Ten of the converts were immersed. At Morton, where Bro. Dominick, P. C., was assisted by W. D. Bass, there were many conversions and 20 accessions. Near St. Ann's, in Leake county, Carthage circuit—M. L. White, P. C., assisted by W. W. Murray and Geo. W. Shearer, local preachers—there were 5 accessions and a movement started for the building of a house of worship. W. J. Dawson reports several conversions at Lawrence, on the Lake circuit. R. P. Fikes, L. P., reports 16 conversions and 1 accession at a school-house appointment in Jasper county. W. W. Morse, P. C., Montrose circuit, reports result of Garlandville meeting, 5 accessions and the church wonderfully revived. P. D. Hardin, P. C., reports 1 more accession at Clear Creek and 2 more at John's, on the Shiloh; at Lodebar, assisted by J. F. Robinson, L. E., several conversions and 5 accessions; an Epworth League with 20 members organized at Shiloh. D. C. Langford, P. C., Trenton circuit, reports 1 accession at Boykin Church; R. S. Gale, P. C., Raleigh circuit, reports 1 accession at Pleasant Hill; Rose Hill circuit, Hopewell Church—J. H. Foreman, P. C.—20 conversions and 10 accessions.

We have very nearly, though not quite, reached one thousand conversions in the district this year, and have had over 500 accessions. Let us continue to work for the salvation of souls, and let us also encourage the people by word and by example to show their gratitude by liberal contributions—all assessments in full.

T. L. MELLEN, P. E.

To the Preachers of the Mississippi Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: In about ninety days we will be packing our grips for Conference. What we do must be done quickly. When we get to Conference it will be too late to bring up our collections. If they are behind then, they must remain so for all time, for next year will lay its burdens and duties upon us.

How are our collections for church extension going to come up? In full, or away behind as usual? Surely if we appreciated this department of church work as we should, we could raise every dollar that we are assessed. This assessment ranks second to none in importance, unless it be that for foreign missions, which ought to be paramount to every other collection ordered by the Conference. Church extension is only another name for missions. It is a very important department of missionary work.

Wherever we send a man to preach, we ought to furnish him a home in which to preach. The church home secures the permanency of the missionary's work. Without it his work is liable to come to naught.

Let every preacher study the subject till he understands it, and then let him go before the people all on fire with church extension zeal, and I am sure we will be able to report this collection in full when we go to Conference. Every preacher who expects to ask for aid should have this collection in full and running over, and no preacher should side-track this collection in favor of some other.

Let every preacher in the Conference prepare a sermon on the subject, and preach it on the second Sunday in November. Preachers on circuits will have to take the whole of November in order to reach all their people. After the sermon make a strong effort to raise the entire assessment. Brethren wishing blanks should write to Rev. A. F. Watkins, Brookhaven, Miss., and forward same to him when properly filled and signed. Fraternally,

L. S. JONES,

Port Gibson, Miss., Oct. 5, 1901.

A Church Burned.

The following news from Rev. J. W. Honnoll, pastor of our church at Tunica, Miss., and of the Robinsonville Church, will be read with sorrow. We hope many kind-hearted brethren will respond to the call. Bro. Honnoll writes under date of Oct. 2:

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: Our beautiful little church at Robinsonville, on the Tunica work, was burned on the eleventh of last month. It had cost eight hundred or a thousand dollars. The seats had just been put in that day, and by the workman or the sexton, who cleaned out the house after him, the church was burned. It would have been insured in a few days. We have but few members there, but they are going to rebuild, and help from any quarter would be appreciated. Address Mrs. E. L. Kline, Robinsonville, Miss.

Fraternally, J. W. HONNOLL.

A Correction.

BRO. BOSWELL: Please allow me to make correction in my report from North Kemper circuit of "Items from the Field," published in the ADVOCATE of Sept. 26. The report should have read, "There were twenty-three received by profession of faith," instead of, "There were two received by profession of faith."

Your brother,

ROBERT L. PHILLIPS.

Moses, Miss., Sept 30, 1901.

THE ROYAL MONTH AND THE ROYAL DISEASE.

Sudden changes of weather are especially trying, and probably to none more so than to the scrofulous and consumptive. The progress of scrofula during a normal October is commonly great. We never think of scrofula — its bunches, cutaneous eruptions, and wasting of the bodily substance — without thinking of the great good many sufferers from it have derived from Hood's Sarsaparilla, whose radical and permanent cures of this one disease are enough to make it the most famous medicine in the world. There is probably not a city or town where Hood's Sarsaparilla has not proved its merit in more homes than one, in arresting and completely eradicating scrofula, which is almost as serious and as much to be feared as its near relative—consumption.

Special Notice.

To the Readers of the ADVOCATE:

I am attempting to make a complete roll of the members of the Louisiana Conference who have died, covering the following items: Date and place of birth; year entered itinerancy, and the Conference entered; year entered Louisiana Conference, and how received; number of years in itinerancy—active, and superannuated, and supernumerary; date of death, and place of burial.

To get this information, I must, in many instances, locate the families of these brethren, which, in many instances, I am not able to do. I shall also want the photographs of the brethren whose names appear below, that I may use them in our Annual.

I shall very greatly appreciate a a letter or postal card from any reader of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE telling me where to locate the families or friends of the preachers named below, from whom I can get the desired information. Or, better still, if they will give me the information, and will lend me the photograph (I will return it as soon as I can have the cut made), I will be a thousand times obliged.

Rose Hill, Miss.

Rose Hill charge consists of four appointments: Rose Hill, Hopewell, Pleasant Grove, and Paulding. I have to preach nine sermons per month. The Lord is with us and graciously blessing our efforts. Our protracted meetings were seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

The first one was held at Paulding, beginning the fourth Sunday in July, Dr. J. W. Harmon and W. M. Sullivan assisting. Here we had a very good meeting. The church was revived, two additions to the church. We have a very fine Sunday-school at Paulding, and prayer meeting as well.

Our next meeting was at Rose Hill, beginning the first Sunday in August. Rev. B. W. Lewis, of Chunkey, did the preaching until Friday, 11 A. M., after which this scribe did the best he could until Sunday night. Here we had a glorious revival. Sinners convicted, and mourners converted, and the people of God most gloriously blessed. The results of this meeting were about 40 conversions, 7 additions to the church, new family altars were erected, a young men's prayer meeting organized, and the Sunday-school received new life.

We went from here to Pleasant Grove the third Sunday in August. Bro. V. V. Boone, of Pachuta, came to us on Monday, and did a very fine work until the close of the meeting on Thursday. At this meeting several were converted, five additions to the church, and the church most wonderfully built up.

Our next meeting was held at Hopewell, where, with the efficient help of Bro. H. M. Ellis, of Enterprise, we fought the devil for six days. On Friday we had a glorious victory. About 20 conversions, 9 additions to the church, and the Christian people most gloriously blessed.

Mr. Editor, we think the Rose Hill charge is on the up-grade. We are moving up on all lines of church work. The Sunday school and prayer meetings are better attended. Our Conference collections are in advance of last year, and we think the preacher's and presiding elder's salary will also be in advance of last year. The day of final accounts for this year will soon be at hand. We hope to be able to report everything paid in full this year. We are trying to do better over here. Pray for us. J. H. FOREMAN, P. C.

The Missionary Study Class.

In our Discipline, Paragraph 248, Section VI., page 103, and in Article VII. of our Epworth League Constitution, we, who represent the young life of Southern Methodism, find our full credentials for a grand work in the missionary cause. How are we to gain our greatest achievements, and realize the richest benefits in this work, is the thought that presents itself to every earnest worker. Careful study, with which we most assuredly arouse an intense interest, which in almost every heart is followed by a true enthusiasm, is the key to success. Let us find it in the Mission Study Class.

Bible Counting.

"I think I can say my 'leven times," announced Happy at the dinner table.

"But we don't say tables on Sunday," objected Walter.

"'Leven times one are 'leven, 'leven times two"—began Happy.

"I wonder how much Bible counting we can do? Which of you can tell me something of which there is but one—sometimes mentioned in God's Word?" said Mother.

"There is only one God," said Carl reverently.

"That is right. There is but one true God. Now can you tell me something of which there are two?"

"Two persons were created and put in the Garden of Eden!" said Walter. "Two spies brought back a good report of Canaan," said Happy. "There were two Jerusalems—one on earth and one in heaven." "And Isaac had two sons, Jacob and Esau."

"Now, what have we for three?"

"Jesus was three days in the tomb." "He took three disciples into the Mount of Transfiguration."

Four was not so easy, but Mother remembered that Lazarus was dead four days before Jesus raised him to life.

For five, Walter remembered the five barley loaves.

Six was better. There were two plates of shew bread, with six loaves on each. "The disciples were sent out to preach in six couples." "And there were six cities of refuge in Canaan."

Seven was a very good number. "Seven days in a week," "Seven pairs of each kind of clean animals went into the ark." "There were seven bowls on the candlestick." "Zimri reigned over Israel seven days." "Balaam offered seven oxen, and seven rams, on seven altars."

When they came to eight, Carl said that eight persons went into the ark, and it was some time before somebody else remembered that Josiah was eight years old when he began to reign.

Nine called for two answers. "There were nine ungrateful lepers." "The woman in the parable had nine pieces of silver left after losing one."

"Who can have something for ten?"

"There were ten virgins in the parable," said Walter. "And ten pounds in another parable," said Carl. "Ten spies brought back an evil report." "And Job had ten children, twice," said Mother. "Now for eleven."

"There were eleven disciples left, after the death of Judas," said Carl. "Eleven of Jacob's sons went down into Egypt for corn," was Walter's answer.

"Now we will have twelve, and that will be all for to-day," said Mother.

"Twelve apostles." "Twelve tribes of Israel." "Twelve foundations of the Holy City." "And twelve pearly gates."

Quite Too Much Saloon.

It must have occurred to those of our readers who take an interest in municipal affairs, and who carefully follow the accounts of proceedings of the Council and of its committees, that an inordinate amount of councilmanic attention is devoted to the subject of saloons.

One would imagine, to read the continually-recurring discussions of the question whether this man or that woman shall be allowed to open a saloon in this or that portion of the city, that saloons enter more intimately and more importantly into the life of this municipality than any other line of business; for there is no other line that gets one-half the Council's time devoted to it that is given to saloons. In fact, one of the Council's most important committees seems to have little else to do beside wrangling and wasting time over this matter.

The councilmen, instead of recognizing the painful fact which is recognized by every right-minded citizen—that the saloons in New Orleans are already numerous enough—have been proceeding, it would seem, under the idea that there are not half enough drink-shops in the city, and that their propagation and extension should be carefully fostered and diligently cultivated. In no other way is it easy to explain the encouragement which councilmen give to aspiring saloonists, or the amount of time and attention which, as we have said, they devote to this question.

When applications for saloons come before them—and this takes place all the time—councilmen lose all idea of legislative perspective; they will spend as much of their time over the opening of a bar-room as they will over a project fraught with influence to the city's prosperity.

The Council should reconsider their programme; the saloon occupies altogether too much space in it.—Times-Democrat.

The Fragrance of a Gentle Life.

Once, in crossing a meadow, I came to a spot that was filled with fragrance. Yet I could see no flowers, and I wondered whence the fragrance came. At last I found, low down, close to the ground, hidden by the tall grass, innumerable little flowers. It was from these that the fragrance came.

I enter some homes. There is a rich perfume of love that pervades all the place. It may be a home of wealth and luxury, or it may be plain and bare. No matter; it is not the house, nor the furniture, nor the adornment that makes this air of sweetness. I look closely. It is a gentle woman, mother or daughter, quiet, hiding self away, from whose life the fragrance flows. There is a wondrous charm in a gentle spirit. The gentle girl in a home may not be beautiful, may not be well educated, may not be musical or an artist or "clever" in any way, but wherever she moves, she leaves a benediction. Her sweet patience is never disturbed by the sharp words that fall about her. The children love her because she never tires of them. She helps them with their lessons; listens to their frets and worries, mends their broken toys, makes dolls' dresses, straightens out the tangles, and settles their little quarrels, and finds time to play with them. When there is sickness in the home she is the angel of comfort. Her face is always bright with the outshining of love. Her voice has music in it as it falls in cheerful tenderness on the sufferer's ear. Her hands are wondrously gentle as their soothing touch rests on the aching head, or as they minister in countless ways about the bed of pain.—Selected.

The Elephant's Joke.

Every visitor to the Philadelphia Zoo knows Bolivar, the largest and possibly the wickedest elephant in captivity. He has more visitors every day than any six men in the city. He does not carry a car, as does the elephant at Lincoln Park, nor is he useful in any way except as a peanut consumer. It is through him that the peanut man at the park makes all his money, for who would buy peanuts if it were not for the elephant and his overwhelming appetite?

Many stories are told of him, but here is one of the latest. The drinking cup, which is Bolivar's very own, is a four-gallon iron affair, which would do very well for a small boy's bath-tub. It does not, however, hold enough water to fill Bolivar's trunk, which has a capacity of just six gallons.

It happened not long ago that a small boy had been teasing Bolivar, holding forth a peanut and then withdrawing it just as the elephant was about to gobble it up. Bolivar did not like it, but what could he do? He pulled at his chain and flapped his ears and sneezed, but the boy only laughed.

Just then along came a keeper with a four-gallon drinking-cup full of water. Bolivar blinked his little eyes and thrust his trunk into the water as though he were very thirsty. It interested the boy, and he drew nearer. When Mr. Bolivar raised his trunk, he did so quickly, and pointing it at the boy, turned on the power. The force of the stream carried the boy off his feet and landed him on the other side of the roadway, a dripping, wretched creature. Bolivar enjoyed the joke immensely, and flapped his ears and clanked his chain as though he was trying to say: "Come over here again; won't you, little fellow?" But, needless to say, the boy did not accept the invitation.—The Presbyterian.

Won by a Kiss.

This pretty piece is worthy of a place in any Christian paper. There are so many ways of working for Jesus. This incident is only one of the thousands of means which God used to accomplish his purposes.

It is not usual that a soul can be won to God by a mere kiss. But such was the case recently in the tour of a lady city missionary. She says: "I had been making one of my regular visits among the poor and distressed, and on leaving was followed to the door by a young girl, little more than a child.

"Unconsciously, or, perhaps, rather as a matter of course, I put my arm around her, and, kissing her cheek, took my leave, and thought no more of the incident.

"A few weeks later this girl arose in a testimony-meeting at our mission, and, in a voice trembling with emotion, said: 'I love the Lord, and want to tell you how I came to be a Christian. One day a lady came to where I lived and talked about Jesus. It wasn't so much what she said, but when she was going she kissed me! It had been so long since any one had given me a kiss or a kind word, the first time since my mother died, and somehow it seemed to soften my heart, and I felt that this lady must have something that makes her different from the other folks that haven't cared anything about me, and the more I thought about it the more I wanted it myself. And so I came to God and asked him to forgive my sins for Jesus' sake, and I know that I am saved. But O, in the first place it was the dear lady's kind look and touch and the kiss that did it!"—Selected.

The Self-Reliant Young Farmer.

Young men should farm for themselves, and it is better to begin young. If, when a man is farming for himself, a problem confronts him which he has to solve by experience, he does not forget it as soon as if some one had told him. There are more serious questions than plowing and sowing which come to every prosperous farmer. He must know what crops are adapted to his soil and what will pay best. He must know how to keep up the fertility of his soil; also what breed of stock is best adapted to his situation. He must know whether it pays best to feed or sell his crops, and how much feed to store for each head of stock. All of these questions and more he must study out, but he can not do this when working for others.

If a young man expects to follow farming as a mode of making a living, he should buy a small farm if he can, and if not, rent one. If he is single, he should get some good family to live with him, but if he is married, so much the better. He should never put in a larger crop than he can tend himself, unless he sees some way of paying for the labor without depending on the growing crop. He should get a few head of the kind of stock he intends to raise and let them be increasing as he becomes more able to farm on a larger scale.—D. A. Blalock, in Orange Judd Farmer.

Game to the Last.

A certain duke, while driving from the station to a park on his estate to inspect a company of artillery, observed a ragged urchin keeping pace with the carriage at his side. His grace being struck with the cleanliness of the lad, asked him where he was going. The lad replied:

"To the park to see the dook and sogers."

The duke, feeling interested, stopped his carriage and opened the door to the lad, saying he could ride to the park with him.

The delighted lad, being in ignorance of whom he was, kept his grace interested with his quaint remarks till the park gates were reached.

As the carriage entered it was saluted by the company and guns, whereupon his grace said to the lad:

"Now, can you tell me where the duke is?"

The lad eyed his person all over, then, looking at the duke, replied, quite serious'y:

"Well, I dunno, mister, but it's either you or me."—London Spare Moments.

God Needs the Help of Mothers.

"The grave mistake of repressing children," writes Barbetta Brown in the December Ladies' Home Journal, "is caused by the mother's failure to be keen enough to see where she may touch a child's life and where she may not; where it is for her to guide, to help, to encourage, and where the child-life is sacred to itself alone. That the child is another individual never occurs to some mothers, nor that he has his own possibilities of growth, not to be tampered with; his own privacies, not to be invaded; his own 'holy of holies' to be held holy. The Power that is working in your son or daughter as part of it; and it has its own purpose in regard to each child-life as surely as for each planet in its orbit. God needs much help from mothers, but God does not intend to be effaced by mothers. Co-operate, then, with the Power working through your children, mothers. Do not make the great mistake of attempting to compete with it."

A young Irishman once went to a kind-hearted old squire for a recommendation. An elaborate one was written and read to him. He took it with thanks, but did not move. "What's the matter with it?" roared the squire! "O nothin', sorr," said the lad quickly. "Well, then, why don't you go?' "Sure, sorr, I thought on the strength of a recommendation like that you'd be wantin' to hire me."

RELIGION IN THE HOME.

Religion in the family, or family religion, is a safeguard for all the members. Parents who make real earnest with the spiritual and temporal welfare of their children will secure for them the best conditions for happiness and peace. Religious habit and expression, devout manner, and pious example from parents in the home, go far to mould the child's life. One trouble, however, is that the heads of the family are not always themselves in full sympathy with the spiritual realities of the Christian religion. Then it becomes mere outside shell work, and has little power over children or others subject to its claims.

Parents who do not live religion, as an inward principle, are not able to attract the children by a mechanical or didactic application of its gracious power. If they ever talk of religion to their families, it lacks the true fire. Seldom is it possible to enforce a mere theory without a living example to illustrate the truth. So it happens that very little account is made of it in the family intercourse. Parental love could do much for the religious life of the child if it only entered into the true spirit.

From whatever cause, it is lamentably sure that piety is not cultivated as it should be by precept and example in the Christian families. Few parents use the blessed privilege of enforcing religious examples. They do not make themselves acquainted with the spiritual state of their children. About school, or home studies, or business employment, they take occasion to examine in relation to the young. But spiritual matters are left in the background.

Having neglected family worship and personal converse with the members of the family, the parents are ashamed to begin, and thus to confess their fault. They do not ever pray with the child in private or in family assembly, either morning or evening. They do not ask a blessing at their tables. They do not teach the children the catechism, nor expect them to "learn by heart" its answers. No effort is made to awaken a sense of baptismal obligations, or to call forth to activity their covenant grace. No wonder children brought up in such circumstances evince small inclination or tendency to spiritual growth.

Where genial family religion prevails the whole spiritual atmosphere of the child's life is different. Religious reading, Bible study, prayers and hymns, edifying conversation and becoming expressions of Christian experience have a wonderful effect on the inmates of the family. This sort of family religious life does not actually restraint, is not obtrusive, is not demonstrative, has no cant, but, like the kingdom of heaven, cometh not by observation, and yet from this very circumstance of its silent freedom is all the more powerful.

Dews and showers and sunlight accomplish in the natural world what the grace of God does in the religious life of the family and home. It is a great blessing in favor of a child when the Lord plants it in the bosom of a pious household. A religious family is a blessing to itself and all its members, and its reflex influence reaches far abroad. The world and the church are benefited when the power of the Christian religion rules in the home life of the family.—Reformed Church Messenger.

Quite too often is old age represented under the dreary similitude of Winter, with its bitter, biting winds whistling through leafless boughs, and its frozen clods ringing like iron beneath our feet. In our American climate there is a more genial season that bears the picturesque name of Indian Summer, when nature puts on a sweet smile before the wintry frosts set in, and the lingering foliage is clad in crimson and gold. A Christian life has its bright Indian Summer also. The harvest of good deeds—from good seed sown in early youth—is being garnered. Graces adorn the veteran believer, and beautify him like the scarlet glories of an Autumn forest. Like shocks of corn ripened in sunshine and shower are those servants and handmaids of the Lord who still bring forth fruit in old age that is savory to the taste. Whatsoever may be said of the longevity of the mental powers, some of the most beautiful Christians I know of are in the genial Indian Summer of threescore and ten. Their orchards are still as fruitful as the orchards of Ileulah, and yield their fruits every month. They are always abounding in the work of their Master.—Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

Look not mournfully into the past. It comes not back again. Wisely improve the present. It is thine. Go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear and with a manly heart. Longfellow.

There is a great deal of religion in this world that is like a life-preserver—only put on at the moment of extreme danger, and then half the time put on hind side before.—Josh Billings.

Dec. 1, 1845, FANNIE E. LAUGHTER was born in Carroll county, Miss. May 2, 1860, she married W. G. Gunn. For a short time they lived in Paducah, Ky., but afterwards came back to Mississippi, eventually making their home in Wesson, where Mr. Gunn died in 1885. There were born unto them ten children, of whom three passed away before the father, and another, named for the mother, afterwards went triumphantly home to God. In early life Mrs. Gunn joined a Baptist Church, and continued in that fellowship till 1880, when she and several of her children were received into our church at Wesson by the Rev. B. F. Jones. She was one of the wisest mothers I ever knew, one of the sincerest friends, one of the most energetic persons, one of the sincerest Christians. In her make-up neither laziness, slightness, dishonesty nor duplicity had any part. She was true to self, friends, children, church, and to God. Her daughter, Maggie, writes me: "I know God knew best when he took her, but it is hard to do without her. She was a good, faithful mother, and had filled the office of father and mother for so many years, and never grew weary of caring for her children. The hardships she passed through for us God only knew. I thank God that I had such a mother." Mrs. Gunn died in West Jackson, Miss., June 5, 1901, and the frail little body was carried back to Wesson and laid by the side of him who, for sixteen years, had been awaiting her coming, there to rest till the resurrection of the just.

T. L. MALLEN.

Mrs. MARY LUCRETIA GORDON was born in Fayette, Jefferson county, Miss., Jan. 28, 1850, and died in her native town, Sept. 14, 1901. She was the daughter of William Stewart, one of the most prominent families of Jefferson county. She was married to J. J. Gordon, Jan 27, 1870. To them were born eight children, all of whom, with her husband, survive her, and mourn their irreparable loss. We have known no woman of purer character and more amiable disposition than was Sister Gordon. Her domestic qualities were of high order. She was perfectly devoted to her husband and children. For them no sacrifice was too great, no service too hard. As to family devotion, we have known no superior. She joined the church in her girlhood. Truly she was a "life-long member," and a most consistent one; the friend of all her pastors, and ever with a smile of welcome and a word of cheer for them. Concerning her departure from this world, Bro. Gordon says: "She was perfectly resigned to go; she prayed to God to take her. She also prayed that she might fall asleep and wake up in heaven, which she did. She died so easy, without a struggle, I could hardly realize that she was dead." With her a light has gone out of the home and of the community, but she "will shine as the brightness of the firmament, forever and ever."

B. S. RAYNAR.

MARY LEA, daughter of L. C. and Mrs. M. E. Hutchins, was born at her grandmother's, near Cayuga, Miss., April 13, 1898, and died at Rosegenton, Miss., July 9, 1901. She was a bright child, with a cheerful and affectionate disposition, and was loved by all who knew her. As a ray of sunlight she brightened the home and strengthened the ties of affection that bound her to fond parents, but her stay on earth was brief—only three years two months and sixteen days. With anxious hearts they watched at her bedside, as she patiently suffered, until her pure spirit was liberated from the body of clay and returned to the God who gave it. The body of the little darling was laid in the Cayuga Cemetery to await the resurrection morning. She leaves behind father, mother, and little brother, but it need not be an eternal separation. It is their glorious privilege to meet her in heaven. May the "God of all comfort" bring consolation to the hearts of sorrowing loved ones!

Start Girls Right!

Many beautiful girls become invalids for life, because at the crucial period of puberty they pay no attention to the laws of health. Mothers should protect their daughters' health by giving them necessary information and proper treatment. When the menses come on a girl unawares in her inexperience she is rather frightened into convulsions, or scared into trying to check the flow. Many girls have checked the flow and it has never started again. And as a result they have grown pale-faced, with "crow-tracks" on their cheeks, and dark half-moons under their eyes. A dose of taken every morning after a girl is twelve years old will bring the menses on properly and keep them regular. It will help her to develop into attractive womanhood and equip her for the duties of wife and motherhood. All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui.

The Hollywood, Asbury Park, N. J., February 3, 1900.

I read your advertisement in regard to Wine of Cardui in the Baltimore American, and it so favorably impressed me that on my visit to Baltimore during the holidays I purchased a bottle of it for my adopted daughter, who was suffering with female troubles. She had been under the doctor's care for some time, and when her periods would come on her suffering was something terrible. I induced her to try it and the first dose brought on her menses. She took it regularly according to the directions, and was greatly relieved. To use her own words, "It saved my life." J. WESLEY CROSS.

Cancer on the Increase, Startling Facts.

On examination of the reports of the various State Boards of Health, it is found that death from Cancer has reached alarming proportions, equalling or even surpassing fatalities from consumption. Many eminent men have studied the question to determine the exact cause and to perfect a cure for the disease. Thus far, only one concern has been successful. We refer to the Dr. D. M. Bye Combination Oil Cure Co., the eminent cancer specialists. After many years of careful study, they have perfected a combination of Oils which act specifically on diseased tissue, leaving unharmed the sound. The treatment is saving more people than all other treatments combined. Books and papers explaining the treatment will be sent to those interested. Address Lock Box 462, Dallas, Tex.

The War Department has explained to Cuban petitionars that modifications of the tariff on Cuban sugar and tobacco can only be made by Congress and the President.

Sir Thomas Lipton, the owner of Shamrock II., stated that he had no fault to find with anyone regarding the defeat of his boat. He declined to say whether or not he would challenge again for the America's cup.

At the first Sunday service in the triannial convention of the Episcopal Church at San Francisco all the sermons were devoted to missions. The question of the marriage of divorced persons is agitating the convention.

It is reported that the concentration camps of the Boers in South Africa are becoming death traps, rivaling those in Cuba in Weyler's day, principally due to bad sanitation. There is a specially high death rate among children. Medical returns for the last three months show that 3245 children died in these camps where the Boer reconcentrados are herded. Doctors estimate that the death rate is thirteen times the normal.

South Side and Poplar Springs.

The work of the Lord on this charge is moving on fairly well. Have held a meeting at Poplar Springs, but the interest was broken into by the August storm, which was so destructive through this section. However, the church was blessed, and ten were received on profession of faith. On account of providential hindrances we have not held a revival at South Side, but are preparing to have Bro. Joe Ramsey, of Tennessee, with us in November. We are praying for and expecting a glorious time.

I feel hopeful that all of my Conference collections will be paid in full. We have almost completed our parsonage, and will have finished the church at Poplar Springs in a short time. Several have been added to the church during the year. The worst drawback, as I see it, is non-attendance at our services. Our League has been and is doing good work—work that will count for good in after years.

We are planning for our District Sunday-school and Epworth League Conference, a notice of which appeared in last week's issue of the ADVOCATE. Let me again urge every pastor to come, and bring one delegate from each Sunday-school and League. Our object is to enthuse every one, and then teach each how to do practical work. We will do our best to make your stay with us pleasant and profitable. While the Lord has laid his hand heavily upon me, yet I feel that he has been good to me, and blessed us far above that which we deserve. I find Jesus all and in all at all times. Pray for me, that the work may prosper in my hands.

L. F. ALFORD.

DEAR DOCTOR: I have just closed a week's meeting in Berwick, with fifteen accessions to the church. Rev. A. W. Turner, of Lake Arthur, was with me, and did some very effective preaching. He won all hearts. The audiences, small at first, rose gradually to a perfect jam.

Yours truly, H. S. JOHNS.

A Prominent Minister Writes.

After ten years of great suffering from indigestion, with great nervous prostration, biliousness, disordered kidneys and constipation, I have been cured of Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, and am now a well man. Rev. C. C. DAVIS, Eld. M. E. Church, South, No. 28 Tatnall St., Atlanta, Ga.

A Prominent Memphian Writes.

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised me to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced using Lemon Elixir.

Christian Experience: Its Supreme Value and Crowning Evidence.

[Sermon by Bishop Charles B. Galloway at opening of the Third Methodist Ecumenical Conference.]

TEXT: "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you." (I. John i, 3.) "For we can not but speak the things we have seen and heard." (Acts iv, 20.)

Here we have two statements—one by St. John the Divine, the other the joint utterance of Peter and John, with Peter, doubtless, as the spokesman. The one speaks as a teacher and theologian, the other as the missionary and martyr. Both are witnesses to eternal verities—one modestly affirming that he confines himself to facts of personal experience—"That which we have seen and heard;" the other, artless, impetuous, and chivalrous, candidly acknowledges that he had to talk—"We can not but speak." Here the characteristics of two natures appear. St. John spoke as a wise and able teacher—"the quiet master of the secrets of the spiritual life;" the other as the fearless missionary, whose passionate love for the Lord, and ardent concern for "that which was lost," gave him a divine impatience to speak in his name. The one wrote lovingly and modestly, as if with "a feather dropped from an angel's wing;" the other spoke with the intense fervor of a soul on fire with a holy commission. One displays the calm confidence of absolute assurance; the other the unawed boldness and sublime courage of an ambassador charged with a sacred message and mission.

Here is the confidence of personal knowledge. They do not repeat the statements of others, but speak as eye- and ear witnesses—"That which we have seen and heard." And the form of speech employed is assurance of perfect precision—of absolute accuracy—in statement and testimony; without evasion or exaggeration, without vagueness or inaccuracy, they declare only, but entirely, what they "have seen and heard."

Here, also, is the irrepressible in Christian life and testimony—"We can not but speak the things we have seen and heard." The liberated soul will rejoice in its freedom, and talk of its redemption and Redeemer. The uncaged bird can not but soar and sing.

And here is the positiveness of ample and accurate personal knowledge. "Know" is a favorite word with St. John. Over and over again it is repeated in his epistles. "And hereby we know that we do know Him." "We know that we have passed from death unto life." Suggestive comment has been made upon the fact that the inferential "therefore" is not to be found in this epistle. His constant and earnest insistence is that Christianity is the religion of knowledge; the salvation promised is a conscious salvation.

And, on the other hand, Christianity is a religion of positive affirmations. It is not an empty, impotent negation, but a clear and authoritative declaration of absolute and eternal truth. It utters no uncertain sound, misleads no honest inquirer, encourages no false hope. Christianity is a divine dogmatism. Jesus says emphatically, "I am the truth."

There is the same appeal to the senses of seeing and hearing in the account of Paul's conversion and commission as an apostle—"For thou shalt be His witness, unto all men, of what thou hast seen and heard." And yet, unlike Peter and John, he had never had physical companionship with his Lord, for whom he was to be an accredited and convincing witness, of world-wide and enduring fame. But neither of the apostles had fuller or more accurate testimony to give of what he had seen and heard than this one, "born out of due time," the burden of whose eloquent preaching was the relation of his miraculous experience. The organs of sight and hearing are used, therefore, to represent the cognitive and acquisitive faculties of the soul by which we come into immediate possession of the facts of personal experience. Into the ears that hear God speaks in tones clear, distinct, unmistakable, and authoritative. The eyes that are open are obedient unto the heavenly vision, and behold "wondrous things out of Thy law." This is consciousness—the final source of correct knowledge. "Behind consciousness one can not go; as far back as consciousness religion must go, or its work is superficial." It is "the affidavit of life to life."

Here, also, is a declaration of the supreme value of a personal Christian experience. Only what may be seen and heard is of absolute importance. This alone is essential; all else is incidental. We may speculate about a thousand things, but only fundamental verities need command our deepest concern. The doctrines that are transmutable into life we are under holy compulsion to declare. This was the dominant note of the mighty movement that has made possible the great Conference met here to-day, with representatives from all parts of the world.

In 1743 Mr. Wesley uttered these words: "The distinguishing marks of a Methodist are not his opinions of any sort. His assenting to this or that scheme of religion, his embracing any particular set of notions, his espousing the judgment of one man or another, are all quite wide of the point. . . . I make no opinion the term of union with any man. I think and let think. What I want is holiness in life. They who have this are my brother and sister and mother." And the declared mission of Methodism was only, and specifically, to spread scriptural holiness throughout its world-parish.

As appropriate, therefore, to this occasion, and suggested by the text, I ask you to consider with me the subject of

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE: ITS SUPREME VALUE AND CROWNING EVIDENCE.

Christianity's chief glory and assured triumph is its redemptive power. That is its sublime and only mission—the spiritual regeneration of the world. "It is not," says a great theologian, "its monotheism, or decalogue, or ordinances, or priesthood, or Sabbaths that either constitute it a separate religion or insure its dominion in the future, but redemption from sin through Jesus Christ is its radical doctrine, its original starting-point, and the inspiration of its mission in this world."

It is well enough to exalt the ethical value of the Christian religion—the excellence of its doctrines, the beauty and purity of its ordinances, the nobility of its ideals, the genuineness and authenticity of its records, and the power of its inspirations; but, above all, we must have personal experience of its redemptive efficiency.

I do verily believe that there is imperial demand for renewed emphasis to be put on this great and gracious privilege of every Christian believer. If there has been no abatement of appreciation of this vital doctrine, there is urgent reason for special insistance upon its absolute necessity. "Ye must be born again" should ever be the ringing message of the church of God. We must adhere firmly to the elementary Christian graces—the fundamental doctrines verified and intensified by spiritual experience—if we are to reinflame the zeal of the church and exult in the restored joy of our great salvation.

The multiplying of church activities and the increasing demands of ecclesiastical administration may have occasioned some diversion of our evangelistic zeal and some relaxing of insistence upon this pre-eminent doctrine of the gospel. And it has also been more or less obscured by the prominence given in modern discussion, in both pulpit and press, to the mere ethics of Christianity; to its sociological virtue and value. However true and important such an aspect of religion may be, its excessive emphasis will retire to a subordinate position the great spiritual doctrine which makes the gospel a power in the world's social elevation and evolution.

It is affirmed that Christ's mission was social rather than theological; that "the Sermon on the Mount is the ethics of society;" that "it is a treatise on political economy—a system of justice;" and that "industrial democracy would be the actual realization of Christianity." I would not underestimate the sociological power and reconstructive functions of the Christian religion. It is a transcendent and transforming social energy. Its elevating and ennobling influence marks the progress of civilization and determines the status of nations. There is a vital connection between the spiritual and political faiths of all people. And Christianity has demonstrated itself to be the universal and only stimulus and panacea for the dying world of heathenism.

It is a political force as well as a spiritual influence—a social dynamic as well as a celestial hope. The altar makes the throne. The character of the crosier measures the strength of the sceptor. Out of religious doctrines are developed political principles; and the purer the religion, the broader the constitution and the wiser the civil polity.

But all these are results rather than primary objects; consequents, and not the supreme purpose. Christ's mission was purely spiritual—the redemption of the soul from sin. And his specific aim was not to reach the masses or the classes, but the individual, with the emancipating power of truth.

Another fact which may account for some neglect of this paramount doctrine is the growth of a mistaken catholicity—a sentiment that rather vaunts itself in disparaging the fathers as excessively rigid in their spiritual exactions, and too literal in their interpretations of the Word of God. The rebound from dreaded harshness may lead us to fatal laxness. I fear there is real need for a note of warning.

The days of so-called intolerance have been succeeded by a time of much indifferentism—a time of lax faith and colorless convictions and boasted breadth of view. The commiserated narrowness of the fathers, which made them militant in spirit and intense in their clean-cut, unshaken opinions, has largely ceased to characterize the church of to-day. There is an excess of tolerance that tends to latitudinarianism. There can not be too much catholicity of spirit, too much broad Christian fraternity; neither can there be any relaxing of the fundamental verities of the gospel. Paul's sublimest boast was not that he had "fought the good fight"—met and mastered his last enemy; not that he had finished his course—come triumphantly to the end of a long and honored career, without a blur on his name or a stain on his shield; but that he had "kept the faith"—kept it in its integrity and entirety; kept it without lowering its divine sanctions or compromising its sacred imperatives.

The peril of this age is not a God despised, but a God displaced; not a God forsaken, but a God forgotten; not a God rejected, but a God neglected. And this result has been wrought by two facts fundamental in the Christian life—an enfeebled consciousness of sin, and an obscured vision of the Savior. In view of this peril, and as descriptive of the church in consequence, Bishop Wilson has eloquently said that "the tremendous forces expressed in the person and work of the Son of God are deemed wholly unnecessary, and the Savior of the world is assigned an honorable place at the head and center of a social, intellectual, and æsthetic realm known as the church, which he may adorn with his presence, but must not perturb, distress, and humiliate by the shame and horror of his cross."

And that leads me to say a word about a doctrine not only basal to this study, but to the spiritual kingdom of our Lord—the doctrine of sin. Any scheme of religion or system of theology that minimizes sin makes meaningless the mission of the Man of Galilee. Eliminate sin, and you emasculate the gospel. Christianity has only a message for a world of sin. Its sublime mission is the redemption of the human race. According to one school of evolutionists sin is simply want of conformity to environment, or "partially evolved conduct." In order to characterize at once the absurdity and peril of such teaching a witty English minister has said: "The evolutionary man does not exclaim with Paul, 'O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me?' but, 'O progressive man that I am! Who shall help me to evolve myself?'"

And there are certain religious writers who represent sin not as "the sting of death," but merely as a "pardonable flaw" in human nature—an unfortunate spiritual aberration. So observant and devout a layman as Mr. Gladstone thus referred to such teachers, "They appear to have a very low estimate both of the quantity and quality of sin; of its amount, spread like a deluge over the world, and of the subtlety, intensity, and virulence of its nature." How sadly such teachers contrast with the inspired apostles, who wrote of the things they had seen and heard! St. John's estimate of sin and its universality may be discerned in these plain and powerful words, "If we say we have not sinned, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." St. Paul characterized it as "the sting of death," and, again, "the wages of sin is death," and in the agony of his own awful consciousness of the guilt and power of sin cried out: "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" And when the joy of deliverance came—a deliverance he could not doubt; a deliverance as conscious as when he walked out of the jail at Philippi—he answered his own despairing cry in these jubilant words, "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Jerome has wisely said, "He that hath slight thoughts of sin never had great thoughts of God." And he might have added, No one can have great thoughts of God who has had only slight thoughts of sin.

The gospel has no effectual appeal to a soul that has no consciousness of sin. You recall the answer the Duchess of Buckingham made to Lady Huntingdon, when the latter invited her to hear George Whitefield preach. "It is monstrous," said she, "to be told that you have a heart as sinful as the common wretches that crawl on the earth. This is highly offensive and insulting." And yet without such a deep conviction of sin—a conviction that becomes a crucifixion—there can be no clear experience of the crisis of conversion. The gospel of regeneration is, first of all, a distinct statement of the doctrine of sin; and the first regenerative work of the Holy Spirit is to convince the world of sin and of righteousness and of judgment.

I.—REGENERATION A CONSCIOUS EXPERIENCE.

The regeneration of the soul by the Holy Spirit, through faith in Jesus Christ, is a conscious experience and a fact of certain knowledge. The subject of it becomes a "new man" with a "new heart," and out of this new, transformed life is able to "declare that which he [we] hath seen and heard."

But just here it may be well to note an important distinction suggested by Bishop Foster—that "there is a difference between an experience of Christianity and Christian experience." The one is an observation of its moral, social, and other effects upon individuals, peoples, and nations, while the other is purely subjective—the consciousness of certain spiritual facts, forces, and fruits in the individual soul. One may, therefore, have an experience of Christianity, may have extensive and even approving knowledge of its mighty objective influence and results, and yet be without a genuine Christian experience.

Another fact should not be overlooked: While the attitude of regenerated souls is essentially the same toward God and the great doctrines of the gospel, "every experience is colored by the subject of the experience." Inherited tendencies, degrees of intelligence, peculiarities of temperament—indeed, everything that differentiates human beings—affect and determine the expression of this new life. Mental and temperamental characteristics are untouched in regeneration. Individuality is perfectly preserved. So in Christian experience "every bird sings according to its beak." But there are certain great radical results wrought in everyone who accepts and with the heart believes the gospel of the Lord Christ. These are facts of consciousness to which he clearly and joyfully testifies.

The soul demands absolute certainty in religion. It can not rest on a mere inference, or be content with a probability, or find comfort in a rational conclusion. The mighty issues of eternity can not be suspended on less than "infallible proofs." We must have sure knowledge. And the demands of the soul are met with the proof of Christianity as a system of doctrine. What man must know is that it is the present, all-sufficient, exhaustless power of God, by which he is redeeming a world of sin.

The sure knowledge of God and the conscious relief from sin are the two great matters of spiritual concern about which the soul demands unquestioned certainty. And we do know our God surely, savingly, and triumphantly. As one of our own brothers on this side the sea has happily stated it: "We know God transcendent in the Father Almighty, descendent and ascendent in Jesus Christ his Son, and God also immanent, communicative—a life-sustaining breath, a cherishing and kindling fire—in him who is called the Holy Spirit."

And the certainty that we may know God is the chief and mighty stimulus to faith. It becomes a sublime and ever-increasing passion of the soul. No other knowledge satisfies. It may inspire ambitions to more diligent search; it may intensify desire after larger discloseures of truth, but does not feed the hunger of the soul and give an untroubled peace to the human heart. And this desire to know God is more than "the passionate curiosity which we feel before the mystery of the universe." It is the awed and reverent spirit of Isaiah, when he saw the throne high and lifted up, and the train that filled the temple, and heard the tumultuous praises of the angels that shook its everlasting pillars. It is the humble and ready obedience of Paul, on his way to Damascus, when he pathetically asked, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

Now, in response to this demand for absolute certainty, the Scriptures speak in terms and tones of divine assurance, and the voices of the redeemed in all ages confirm the statements of prophet and apostle. St. John in glowing words describes the great change wrought in the soul by the power of Christ through the Holy Spirit, and the blessed assurance given. "Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation, to wit: that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now, then, we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."

Listen to this loud acclaim of Peter, which sounds like a mighty anthem of some celestial choir, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." And nothing could be more confident and reassuring than the majestic statement of St. Paul, "For I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."

The apostle makes distinction between the fact of sonship and the assurance of it; between the act of justification and adoption, and the consciousness of it: "And because ye are sons God has sent the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." (Gal. iv, 6.) Again, in the Epistle to the Romans, he says: "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God."

This mighty transformation of the whole spiritual nature is not a matter of conjecture or uncertainty. It is not a logical inference from historical facts and rational conclusions, but an immediate, absolute, divine assurance. Here is the realm of direct knowledge, and need not admit the possibility of a doubt. A divine certainty fills and thrills the soul. Like the sightless sinner healed by the Savior, he says, "This one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see." Dr. Hodge, the great Presbyterian theologian of America, states the case in these luminous sentences: "There is no form of conviction more intimate and irresistible than that which arises from the inward teaching of the Holy Spirit. All saving faith rests on his testimony or demonstration. (I. Cor. xi, 4.) This inward teaching produces a conviction which no sophistries can obscure and no arguments can shake. It is founded on consciousness, and you might as well argue a man out of his belief in his existence as out of confidence that what is taught of God is true."

And I can not forego, in this immediate connection, reproducing the clear, strong doctrinal statement found in that ancient formula of faith, the Westminster Confession: "This certainty is not a bare conviction and probable persuasion, grounded upon a fallible hope; but an infallible assurance of faith; founded upon the divine truth of the promises of salvation, the inward evidence of those graces unto which these promises are made, the testimony of the Spirit witnessing with our spirits—that we are the children of God; which Spirit is the earnest of our inheritance, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption."

It has been well said that the certainty of our knowledge, in things spiritual as in things natural, is always worth more to us than the completeness of our knowledge. It is better to know some things surely than many things imperfectly. Not long before his wonderful conversion in 1738, in a letter to his mother, John Wesley thus clearly stated his view of the possibility and necessity of a conscious salvation. He said: "If we dwell in Christ, and Christ in us (which he will not do unless we are regenerate), certainly we must be sensible of it. If we can never have any certainty of our being in a state of salvation, good reason it is that every moment should be spent not in joy, but in fear and trembling, and then, undoubtedly, we are in this life of all men most miserable. God deliver us from such a fearful expectation as this!"

There is a familiar hymn in one of our hymn books which is not Methodistic. It breathes a sort of Christian agnosticism. It lacks the confident and jubilant tone that has made Methodism a world-wide movement:

"'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought:
Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I his, or am I not?"

The sublime privilege of a regenerated soul, and the clear note of its triumphant assurance, is happily expressed in the splendid lines of Charles Wesley:

"My God is reconciled,
His pard'ning voice I hear,
He owns me for his child,
I can no longer fear;
With confidence I now draw nigh,
And Father, Abba, Father, cry."

It may be that some children of the covenant, reared in an atmosphere of piety, diligently and prayerfully instructed in the great facts and verities of the gospel, may enter so easily and gracefully into the spiritual kingdom that conversion seems rather a process than a crisis. Such cases possibly ought to be typical, and may become universal. But however noiseless the transition, there was a definite passage out of the old life into the new. And the renovated will, the transformed life, the purified and pacified conscience, attest that the great change was wrought at some time or somehow. We should not insist, therefore, upon the very place and the exact moment when this crisis is wrought; but I confess to a singular satisfaction and a sustaining sense of unquestioned certainty when John Wesley refers to Aldersgate Street as the place, and a "quarter to nine" in the evening of May 24, 1738, as the time when "I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for salvation, and an assurance was given me that he had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law of sin and death." How vivid also was the experience of Charles Wesley the hour he was admitted into the kingdom of divine grace! To commemorate that bridal hour of his soul, the laureate of Methodism wrote one of his grandest hymns. Feeling that one tongue was not enough to express what his heart felt of love to God for his redeeming grace, he exclaimed:

"O for a thousand tongues to sing
My great Redeemer's praise,
The glories of my God and King,
The triumphs of his grace."

And with what genuine joy did the distinguished son cherish the fact that his sainted father had such a clear and satisfactory experience! Samuel Wesley, the venerable rector of Epworth, died in 1735. His death was triumphant and his testimony was really jubilant. Referring to his father's experience, John Wesley said: "What he experienced before I know not, but I know that during his last illness, which continued eight months, he enjoyed a clear sense of his acceptance with God. I heard him express it more than once, although at that time I understood him not. 'The inward witness, son, the inward witness,' said he to me; 'this is the proof, the strongest proof, of Christianity.'"

The Christian has an infallible witness, "He that believeth in the Son of God hath the witness in himself." "The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." There is a teacher in the heart "who has also a chair in heaven." The ringing, exultant affirmation of every redeemed disciple of our Lord was, "We know whom we have believed." The constant and confident appeal in the New Testament is to the direct testimony of consciousness. Every apostle seemed to have fire upon his lips when he spoke of the great and gracious redemption wrought by the Spirit of God. And with the Apostle Peter every experimental Christian to-day declares that he does not follow cunningly-devised fables when he makes known the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but is an eye-witness of his majesty.

Spiritual facts and verities are apprehended just as rationally as are things material. The same faculties are employed; there is only difference in the objects apprehended. We reject and resent the statement that a proposition may be at the same time false in philosophy and true in theology. That doctrine known as "Double-truth" has been justly condemned as "the fig-leaf of a shame-faced or still half unconscious skepticism." "Our Christian certainty," says a distinguished authority in theology, "rests upon the synthesis of the religious impressions made upon all our faculties, and the testing and investigation of these impressions by the processes of reflective thought, acting in the light and by the aid of the rational intuitions."

II.—THE IRREPRESSIBLE IN CHRISTIAN TESTIMONY.

This new life has an irrepressible element. Its nature is to reveal and not conceal. Its impulse is to speech and not to silence. "We can not but speak." This spiritual knowledge—this divine assurance—is the "communicative impulse" of the redeemed soul. There is begotten a divine eagerness to make it known to others. It is the constraining love which Paul felt and so eloquently acknowledged. It was the passionate spirit of St. John in the rhythmic sentences of his First Epistle: "That which was from the beginning, that which we have heard, that which we have seen with our eyes, that which we beheld and our hands handled concerning the Word of life; (For the life was manifested, and we have seen and bear witness, and declare unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested to us); That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

The first impulse of a converted soul is to bring others to Christ. And the growth of this spiritual concern for the unsaved, and the increase of this divine desire, are the measure of our religion. Solicitude for others is the expression of our love to God.

The certitude of our faith is the measure of an aggressive ministry. Shallow convictions produce feeble service. Men of might and majesty believe strongly. Heroes stand for something. Faith is the fibre of a conqueror. There is no inspiration in a negative. It can neither elevate nor regenerate. Christianity must first be an experience before it can be an enterprise; it must be a regeneration before it will become an inspiration. Paul's absolute faith and vivid experience gave him the spirit of a conqueror, even when defeat and death seemed inevitable. His confidence in the eternal principles of God's kingdom and its final triumph was never disturbed. The gospel that had saved him could redeem the world. After his Damascus experience he knew neither doubt nor fear. So, above the clamor and clangor of the mob, and amid the desertions of trusted friends, rose the clear, bugle notes of his sublime, all-conquering faith, "Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure." He believed in a personal God, not in a "stream of tendency;" in a mighty and ever-present Savior, not in a mere moral influence; in a guiding and attesting Holy Spirit, not in a vague, spiritual impression.

Such an experience intensifies the zeal of the ministry. "We can not but speak." It inspired the noble declaration of St. Paul, "I am a debtor both to the Greek and the barbarian, to the wise and the unwise." It was this that caused him, amid stripes and persecutions, and the prospect of certain death, to exclaim, "None of these things move me." And our Methodist fathers had a like apostolic and zealous spirit. It made John Wesley "the quiescence of turbulence," and gave seraphic wing to the lyric muse of his brother Charles. It inflamed the ardent soul of Thomas Coke, "the foreign minister of Methodism," and caused him, in a moment of rhapsody, to cry out, "I want the wings of an eagle and the voice of a trumpet, that I may preach the gospel in the east and in the west, in the north and in the south."

Preaching has little meaning and less power that is not born of a living experience. It must be a personal attestation of the facts stated and the truth expounded. Otherwise it is a discussion and not a proclamation—a sacred rumor repeated and not a divine verity attested. The apostle must be a witness. The true attitude of the minister has thus been described: 'One who knows, standing up in the midst of those who know not, holding forth to those who as yet do not know, the message of salvation from the living God and the exalted Christ."

The authoritative command and divine exhortation is, "When thou art converted, strengthen the brethren." One must have power before he can impart strength. He must know the way before he can direct others aright.

The gospel for a world of sin can only be preached by those who have felt its need and tested its redemptive power. No tongue of archangel could rightly proclaim it. And those preach it most efficiently who know experimentally its saving and infinite efficacy. It is a suggestive fact that the prophet Ezekiel had to eat the roll which was written within and without before he could preach it to others. It had to be assimilated, become a part of his very being—transmuted into his life's blood—before it became a message of life and power to the people.

The mission of the ministry is to take up God's message and carry it to the world. The angel flying through the heavens with trumpet in hand had committed to him the everlasting gospel. God ordained at once the agent, the instrument, and the message. And the other mighty angel that John saw, with a rainbow on his head, his face bright as the sun, and feet glorious as pillars of fire, ventured not to earth on his own authority, but "he had in his hand a little book open." And God has never allowed any messenger, whether angel or man, to construct or invent a message. The scope and function of this ministry is clearly and fully defined. We are to speak as the Spirit giveth utterance.

Our mission is to "bear witness of that light." It was the divine and only commission of patriarch, prophet and apostle. From Moses to John the Baptist, and from Paul to the present, men could only bear witness. They can not create; they can only reflect light. They are not that light; only reflections of its glorious and healing beams.

III.—THE CROWNING EVIDENCE.

The highest proof of the power of Christianity is in the reality of Christian experience. And the certainty given by such an experience, which is matter of immediate consciousness, is the highest attainable by human beings. I respect the eminently wise caution of Richard Baxter that "God's evidences must not be separated, much less must one be pleaded to the neglect of the rest;" but undoubtedly the pre-eminence must be given to the evidence of Christian experience. John Wesley had that view, as is evident from one of his remarkable letters. "If, then," says he, "it were possible (which I conceive it is not) to shake the traditional evidence of Christianity, still he that hath the internal evidence (and every true believer hath the witness or evidence in himself) would stand firm and unshaken."

Spiritual truth is not reached by hearsay, or received at second hand. We do not hear God in the shout of the sea, or the thunder of the storm, or the silvery song of the streamlet. These are only the echoes of his voice; but he is heard in the words of his Son, for "they are spirit and they are life," and in the attesting voice of the Holy Spirit, which makes us cry, "Abba, Father." God is not seen in the glorious light of the sun, or the soft gleam of the stars, or the gorgeous tints of the evening clouds. But he stands unveiled before us in the "Man Christ Jesus." "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father also." The revelation of God to man could not come in the records of a book, or in the glory of the heavens, or in all the vast and varied handiwork of nature, but in a real life. And when he has been thus spiritually apprehended, and his gospel experimentally tested, we have the crowning evidence. Then every voice is the voice of God.

Without modification or reserve do I accept the triumphant conclusions of the late Bishop of Durham: "If it is not by the senses, so neither is it by theological and scientific faculties, that we can apprehend God, can see the Father. These faculties may verify, may explain, may systematize, but they can not give the insight, can not create the belief. I doubt whether the most elaborate proofs of the being and attributes of God, the most subtle expositions of the evidences of Christianity, have done very much toward establishing even an intellectual assent. I am quite sure that they have been all but powerless in commanding a living, working belief." But to the mind of the consciously regenerate, doctrinal truth has luminous and larger meaning.

One with a clear, Christian experience has assuring knowledge of the person, character, and divinity of Jesus Christ. I would not undervalue the overwhelming argument that has vindicated the Christ of history, the Christ of Bethlehem and Nazareth, of Galilee and Judea, of the Garden and the Cross, the Christ who died that the world might be redeemed; but the Christ of experience, the Christ of the redeemed soul, the Christ formed within, the hope of glory—is a real, ever-present, inspiring personality. To such an one Jesus Christ is not a history, but a verity; not a reminiscence, but a presence; not a theory, but a glorious reality. He is not a God afar off, but ever near. Paul had such a knowledge of his Lord when he exclaimed: "I live, and yet not I, but Christ Jesus liveth within me." And on another occasion a sublimer vision and diviner experience were his, when in the very exhaustion of spiritual rhapsody, he cried out, "For me to live is Christ." The great Jonathan Edwards, referring to the clear apprehension the consciously regenerated have of doctrinal truth, and especially of the person and Christhood of Jesus, made this masterful deliverance: "With respect to Christ's being the Son of God and the Savior of the world, and the great things he has revealed concerning himself, and his Father, and another world, they have not only a predominating opinion that these things are true, and so yield their assent, as they do in many other things of doubtful speculation; but they see that it is really so; their eyes are opened, so that they see really Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God."

The personality of the Holy Ghost and the doctrine of the new birth are not matters of speculation or vague uncertainty to those who have been the objects of redeeming power. They are facts of glorious and hourly experience. Prof. Austin Phelps, in some eloquent and powerful passages, illustrates these sublime doctrines most vividly, in describing the conversion of St. Paul: 'Look at it as a fact in the history of mind. Set aside as irrelevant to the object before you, whatever was miraculous in the events of that journey to Damascus. Make no account of the supernatural light, the voice from heaven, the shock of blindness. Consider not the means, but the manner of that change in the man. Mark its impetuosity. Note the instantaneousness of that arrest of passion. It is like a torrent frozen in mid air. Observe the revulsion of feeling—threatening and slaughter give place to conviction of sin. Malignity is supplanted by prayer. Perceive the revolution of character in that instant of trembling and astonishment. Call it regeneration, conversion, new birth, or by titles more comely to philosophic taste; call it what you will, it is a change of character. The Pharisee becomes a penitent. The persecutor becomes a Christian. The murderer becomes a saint. For aught that appears in the narrative the change is almost like a flash of lightning. How brief the colloquy which proclaims the whole of it! 'Who art thou, Lord?' 'I am Jesus.' 'Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?' We do not know that mind can move more rapidly than this in such a juncture of its history, and yet more intelligently. Then put together the two lives of the man, his life before and his life after this convulsive crisis. Saul and Paul join hands over this invisible gulf as over the river of death, the same being, yet two different men. His character has experienced a change like the transmutation of metals. Take these as facts of sober mental history, and do they not seem to speak the presence of a supernatural power?"

It gives infallible assurance of the divine authority of the Word of God. With a clearly attested Christian experience we enter without hesitation upon the fullest and freest investigation of the historical and critical questions relating to the Holy Scriptures. No canon of criticism or test of scholarship can intimidate a faith that has been securely enthroned in the consciousness. If there be occasion for a revision of opinion about the canonical authority of some book, or the credibility of certain passages, there is no disturbance of those great doctrines that have already been transmuted into personal life and character. "The words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life." No question about Jonah and his excursion at sea can invalidate the doctrine of the new birth, or render indistinct the voice of the Spirit in the regenerated soul, bearing witness with our own spirit.

"It is such a witness," says Dr. Watts, "to the truth of the Christian religion, as does not depend upon the exact truth of letters and syllables, nor on the critical knowledge of the copies of the Bible, nor on this old manuscript, or on the other new translation." The divine life implanted in the soul is sufficient assurance that the gospel must be from God; and on this glorious certainty the sincere Christian securely rests, though unable to prove the authority of any of the canonical writings.

We may, therefore, give the widest hospitality to all legitimate investigations by Christian scholars in the line of the "Higher Criticism." There is no occasion for fear. Only advantage can come to the church of God. Some modification of our theories of interpretation and inspiration there may be, but the divine substance of this redemptive gospel can never be touched, and with Paul we may triumphantly exclaim, "Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure."

Christian experience solves the mystery of the miraculous. One who has this joyous experience of Christ, this conscious deliverance from sin, this miracle of grace in his heart, has no difficulty in accepting and defending the credibility of miracles. Christ in the consciousness is an unanswerable argument.

We are again reminded that "the miracle is on its trial." And even Christian teachers, more or less affected by the arrogance and dominance of the scientific spirit, "have as little to do with the miracle as possible." They do not yield belief in it, but neglect to preach it. But there is no fear to those who know the miracle-working power of the Holy Ghost in redemption.

Every cleansed heart and renewed spirit is a creation of God, a miracle of omnipotent energy. "Born of the Spirit." And every such miracle of grace is a new revelation of the power of God. Each living Lazarus attests the fact that the living Christ is still waking the sleep of the dead. Dr. Joseph Parker has aptly said that "every devout experience is a proof of the possibility of inspiration."

And this evidence becomes more convincing and triumphant with the growth of years and the progress of the church. If, as has been rightly declared, "the whole teaching of Scripture is directed to show not what God has, nor yet what he is in himself, but what he is in his dealings with men, or, in other words, to make him known in various ways through the historical manifestations of his holiness and his love," then the whole history of the church should be a continued revelation. And so it is. As the years move on there are successive unfoldings and unveilings of God's glory and power—a series of epiphanies of the risen and reigning Lord.

It has been suggested that the faithful and authoritative witness to this experience, more than anything else, has made Christianity a world-religion. It is the one common ground on which all humanity can stand, the one thing that makes the whole world kin. It is not in creed statements, not in formulas of faith, not in codes of ethics, not in sacraments and ordinances, not in ecclesiastical orders, but in the soul's deliverance from the guilt and dominion of sin. That alone answers the orphan cry of humanity, and satisfies the hunger of the universal human heart. That alone brings us into sweet and divine fellowship—fellowship with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ our Lord—and into the blessed brotherhood of repentance and pardon.

We must, therefore, be a witnessing church—a church that has seen and heard something to declare—and a church that can not but speak of what has been seen and heard. This type of religion is the need of every age. It was the religion of Pentecost that made the unpillared arches of heaven ring with praise, and of apostles and martyrs of whom the world was not worthy. It was the religion of Martin Luther, who shook Europe to its foundations, and of John Wesley, who became the providential leader of "the greatest fact in modern times." And such a spiritual life should gird the church of God with greater power in this opening year of a new century.

The church has more to fear from a "classically cold religiosity" than from the aggressive opposition of a bold and blatant skepticism. Erasmus, himself a great scholar, uttered these words as the heart appeal of one distressed at the coldness of religious life and the distractions of metaphysical theology: "I could wish that these frigid subtleties either were completely cut off, or were not the only things that the theologians held as certain, and that the Christ, pure and simple, might be implanted deep within the minds of men."

This was the divine mission of Methodism, "the redeeming from forgetfulness the doctrine of necessity for spiritual conversion." Its authoritative and constantly iterated insistence was for a renewed and clearly-attested inner life—a life consciously hid with Christ in God. The Rev. Dr. Stoughton, in his 'History of Religion in England,' thus generously refers to our great Zion: "Methodism grew out of the feeling that religious experience, and the truth which produces it, take precedence of everything else, and that to these primary objects all which is merely ecclesiastical must be kept in strict and lasting subordination." And may that subordinate relation never be disturbed.

Dr. Abel Stevens, our own great historian, states another fact characteristic of the movement which has made possible this Ecumenical Conference: "Methodism reversed the usual policy of religious sects, which seek to sustain their spiritual life by their orthodoxy. It has sustained its orthodoxy by devoting its chief care to its spiritual life." Our faith has been kept pure by keeping it in action. The swift movement of our ministry has been the secret of our undisturbed orthodoxy. And as we are facing a wonderful future, I could ask no larger blessing for our world-wide Methodism than that she inscribe upon her door-posts the warning words of a great missionary: "The church that ceases to evangelize will soon cease to be evangelical."

The rapid spread of the revival under the Wesleys, Whitefield, and their coadjutors, was due to the fact that they insisted upon a present consciousness of forgiveness of sins, obtained by faith in the promise of Christ. The pulpits of that day, both in England and America, preached a religion of form and service, without an experience of grace and peace. Mr. Whitefield said, on his first visit to America, that the preachers talked of "an unknown and unfelt Christ," and that the reason why the churches were so dead was because they had dead men to preach to them. When the Wesleys and their co-laborers began preaching the blessed doctrine of the witness of the Spirit, it was denounced by unconverted clergy as a heresy, but was hailed by the masses as a new revelation. It was light out of great darkness, an evangel of hope to a people long used to the dull, weary platitude of a comfortless, purposeless pulpit. Religion was no longer a dreary drudge, but a joyful experience—a vital and vitalizing power in the soul. It quickened every noble impulse, ennobled every sentiment, beautified every revelation, transformed the Christ of history into a conscious presence and experience, and converted the heaven of vague desire and dogma into a blessed reality.

No wonder it awoke a sleeping nation, and shook the foundations of a Christless church. Such a message at such a time was like the alarm peal of a fire-bell at midnight in a slumbering city. Conscious of their unsaved condition and spiritual peril, having been fed on ministrations that neither aroused fear nor satisfied hope, they at once turned to those who preached the comforts and joys of a present salvation.

And that characteristic of Methodist preaching has been the glory of its history. God has made us a great people because we have been a witnessing people. Our itinerants, from Wesley to the present day, have preached doctrines verified by their own experiences. Not always have they spoken in the terminology of the schools, or with the precision of dialecticians, but out of full hearts and by the constraint of Christ's love. Theirs has been a religion of knowledge. Each could say, "I know whom I have believed."

All Stuffed Up

That's the condition of many sufferers from catarrh, especially in the morning. Great difficulty is experienced in clearing the head and throat.

No wonder catarrh causes headache, impairs the taste, smell and hearing, pollutes the breath, deranges the stomach and affects the appetite.

To cure catarrh, treatment must be constitutional—alterative and tonic.

"I was afflicted with catarrh. I took medicines of different kinds, giving each a fair trial; but gradually grew worse until I could hardly hear, taste or smell. I then concluded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after taking five bottles I was cured and have not had any return of the disease since." EUGENE FORBES, Lehmon, Kan.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Cures catarrh—it soothes and strengthens the mucous membrane and builds up the whole system.

They declared the truth with an absolute confidence of tone and manner that eliminated the faintest suggestion of possible contingency or uncertainty. And their very positiveness of speech was a chief factor in their marvelous success. Nothing so readily disarms criticism, and compels candid investigation, as the expression of entire and unutterable confidence in the truth and value of our teachings. And so the preaching of the early Methodists was the positive declaration of a blessed fact, and not the skillful, subtle proving of something from a working hypothesis. The voice of the pulpit and the pew was expressed in the thrilling lines of Charles Wesley:

"What we have felt and seen,
With confidence we tell,
And publish to the sons of men
The signs infallible."

And such is the vocation of Methodism to-day—the proclamation of a present, conscious forgiveness of sins. What has been the distinguishing feature of our success must be our future mission.

Ours has been a revival ministry; hence the marvelous growth of Methodism. What we were in the beginning, and through the years of a history scarcely less than a perpetual miracle, we should be now and for all time. We must declare the whole counsel of God, both law and gospel.

John Wesley, at the good old age of 87, in a letter to Alexander Mather, uttered these thrilling words: "Give me one hundred preachers who fear nothing but sin, and desire nothing but God, and I care not a straw whether they be clergymen or laymen, such alone will shake the gates of hell, and set up the kingdom of heaven upon earth." Grand words those from the old battle scarred veteran, whose sword, which so long flashed in the fore-front of conflict, now hung feebly by his side. Happy, thrice happy, for Methodism, if she will heed the parting counsels of her aged leader, and cling to the purity of faith and simplicity of life that made her early days heroic. As we grow in numbers, wealth, and influence, we have the greater need for entire consecration to God. Ours must be a spiritual church. We have no splendid and imposing ritual to fascinate the taste, no prescriptive dogma around which to rally our prejudices, nor long history and hoary traditions to command our veneration. It is ours to preach and practice spiritual religion. Should the day ever come when Methodism forgets this, her only mission, her downfall is secured. She will have finished her course, and ought to fall on sleep. But such I trust may never be.

I believe that we have yet a great mission in the world. Methodism has not fulfilled the divine purpose of its creation. God has still a work for us to do.

"Our flag on every height unfurled is prophecy of yet richer blessings and grander conquests. The past has been glorious, but thrice glorious will be the future if we are true to the heritage of our fathers. Let us emulate their virtues and imitate their burning zeal.

And now, dear brethren, I conclude my humble message, not with the benediction of some great father in our own beloved Zion, but with the prayer of the sainted Richard Baxter, hoping that it may be the personal petition of each delegate in this Ecumenical Conference, and of every worshiper at the altars of world-wide Methodism. "Thou hast mercifully given me the witness in myself; not an unreasonable persuasion in my mind, but that renewed nature, those holy and heavenly desires and delights, that surely can come from none but Thee. And oh, how much more have I perceived in many of Thy servants than in myself. Thou hast cast my lot among the souls whom Christ hath healed. I have daily conversed with those whom he hath raised from the dead!' And then to the Holy Spirit he prays: "Be in me the resident witness of my Lord, the author of my prayers, the spirit of adoption, the seal of God, and the earnest of my inheritance. Let not my nights be so long, and my days so short, nor sin eclipse those beams which have often illumined my soul. Without thee, books are senseless scrawls, studies are dreams, learning is a glow worm, and wit is but wantonness, impertinency, and folly. Make me the more heavenly, by how much the faster I am hastening to heaven; and let my last thoughts, words and works on earth be likest to those which shall be my first in the state of glorious immortality, where the kingdom is delivered up to the Father, and God will forever be all, and in all; of whom, and through whom, and to whom are all things, to whom be glory forever. Amen."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MABEN, MISS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I have held four protracted meetings on the Cumberland circuit, Durant district, North Mississippi Conference, in which much good was done. The Lord was with us in power. Many were convicted and converted. There were 26 accessions to our church. Some will go to other churches. All four of our meetings were interesting and profitable, but at Shady Grove and Providence the Lord was with us in greater power and demonstration of the Spirit, upon the young and old. Men and women, the heads of families, came to the altar and confessed their sins, and asked to be prayed for, that they might live better lives before their children, declaring, by the help of the Lord, they were going to do so.

We conducted our services after the old plan of calling penitents to the altar, and had them remain there until we could sing, pray and talk with them; and with the penitents, we called the Christians to the altar, too, to sing, pray and talk to penitents, and our altars were crowded and great shouts of glory ascended from the altar services. The Lord was with me, mighty to save.

Brethren of the ministry, do not neglect the altar service, or manner's bench. I have no patience with such service as "Hold up your hand if you want to be saved." God has always honored and blessed the altar service. If a sinner wants salvation, he must ask, seek and strive for it. (Luke xiii, 24.) To God be all the glory.

J. M. MASSEY, P. C.

WINONA CIRCUIT.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We have held four meetings on the Winona circuit this year—one at each appointment. In one of these meetings we were assisted by Bro. J. C. Park, the highly gifted and popular pastor of Winona station. In another that eloquent prince of North Mississippi revivalists, Bro. W. J. O'Bryant, assisted us. The other meetings were held by the pastor.

During the year we have had something over 125 reclamations and conversions, and 75 accessions to the church. We have a Bible-reading class numbering over 100, the members of which pledge themselves to engage in prayer and the reading of the Scriptures daily; four Sunday-schools, and two excellent Senior Leagues.

There has been advancement along all lines, we trust. The pastor's salary has been advanced seventy five dollars this year; yet it will likely be somewhat overpaid. All the collections ordered by the Conference will be paid in full. One hundred dollars spent on the parsonage has put it in excellent condition, and we hope to have the pleasure of extending to as many of the brethren a home during the approaching Conference as the capacity of the building will allow.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MANY, LA.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We concluded an eight days' meeting at F., Jasp on the night of Sept. 30. It was a victory for God, and a great blessing to the church, town, and community. Bro. J. M. Alford, of Leesville, came on Tuesday, and preached to the close. He is a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost; a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, and of whom the church need not be ashamed. God blessed his labors in the conversion of sinners, reclaiming of backsliders, and in the edification of believers. The whole church was harmonized and unified, and all the brethren are dwelling together in unity. Thirteen professed conversion or reclamation, most of whom were church members; two joined the church on profession of faith. Have now held meetings at all points, and have had encouraging results. The present year's pastorate thus far has been delightful. Henceforth, until Conference, I must address myself to the "scotticties" (subtleties) of Tigert's Logic and other books of the course. I expect to carry a light heart and full collections to Conference.

Yours in the Lord,

H. B. THOMASON, P. C.

ZWOLLE, LA.

I have just closed a very gracious meeting at this place. Our presiding elder began the meeting for us with two strong and profitable sermons, and while I could not get any more ministerial help, the Lord was with us, and graciously blessed us. The meeting continued twelve days, and some of the best people of the town joined the church. I held a nine days' meeting at Loring, a railroad station five miles below here, and organized a church with twenty-one members; also a Sunday-school and prayer meeting. The Lord is with us. We have had many conversions and reclamations, and eighty-seven accessions, with more to follow, and a full report for Conference. To God be all the glory.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

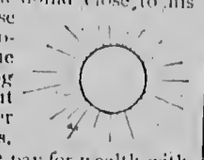
WALNUT GROVE.

DEAR ADVOCATE: A veritable Pentecost is sweeping over our entire work. Over one hundred have been converted; quite a number have been sanctified. There have been one hundred and four accessions to the church. One new church on foot. One more meeting to hold. Expect to report everything in full.

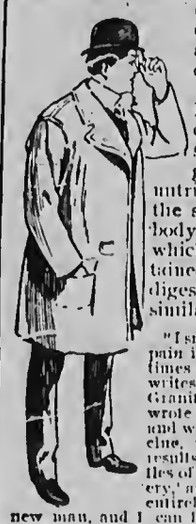
In Him, C. M. CROSSLY.

A Total Eclipse.

Any man can produce a total eclipse of the sun, so far as he himself is concerned, by holding a dollar close to his eye. The total eclipse of health is often produced in much the same way, by letting the dollar shut out from view all other things and interests.



A great many people pay for wealth with health and admit at last that they have made a poor bargain. In the chase of the dollar people are too eager to take time to eat regularly or choose proper food, the stomach becomes disordered or diseased, the food eaten ceases to nourish, and physical breakdown comes.



Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition and so enables the strengthening of the body, in the only way by which strength can be obtained, by food properly digested and perfectly assimilated.

"I suffered for four years with pain in my stomach so that at times I couldn't work nor eat," writes Mr. Frank Smith, of Granite, Chaffee Co., Colo. "I wrote to you about my sickness and was told to use your medicine, which I did with good results. I only used four bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and must say that I am entirely cured, and feel like a new man, and I can highly recommend your medicine to any sufferer."

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will meet in annual session, Oct. 31, 1901, at 10:30 A. M. S. S. KEENER, Pres't.

To treat with contempt the advice of friends is the wisdom of fools.

Great learning without wisdom, like jewels in a swine's snout, is misplaced.

No man can be safely trusted with leadership unless with great valor is joined great prudence.

We have seen men go ahead, feeling sure they were right, when everybody else knew they were wrong.

A little sin let into the heart, like the infusion of the smallest drop of virus into the blood, will affect the whole being.

When a man comes to the conclusion that he is a law unto himself, he forthwith loses sight of the rights of others, and becomes a dangerous foe to the community.

The young spendthrift who declines to soil his hands with honest work, but does not hesitate to soil his soul by deceit and fraud, is on the sure road to poverty and eternal ruin.

To refuse the forgiveness of an injury is to be lacking in one of the essential virtues of our holy religion, and will deprive us of that forgiveness we seek at the hands of our Heavenly Father.

The habit of indulging in slang in the social circle, or in the privacy of a man's home, is apt to so fasten itself on him that he will be betrayed into its use under circumstances that will cause his face to burn with shame.

It is a forced and unnatural construction of St. Paul's words, "I am made all things to all men that I might by all means save some," that leads a Christian into questionable places and questionable practices, as is sometimes the case.

One who takes advantage of the fact that only overt acts of crime are punishable under our laws, to incite to treason and bloodshed by inflammatory speeches, not only abuses the privilege of citizenship, but shows himself unworthy of the protection of the government.

A DIFFICULT MATTER.

In one of our sister churches there is not only complaint of a scarcity of candidates for orders, but what is about as bad, there is complaint that many efficient clergymen are without churches. A writer in the Southern Churchman says: "The General Convention should devise some means whereby the efficient among the non-parochial clergy may be set to and kept at work. . . . There ought to be some practical method whereby the 'church without a rector,' and the 'rector without a church,' could be brought together." The writer says, "I know it is a most difficult matter to undertake, but it ought to be done."

Certainly this state of things calls for consideration; the more so because the rectorless churches, and the churchless rectors, are numerous, showing that churches are unable to support a minister; else are indifferent or hard to please, or, that the churchless rectors are fastidious, and demand too much for their services; else are so inefficient that nobody wants them. In the meantime—while priests are searching for something to do, and the churches are looking for shepherds—the cause is suffering.

It is not our place to offer advice; we shall not do it. But we will be guilty of no presumption if we call the attention of our preachers and people afresh to the fact that no such lamentable state of things exists in Episcopal Methodism. There are no vacant churches among us All of our itinerant preachers have work. This is true because the church authorizes the appointment of every effective man to work. Under no other system than such as ours is this possible. Hence the cry of vacant pulpits and unemployed preachers in those churches that depend on the calling system for supplies. We hope our Methodist people so fully know their advantages, and appreciate them, as to be constrained to hold on to them.

ROMANISM IN THE UNITED STATES.

The Pope is much concerned about the condition of the church in the United States. This is natural. We suppose he is concerned about the church in all parts of the world. Why he should be specially concerned about "the condition of the church in the United States" at this time has not been made public, as far as we know. We have had no revolution of any kind; no religious or political disturbance. Nobody has laid hands on the Roman Catholic Church, nor has anyone brought any charges against the priesthood. The Jesuits themselves are undisturbed. And yet the Pope is much concerned. A new apostolic delegate, it is said, is to succeed Cardinal Martinelli, and "the Pope is desirous of finding President Roosevelt's views as to a suitable prelate before appointing him." That is a step in advance of any the Pope has ever taken.

It is but fair to say that we think the Pope has been misrepresented, for he is too well informed not to know that President Roosevelt has no more to do with the Roman Catholic Church in the United States than he has with the Methodist or Baptist, or any other. The United States is in no wise officially, diplomatically, or otherwise, related to the Roman Catholic Church. The Pope affects to be a temporal prince, and has his representatives at the seat of certain governments. He would gladly establish a legation at Washington, but our government does not recognize him as a temporal ruler, and it never deals with churches as secular powers. We are disposed to think that the dispatch is more of a "feeler" than a piece of information. It may be from Rome; more probably, though, it is a device of some Romish emissary in our own country seeking to find out how the public pulse beats on the question of establishing diplomatic relations with the Vatican.

The public pulse is all right. It does not beat with favor towards Rome. Our people are a unit against anything that savors of union of Church and State. They have nothing against the Roman Catholic Church in its proper place. They accord to it the protection of the government—everything, in fact, that they accord other churches; nothing more, nothing less. But representation at Washington as a world power the Romish Church can never have. Our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens and Christians must be content to remain on a level with citizens and Christians of other churches.

AN UGLY HABIT.

We have known a few young men of great ambition to complain because of failure to advance as rapidly as they supposed their merits deserved. The grade of their appointments was too low, or, if the grade was good, the pay for services rendered was too little. They felt that their talents were not appreciated, and did not hesitate to say so. We never see a young man of this complaining disposition that we do not call to mind the advice given by a father to his son as he entered upon the ministry. He said: "My son, I hope I will never hear of you complaining that your talents are not appreciated. If you have any talents, your brethren will find it out soon enough for your good." So say we to all young men who give themselves to the itineracy.

After many years of observation we are prepared to say that, generally speaking, young men are advanced as rapidly as they ought to be—sometimes much faster, considering their talents, energy, and adaptation to the work. Many, backed by injudicious friends, are put in places which they are unable to fill, and fail, and retire from the work, or content themselves in positions where they naturally belong. This is sometimes a very mortifying experience, and convinces the victims—if the term may be allowed—that it would have been far better for them had they undertaken to reach the top by the slow and tedious process, and stay there, than to shoot up like a meteor and die out as quickly.

And what is worse than all, these disappointed brethren never place the blame where it belongs. It is always laid at the feet of the presiding elder, or the Bishop, or some designing and jealous brother. They seem never to think that it is either their fault or their misfortune. They have no gift for seeing themselves as others see them. They will not see even when their faults and failings are pointed out. This is fatal. They become discontented and restless, and unfit themselves for ministering among any class of people.

Of all places in the world, the Christian ministry is the last in which to indulge inordinate ambition. Unless it is gratified, it is certain to lead to sourness and jealousy, and end in chronic complaining, which is an ugly habit, and unpardonable.

TOO MUCH ARROGANCE.

The assurance of some men is measureless. It surpasses thought. It is not confined to the few who have a tolerable degree of education, or to the man who has a smattering, and thinks he knows it all, but it sometimes exists in the brain of a man who has not gone beyond the rudiments of an education in his native tongue. Nearly forty years ago, standing on the bank of a small creek, we heard a good man say that "all scholars have agreed that the Greek word translated baptize (only he tried to use the original) means to immerse, and nothing else; that immersion is the only scriptural mode of baptism." We have been hearing the same thing off and on all these years. So we are by no means alarmed when one takes his pen in hand and writes to the local organ of his church that an ignorant "Circuit Rider" has ventured to dissent from this view, and to publish his exploded notions in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Still less are we alarmed when this writer condemns the editor for admitting "such stuff" as "Circuit Rider" has written. It is quite enough for us to know who "Circuit Rider" is, and that he is a responsible man. We are sure that he has respect for Baptist Churches, little and big, but he does not endorse all their views nor fall in with all their pretensions, and does not hesitate to say so. That he chooses to write under the title of "Circuit Rider" is his business, and we simply let him gratify his wish. His articles, we judge, by the attention given them, have shown those who seem to be disturbed that Methodist preachers, other than Bishops and presiding elders, are competent to handle great questions. If "Circuit Rider" can put a curb on a few of the prancing princes that are so assertive, not to say arrogant, he will deserve the thanks of Methodists, and some of the Baptist brethren.

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

The Anti-Saloon League is a growing institution, and has in its ranks some of our strongest and best men—preachers and laymen. Among the latter is our old friend and former co-laborer in Arkansas, Mr. H. V. Crozier. He has always been an ardent advocate of temperance and prohibition. He has in press at our Publishing House a pamphlet entitled, "Temperance and Anti-Saloon League." The work has been prepared for the purpose of assisting in the suppression of the saloon, and promotion of temperance. It aims to stimulate individual effort, and to secure legislation both against the saloon and drunkenness. Our old friend has always been a vigorous thinker, and we hope his printed word will be effective. Due notice will be given of the appearance of his booklet, which, we hope, will have an extensive circulation.

A GENEROUS GIFT.

Mrs. E. N. Moore, an elect lady of Patterson, La., a staunch Methodist for many years past, has sent a check for five hundred dollars to be invested, and the interest annually to aid in support of our superannuates. This is a liberal gift for Sister Moore, who is not rich. May others follow her benevolent example.

S. S. KEENER,
Pres't La. Legal Conf.

ANNUITY-ENDOWMENT SOCIETY.

MR. EDITOR: Bishop Morrison, when presiding over our Conference, suggested a worthy enterprise which is in vogue in the Louisville Annual Conference, namely: a society which is composed of every itinerant minister as members, and laymen as honorary members, who pay in an annual amount toward enlarging the Endowment Fund for the aid of the Conference claimants. Why not form such a society in each Annual Conference to press this cause till each superannuate and widow of our deceased ministers are amply supported from the accrued interest and the collection taken each year for this purpose? This is a call upon the ministers of the Louisiana Annual Conference to form such a society. Each itinerant paying into the treasury one dollar per annum, and obligating himself to secure some laymen as honorary members, and each year, when practicable, present this claim to his congregation; those funds to be invested, and the interest applied to the aid of our Conference claimants, superannuates, and widows of deceased ministers. This fund would soon accumulate and become quite a popular fund. It would also direct the mind of our people to this as a worthy object for bequests, and aiding while living. If each pastor in our Conference would determine to enlist in this good cause by paying an annual amount of not less than one dollar per annum, it would in a decade amount to a goodly sum in the way of an endowment. The meager support we give our Superannuates is a humiliating subject to everyone who knows the hard life they have endured for the Master. After spending and being spent, living upon a bare support for a score of years, they are declared ineffective, and put aside upon a yearly stipend which is not much more than each inmate of a poor house is rated at when their support is farmed out to the lowest bidder. How humiliating to a great church. How terrible the ordeal to look ahead to this inevitable position to our older men who are fast approaching the dead-line of honorable old age with many sheaves to their ministry! This meager support should make us determine that we will put forth the most strenuous effort to enlarge our Endowment Fund, and press this collection for Conference claimants. How sad to see our ministers come up with their salaries paid in full, and this cause neglected, and many others who received nearly all their salary; yet this sacred claim not having one-half of it paid! How many need to be keyed up on these claims! How many who are entirely too easy-going in regard to this popular collection! When the Minutes are studied, it seems as if the people have not had an opportunity to give to this claim. When it is taken separately, it will most assuredly command the liberality of the congregations.

Now, we would suggest that every itinerant in our Conference join this society, and pay an annual sum of one dollar, to be invested each year, and thus the collection each year be augmented by this interest, and that each pastor endeavor to obtain at least his official members as honorary members of this society.

All who are willing to inaugurate this society, to be called The Annuity-Endowment Society of the Louisiana Annual Conference, M. E. Church, South, will please notify the writer. This annual fee of a dollar would be so small that each could enter without difficulty, while it would enlist all our pastors in the movement, and attract the minds of our laymen to this most worthy cause. If there is any better plan that can be suggested, the writer would gladly enter into it.

S. S. KEENER.

NOTE FROM BROTHER FONTAINE.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: In to-day's issue of the ADVOCATE there is an article in reference to Bro. G. D. Parker which I heartily endorse, except the statement that Carrollton Avenue charge was "almost nothing" when he took charge of it. I would not disparage Bro. Parker, but that statement was evidently made without reference to the Minutes of the Conference year of 1897. I was Bro. Parker's predecessor, and served Carrollton Avenue from Dec. 15, 1896, to Dec. 15, 1897, and when I took charge of it, I found it in good condition, for the foremost workers there to-day were there then.

The report that I submitted to Conference shows: Assessed for preacher-in-charge, $300; paid, $346.25; and every other claim paid in full or over. Let those who read that article now read the Minutes in regard to the past history of Carrollton Avenue. Sincerely,

P. H. FONTAINE.

New Orleans, Oct. 10, 1901.

[A note from the stewards of Carrollton Church, received since the above was put in type, confirms the statement of Brother Fontaine. We are sorry for the mistake made, and gladly give space for correction. —EDITOR.]

Brethren who have favored us with items from the field and other communications must be patient. We have on hand much more than we can print in two issues. If we condense, you will know the reason why.

SPECIAL ATTENTION.

We are sending out accounts this week to a large number of our subscribers. The amount each owes is small, but we hope for many responses. Our expenses now are far outrunning our receipts. We need the money. Please, friends, respond promptly, and help us. Do not wait until Conference. The accounts were made out by an inexperienced hand, and possibly mistakes have been made. If so, we will gladly correct. But let us hear from you at the earliest moment.

JNO. W. BOSWELL,
Editor and Publisher.

PERSONAL.

We had the pleasure, last week, of a call from Rev. J. A. B Jones, of Gloster. He was in excellent health and spirits.

Dr. F. N. Parker, pastor of Carondelet Street Church, delegate to the Ecumenical Conference at London, after two months' absence, reached home last week in good health. He occupied his pulpit on the Sabbath, morning and evening.

Rev. R. G. Porter, assisted by Rev. W. G. Harbin, has been conducting a meeting at Oxford. Brother Harbin preached twenty-one times, greatly to the comfort and edification of the church. Sinners were deeply impressed. It was a good and gracious meeting.

Brother W. L. Graves, of Tyro, North Mississippi, writes, asking us to say that in his notice of the great revival in his charge, it ought to read, "There have been more than one hundred and eighty conversions," instead of, "more than one hundred," as it was printed.

A note from Dr. Cooper, of Centenary College, says, "Including candidates for all degrees, we have on the roll 130 students, with more to follow." Dr. Cooper and his co-laborers are doing good work, and are worthy of the patronage of the people of Louisiana.

Rev. J. N. Tucker and family, who some time since withdrew from our church and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, have returned, and deposited their certificates of membership with the church at Brandon, Miss. Brother Tucker was for thirteen years a member of the Mississippi Conference.

A pleasant note from Rev. W. H. Evans, of Jackson, Tenn., a pastor's helper and successful revivalist, informs us that he is engaged in a great work at Advance, Mo. Up to Sept. 30 eighty persons had united with the church. The blessed Spirit rested upon the people in rich abundance. Brother Evans is one of our faithful and zealous local preachers. We thank him for kind words.

The many friends of Dr. T. C. Wier will deeply sympathize with him and his family. They are passing through the deep waters. The son and brother, Baker, is lying low with acute pulmonary trouble at Fort Smith, Ark. The physicians give the family no ground to hope for his recovery. May the Lord be gracious to the afflicted one. Brother Wier and wife are at Fort Smith watching by the bedside of their beloved son, and in a note says, "We are in a condition to appreciate the prayers and sympathy of the brethren." Let us not forget them!

The death of Dr. Wm. T. Harris, of the Memphis Conference, which occurred a few days since in Jackson, Tenn., is a distinct loss to the whole church, and especially so to his Conference in which he has labored forty-five years, or more. He was one of our most distinguished preachers, and has always been highly esteemed and honored by his brethren. He was a member of a large and leading Tennessee family, being a son of the great pioneer preacher, Dr. G. W. D. Harris, and a nephew of Senator Isham G. Harris. May the father's mantle rest on the son, Rev. E. S. Harris, a promising young preacher of the old Conference.

The good citizens of Jackson, Miss., gave Bishop Galloway and Dr. Murrah a formal reception on the evening of the tenth. Representatives of all denominations were present to do honor to the distinguished Bishop and Doctor, who had just returned from Europe. The speech of introduction was made by Judge Edwin Mayes, to which responses were made by the Bishop and Doctor in their happiest vein. The Clarion-Ledger gives a full account of the affair, and prints pictures—a fairly good one of Dr. Murrah, but of the one purporting to be of the Bishop, we hardly know what to say. It may be a likeness of "Wild Bill," the showman. We are sure it was never taken for Bishop Galloway.

ATTENTION, PREACHERS.

Now is the time for you to do some good work for the ADVOCATE.

The ADVOCATE greatly needs your help.

We need a new dress of type, that we may make the paper attractive.

Our machinery needs repairs and there are quite a lot of other things that are necessary to bring the paper up to the proper standard.

It can not be done without your individual help.

Now, will you not make one hard effort, before Conference, to aid this worthy cause?

We believe the following will help you:

For Two Dollars we will send to all new subscribers the ADVOCATE from now until Jan. 1, 1903.

Thus, by sending us the names now, they will receive the paper nearly fifteen months for two dollars. This is worth considering.

If subscribers have not the cash on hand, you can send any time between now and your first Annual Conference.

To all old subscribers who will pay their subscription in full to date, and send us two dollars additional, we will send the paper from now until Jan. 1, 1903. The label tells when subscriptions expire.

The paper will also be sent from now until January, 1903, at our regular club rate: $1 50 in clubs of ten, cash with the order

Now, brethren, please give this your personal attention, and by sending us one or two new subscribers, we will have as well printed a paper as anybody.

Next week we will mail you some sample copies to help you in the work.

Please help us. We want to make a good report at Conference.

Fraternally yours,

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

The Mission Study Class.

During the past few months plans have been set in motion from the Mission Rooms in Nashville for a widespread and intelligent study of missionary literature and statistics. The centre of operation for this scheme is to be the local Chapters of our Epworth Leagues. By the provision of the Constitution the first vice-president "shall appoint a Sub-committee on Missions, which shall provide for missionary meetings, and otherwise have charge of the cause of missions in the League."

That this is an advisable step, none who have the cause of Christ at heart will deny. The welfare of the church, as well as the welfare of the world, depends upon the intelligent appreciation which men have of their mutual relations. The study of missions is simply the study of the growth of the kingdom of God upon earth. To the mastery of this philosophy of Providence our young people are called. It will take time and energy and sacrifice to meet the demands of the schedule proposed, but it will be time well spent, energy well directed, and sacrifice so amply repaid, that it will seem no longer sacrifice, but privilege. So let all loyal Leaguers unite in this connectional campaign for the acquisition of missionary intelligence. Facts are the fuel by which we must keep our missionary fires all aglow. To study the lives of such men as Livingstone, Carey, Allen, and Lambuth will strike a spark of spiritual emulation in many and many a League. To pray for the several mission fields will bring forth our interest and sympathies in a way not otherwise possible, and will bring us into personal touch with the men and women in our different areas of action. To give to missions—our characters as well as our contributions—will be the most pleasing twentieth century offering we can possibly make!

All our local Leagues are earnestly urged to take up the matter at once. Form your committees, choose leaders, and get without delay the prospectus of work and text-book for the coming year. This book is, "The Evangelization of the World in This Generation," by Mr. Mott. Outline studies prepared by Mrs. P. L. Cobb will appear in the Era throughout October and November. The course will extend through ten weeks, and complete instructions to Missionary Committees will be sent on application to the General Secretary at Nashville.

THOS. CARTER,
Pres. Tri-State League.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

PINE GROVE CHARGE.

DR. BOSWELL: We have had so far a very good year. We can't complain on two lines, namely: the spiritual state of our work, and the care of the pastor. My people have been kind to us, and we have enjoyed the year very much, though I have done the hardest year's work of my ministry. I have six appointments, and they are somewhat scattered, but I have had good health, and have been able to meet them all with great success. I have been able to visit the most of my people during the year.

I have held and had held four protracted meetings. The first one was at Pine Grove, beginning the third Sunday in July. We were rained out there. We had only three days' meeting—two services a day—the pastor doing the preaching. Congregations very large. Results: Several conversions, and thirteen accessions to the church, and six infants baptized.

The next was at Killian's Chapel, beginning the second Sunday in this month. Bro. P. M. Brown, of Greensburg, assisted me here, and did the preaching well, but the visible result was not so great, but I think there was much good done. The church was somewhat revived, and two infants baptized.

The next was held at Cooper's Chapel by my two local preachers, Bros. John Methvien and John Nesom. A good meeting, the church somewhat revived, and three accessions to the church. I have great hopes of these two brethren. They will come up for admission this coming Conference.

My next meeting I have just closed at Pipkin's Chapel. We began there last Sunday at eleven o'clock, and ran until Wednesday night; two services a day. The pastor did the preaching. Congregations very large. The Lord was here in convicting and converting power. The entire membership was blest of God, and the backsliders reclaimed, with the exception of about two. Results: Sixteen backsliders reclaimed, about thirty conversions (as well as I could judge), twenty accessions to the church received on profession of faith, and ten infants baptized, and thirteen dollars in money, and eighteen barrels of corn for the pastor. The brethren say this was the best meeting that was ever held at this place. We give God all the glory, because it was he that spoke through his servant, and did the work.

I go to Tickfaw Station, on the Illinois Central railroad, and begin Sunday. Pray for me, Doctor, that God may manifest himself there also.

My assessments are behind, and I am afraid I will not be able to get them in full.

I have married two couples this year, namely: Mr. Henry Cline to Miss Ella Faconndis, and Mr. H. A. Cason to Miss Maud George.

Pray for me, Doctor, that we may have a good wind-up of the year.

J. H. MONTGOMERY, P. C.

Pine Grove, La., Sept. 27, 1901.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MORTON CIRCUIT.

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: For two months I have been engaged in meetings. We have had gracious revivals, with splendid results. We have had in the neighborhood of 100 conversions and about 75 accessions to the church. The larger per cent. of these on profession of faith. Some of the strongest men on the work have been converted; some who have been wicked, and thought to be hard cases. We have had as helpers Revs. J. E. Williams, J. W. Chambers, J. W. Dawson, P. D. Hardin, V. D. Skipper—all fine preachers and efficient workers.

We have just closed our meeting in Morton, Rev. W. D. Bass assisting me, with his brother to lead the singing. Morton, the brethren say, never saw anything like this before. Everybody was touched by the power of the Holy Spirit. The very first service was one of power, and each service grew in interest to the close. It's a busy season, and Morton is a business town; but every merchant closed his doors, and clerks and all came to church three times each day, except Saturday. Old men, young men, children and all, were moved. Many sought Christ—and found him precious. Several of the strongest and best business men in town were converted. My own family were brought into our Lord's kingdom, and are ready and willing workers for the Lord. We certainly have much to rejoice over. This is all the result of meeting the conditions that God demands for a revival. In the early part of the year several brethren entered into a covenant with me to fast each Friday, read a promise and spend one hour talking to God for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, for 100 conversions on each charge, and all the collections in full. Each one who has kept this vow fully has had gracious revivals, and will, doubtless, bring up all the collections. Our church here has been greatly strengthened. In various ways Morton can easily now be a half station. We shall bring up our collections in full on the Morton charge. We are going to take Pelahatchie for our Lord. Then we shall feel satisfied. Bro. Bass is a man baptized with the Holy Spirit, is an excellent preacher, and preaches to convict and convert men, and the Spirit of power attends the Word. We rejoice in the great work done in the name of our Lord. At our next Quarterly Conference, to be held at Pelahatchie, one of our best young men will apply for license to preach, and when he finishes his education, will offer himself for China.

Yours, W. D. DOMINICK.

Interesting to Ladies.

A representative of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has called on Mrs. M. N. Perry Company, and made a personal examination of her methods of effectually removing superfluous hair, and was astonished to see the large number of testimonials she is receiving from ladies all over the country, and even from foreign lands.

Thousands of women when young have been injudicious and clipped the down, which has appeared on their faces. Many more have used only cosmetics which have stimulated a growth of unsightly hair. Every such lady will be glad to know of this effectual method of removing it. If ladies will send their names and addresses to Mrs. M. N. Perry, C-105 Box 93 Oak Park, Ill., they will receive information on this subject. Mrs. Perry says a long chapter of horrors could be written of experiences of ladies who have resorted to such methods as burning the hair off the face with matches, digging it with a knife, using lime and other chemicals, permanently disfiguring their faces. Even one lady reported she should have committed suicide if she had not obtained this new method.

The reason Mrs. Perry has not advertised as extensively the past year is because she has been kept busy filling orders from those who have used her method who wished it sent to friends, which is indeed the very best testimonial she could get. The names of all her correspondents are kept strictly confidential.

The Joke on Ellen Ann.

"In a tin pail!"

Cicely's voice was so astonished and horrified that it made Mama laugh.

"A nice, shiny tin pail," she amended. "Come and see your face in it. And that isn't all there is in it, either."

There were crinkled tarts and delicate sandwiches, and a little golden cup custard, with one of Cicely's little silver spoons to eat it with. There was a twisty doughnut that looked like a man, and a little round pie with "C pricked into the crust.

"The inside's nice," admitted Cicely, admiringly. "But must I take it in a tin pail, Mama? I'd rather come way home—yes, I would—every single step! Nobody else but Ellen Ann Tibbets carries a tin pail, and the boys all laugh at Ellen Ann. And, oh, dear! that pail is 'zactly like Ellen Ann's, Mama. Her's is shiny, too."

Mama was fitting on the cover. She looked rather sober now.

"A little girl who loses her pretty lunch basket must carry her dinner in a tin pail, or—go without," she said, gravely. "And maybe it will be good for her to learn how little Ellen Ann feels to be laughed at."

"I never laughed at her—honest, Mama!—'cept up my sleeve."

"Well, maybe now you won't laugh even there, dear. Now kiss me, and off with you!"

It was a beautiful morning, with sunshine enough in it to make two days. The pail cover jingled a jolly little tune as Cicely walked, and the sun caught the shiny surface of it and made it look like a silver cover.

Half through the morning, somebody came for Ellen Ann Tibbets to go right home, as her mother was sick. So there was only one tin pail in the dressing-room at noon recess. That comforted Cicely a good deal; for it would have been dreadful to see Ellen Ann eating out of a tin pail just like hers!

She took her shiny pail and went out into the sunshine with it, thinking how "deluscions" Mama's custard would taste, and how—

"Why!"

Cicely almost dropped the pail; but it wouldn't have spilled much, if she had. It was nearly empty! There wasn't any custard or any silver spoon to eat it with! There wasn't any little round pie, with "C" on the cover! There wasn't any—anything, except just two lonesome biscuits sliding round in the bottom!

"Why!" Cicely cried over again.

Then she knew what it meant. This was Ellen Ann's shiny pail. Ellen Ann had carried hers home.

"Well, she's mean!" cried Cicely, hotly. "I hope my custard an' my 'nitial pie'll choke her—'most! Yes, I do! I'm 'most starved to pieces, and she didn't even leave any butter on her old biscuits!"

She went off all by herself, to be cross and hungry. It was ever so long before she would be sensible and stop trying to believe Ellen Ann had done it just to play a mean joke on her. It was ever so long before she took out the poor little butterless biscuits, and looked at them pityingly.

Was that what Ellen Ann ate for lunches? And not any butter on 'em at all? Didn't she ever have any custards or tarts or twisty doughnuts? And never any thin slices of pink ham in between?

It made Cicely so hungry to think about little thin slices of pink ham that she took a nibble of Ellen Ann's biscuit. Then she slowly dropped it back into the tin pail. Cicely would rather go without any dinner than eat bread without a speck of butter on it.

Poor Ellen Ann! Cicely hoped she would like the custard and the crinkly tarts—yes, and even the initial pie! She suddenly remembered that Ellen Ann's father was an invalid, and Ellen Ann's mother "took in" house cleaning and things. And the patched places in Ellen Ann's clothes—Cicely remembered those, too.

On the way home from school, what should peep out at Cicely from the bushes beside the "Half-way Spring" but a dainty little red-and-white lunch basket! Just where she'd left it to hunt for water cresses! She carried it home to Mama.

"But I want the tin pail, too, to-morrow, Mama—this tin pail. I'm going to play a joke on Ellen Ann Tibbets," she said. And then she whispered to Mama, and Mama nodded to her. And the next day two dainty lunches went to school with Cicely, and one of them was in Ellen Ann's shiny tin pail.—Young People's Weekly.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

Bertha's Lesson.

"There," said Bertha Lane, "I believe that I am ready. I am so glad you had some errands for me to do, Mama; it is such a lovely morning for a ride."

"Are you going alone?" asked Mrs. Lane, as she handed Bertha her list.

"Why, no. I thought I would stop for Grace. I want to talk up the social with her. Why did you ask?"

"I was thinking of Miss Esther. She would enjoy a ride very much, I presume, and it would do her ever so much good."

"O mother!" cried Bertha, with a little pout, "why will you be continually having such horrid things occur to you? Miss Esther might enjoy it, but I am sure I shouldn't. She would tell me all her aches and pains, and find some fault with everybody in town."

"Perhaps, my dear daughter, if you were as old as poor Miss Esther, and lived all by yourself, you would find it a comfort to tell somebody about your aches and pains; and when she tells you of other people's faults, why can't you tell her of their virtues?"

But Bertha shook her head.

"I can't be bothered with her this morning," she said. "I don't feel one bit like it. It is much too lovely a morning to spoil riding around with any one as uncomfortable as Miss Esther," and with a good-bye kiss Bertha ran off before her mother could say anything more.

But somehow the day did not seem half so bright and beautiful to her as it had, and she shrugged her shoulders impatiently as she drove down the street.

"I do wish Mama wouldn't always spoil my nice times! It's tiresome to have to be doing something for somebody all the time. One ought to have a chance to please one's self once in a while," she said to herself.

But all the while conscience was reproaching her sharply. "You have missed more than Miss Esther has. She has only lost a little pleasure, but you have lost an opportunity to do a service for your Master."

On the whole, the ride was not as enjoyable by half as Bertha had anticipated, and she presented herself at the dinner table in rather an unsatisfactory frame of mind.

After dinner she curled herself up on the lounge and tried to forget her vexation in a new book. The first she knew, she seemed to herself to have changed into an old woman. Her hair was thin and gray, her teeth were gone, her face was wrinkled and worn, her shoulders were bent, and she could only walk with a cane on account of rheumatism. She reminded herself so much of Miss Esther. How enviously she looked at the young folks about her! They seemed so full of life and happiness, and so unmindful of her forlorn, pitiable condition. "It wouldn't hurt them any to stop and inquire for a poor old woman, and show her a little sympathy," she said, bitterly. "My Bible says we should bear one another's burdens and comfort the afflicted, but all they seem to think of is to have a good time themselves. It's nothing to them how miserable and lonely a poor old body like me is!" And then, just as she was wiping away the fast flowing tears, Bertha awoke with a start to find herself still young, strong and healthy.

"Oh, dear!" But it was simply dreadful," she said, rubbing her eyes to be sure that she was awake. "I wonder if poor Miss Esther feels half as forlorn as I did! I'm heartily sorry for her if she does. I'll take her to ride to-morrow, and she shall complain of every ache and pain she ever had, or that flesh is heir to, and I'll sympathize with her to her heart's content."

But Bertha's repentance came too late, as far as Miss Esther was concerned. When she went for her in the morning she found her very sick indeed, and a few days later her lonely life was over. She had gone where there was no sorrow nor sickness.

"But," said Bertha, tearfully, "I have learned a lesson which I will try not to forget, and, God helping me, I will never neglect any one again as I have poor Miss Esther. She wasn't very enjoyable always, but I know how I felt when I thought I was old and decrepit; and Mama says we can always make it easy by remembering that 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto Me.'"—Kate Sumner Gates, in Zion's Herald.

Just How Much?

"I would do anything to get an education!" said Joe, savagely, thumping the down sofa pillow till a fine, fluffy dust flew from seams and corners.

"Just how much would you do, Joe?" said practical Uncle Phil, interestedly. "As much as Elihu Burritt?"

"How much did he do?" inquired Joe. "Was he a boy without any chance?"

"No, indeed!" said Uncle Phil, who never sympathized with whining Joe's way of looking at things. "As many chances as you have or any other boy with brains and ten fingers. Had to work at the forge ten or twelve hours a day, but that didn't hinder him from working away in his mind while his hands were busy. Used to do hard sums in arithmetic while he was blowing the bellows!"

"Whew!" said Joe, as if he, too, saw a pair of bellows at hand. "How old was he? Older than I am, wasn't he?"

"About sixteen, when his father died. By and by he began to study other things. Before he died he knew eighteen languages, and nearly twice that number of dialects. All this time he kept hard at work blacksmithing."

"I don't have to work as hard as that!" said Joe after a while, with a shame-faced look that rejoiced his uncle's heart.

Joe was a farmer's son, and in busy times there was a good deal for a boy of his age to do. So far he had not been spared to go away to any preparatory school to "fit" for college. So he had faint-heartedly and sulkily given up the thought of going there. Somehow, Uncle Phil's words had put things in a new light.—Christian Uplook.

Deserved Good Clothes.

A gentleman was once walking behind a very handsomely dressed girl, and thought: "I wonder if she takes half as much pains with her heart as she does with her clothes?"

A poor old man was coming up the road with a loaded wheelbarrow, and just before he reached this girl he made two attempts to go into a yard, but the gate was heavy and would swing back upon him before he could go through.

"Wait," said the young girl, springing lightly forward. "I'll hold the gate open." She did so, and received his thanks with a pleasant smile.

"She deserves to have beautiful clothes," thought the gentleman, "for she has a beautiful spirit."—Selected.

"He Sang So Sweetly."

A few days ago a little boy was amusing himself by watching the birds that were playing round him. At length a beautiful bobolink perched on the bough of an apple tree near by, and sat there quietly. The little boy picked up a stone and got ready to throw it at the bird. The bird's throat swelled, and forth came the song, "A-link, a link, a-link, bob-o-link, bob-o-link, a-no-sweet, a-no-sweet, I know it, I know it, a-link, a-link, don't throw it, throw it, throw it."

And the boy didn't throw the stone, but dropped it on the ground.

"Why didn't you stone him, my boy? You might have killed him and carried him home."

The little fellow looked up and replied, "Couldn't, 'cos he sang so."—Christian Observer.

A boy, carefully reared in courtesy toward his elders, was instructed, on going away to school, to telegraph home "Yes" if he found everything satisfactory. He did so, and the busy father having forgotten the arrangement, and being, therefore, puzzled, telegraphed back: "Yes, what?" The answer came: "Yes, sir!"—Exchange.

Commencing Monday, May 27, the Queen and Crescent Route Pan-American Special, leaving New Orleans 9:10 A. M., will make direct connection at Chattanooga with train on Southern Railway, arriving at Asheville at 5:50 A. M., Washington at 9:00 P. M., and New York at 6:30 A. M.

This gives the Queen and Crescent Route two trains daily to Asheville and all the Summer resorts of East Tennessee, Virginia and the Carolinas, as well as two trains daily to Washington, New York and all Eastern cities and is in line with their constant efforts to give the traveling public the very best service possible. The new service is proving to be of great advantage to the people in the city of New Orleans.

IN MEMORIAM.

MARY CHARLOTTE GEE, daughter of J. J. Gee and Mrs. C. A. Gee, was born in Carrollton, Miss., and grew to beautiful womanhood in our midst, spending all her earthly existence among those who had known her and whom she had known from her infancy. Lovely in childhood, she grew into a radiantly beautiful character as the years flew by.

In young maidenhood she professed faith in Christ as her personal Savior, and united with the Methodist Church under the ministry of Rev. H. E. Smith. She continued a faithful member of that communion until her triumphant ascension from the home of her parents, at 8 o'clock A. M., Monday, Sept. 23, 1901.

A Methodist by choice, she was a true Catholic. For a number of years the prompt and faithful organist for her own Sunday-school and church, she delighted to perform a similar service for every church in town. She loved all and was loved by all.

November 21, 1895, she was united in marriage to James M. Ray. For a few brief, beautiful years their married life was ideal, continuing without a jar till the husband went to his reward. After "Jim" went away "Mary" was never the same. Constantly she sighed for the tones of a voice that was hushed and the touch of a vanished hand. Her speech and countenance proclaimed that her thoughts were constantly in another world. Her life was a struggle between a desire to join her departed companion and a wish to remain here with her two children. That struggle is at an end, and now peacefully sleeps the weary and aching heart which broke from grief for one dearer to her than life. "Lovely and pleasant in their lives, in their death they were not long divided."

The subject of this sketch successfully filled every station in life to which she was called. As a daughter, she was dutiful and affectionate; as a sister, devoted and unselfish; as wife and mother, all that one could be; as a Christian, true and faithful. What more need be or can be said? The large concourse which attended her obsequies was evidence of the universal esteem in which she was held. The wilderness of flowers which completely covered her bier was a mute, but eloquent testimony of love for this lovely woman.

It would be expected that one who had lived so beautifully would die triumphantly, and so it was. She met death with calm and perfect resignation, and with firm, unfaltering trust. She spoke of death as if going on a journey, and with perfect serenity gave most minute directions as to her obsequies and burial.

She was conscious to the very last moment of her earthly existence. Just before she left us one quoted those sublime words of St. Paul, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain," to which she responded with a smile and joyful assent. And as she entered the very avenues of death, and was asked if she understood what was said to her, too weak to speak, she whispered, "Yes."—Carrollton (Miss.) Conservative.

In the early morning of Aug. 23, 1901, in the cemetery in Yazoo City, by the side of husband and parents, we laid to rest all that was mortal of Sister JULIA HARRIET, only surviving child of Rev. Richard Abbey and Julia Barthurst, who was born in Natchez, Miss., July 16, 1836. Her father was for many years an honored member of the Mississippi Conference and the church at large, having spent some time in the management of the Publishing House at Nashville, Tenn. Julia was the only child of a family of five that grew to maturity. In infancy she was kapt zed by Rev. B. M. Drake. She was educated at Shelbyville, Ky., under that splendid character, Mrs. Julia Tevis. On May 2, 1855, she was united in marriage to Dr. August Freland Magruder, of Madison county, Miss., by the Rev. J. M. Pugh, of precious memory. Thus she joined in her life-time three generations of honored men and women. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church early in life. She died in the city of New Orleans, Aug. 22, 1901, in great peace, surrounded by loving children. She was the mother of eleven children—nine sons and two daughters—all of whom survive her except one daughter, who died in infancy. A more impressive scene is scarcely within the experience of a life-time than was presented to the gathering of nine sons and the daughter, all grown to man's and woman's estate, around that mother's bier. Hers was a cheerful, happy, hopeful disposition. She always saw the brightest and best side of life. Her splendid Christian character was deeply impressed upon her children, all of whom are members of the church of the mother, and honored by their brethren. Having been an inmate of the home for two sessions while attending old Madison College, the writer has always recalled with delight the time spent in her happy family circle.

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

In memory of Sister IRESTEN ANN DICKWORTH NESOM (nee Newsom). She was born Oct. 20, 1822, and was married to Abraham Nesom, June 20, 1841, and died Aug. 7, 1901. She was the mother of fourteen children—nine boys and five girls. All of them are dead except three boys and two daughters. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in her girlhood. I only knew Sister Nesom a short time, but the record left of her life tells for itself. She was a true Christian all of her life, even down to old age. She was happy in the Lord, and died in the arms of her Savior. She had a bright and happy experience, always abounding in the Lord. She had that faith that would not take any denial. She was only sick a few days. She had heart trouble, and one morning, when she arose from her chair to start across the house, her heart failed, and she fell to the floor, hurting herself very badly, and only lived seven or eight days. She died in the faith. We can surely say that her death was our loss and her gain. She was a mother to all this country. She sacrificed this life in service both to God and her friends. She leaves a great host of loved ones and friends to mourn over her loss. On the seventh of August she was laid to rest by the side of her husband, who had gone on many years before, and there was the largest number of people at this burial that I have seen for many years to pay their last respects to this mother and sister in Israel.

Her pastor, J. H. MONTGOMERY.

Mrs. ALICE HOWARD (nee Regan) was born near China Grove, Miss., March 29, 1869; married Robt. Howard, Aug. 30, 1888, and died in Holmesville, Sept. 22, 1901. In early childhood Sister Howard joined the M. E. Church, South, at old China Grove, and tried for many years to live for Christ, but her experience was not the experience of a Christian. During a revival meeting at her home church, conducted by W. W. Simmons, she gave herself to Christ, and found peace and happiness. From that time until death her faith was never shaken. For fourteen months she had been confined to her room, almost an invalid. "But even affliction can be borne," she said, "if it is for Christ. There is nothing too hard for me." Often, when her pastor visited her, she would ask him to read the Twenty-third Psalm, and repeat the fourth verse: "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." The Scriptures was certainly verified in the death of Sister Howard. His grace was sufficient in every time of need. When the last moment came she left a message for loved ones and friends that she was happy. May those whom she leaves to mourn for her look to Christ, who is able, even in this sad hour of affliction, to comfort them!

E. L. A.

ROSA and MILES, daughter and son of Mr. J. H. and Mrs. N. I. White, died with dysentery near Pearl, La. The angel carried little Rosa through the valley and shadow of death, and hastened back only fifteen hours and fifteen minutes later for little Miles, to continue their association together. We bow in sorrow at the taking of these little ones, feeling that while the ripened fruit may be gathered, it seems hard that the buds will be taken before they have opportunity to blossom. May God comfort and cheer the hearts of their loved ones!

J. S. RUTLEDGE.

MARY ELLA DICKSON (nee Stuart) was born Aug. 9, 1880, and died at the home of her mother, near Days, Miss., Aug. 23, 1901. Her illness was very short indeed, having had a congestive chill, from which life's forces, with kindest attention and medical skill, could not recover her. Her husband, who was away from home, returned to find his companion fast sinking. She made a profession of faith, and told her mother it was all right. May God bless the bereaved ones, and save them in heaven!

BAN P. JACO.

ELLA MAY, daughter of John and Rebecca Dowdle, died Sept. 6, at Dry Creek, La., aged fourteen months and two days. In the ways of nature it is, perhaps, best sometimes to take the little ones from our arms; so we will try to accept the afflict and bear it, believing that the tender bud will yet bring forth fruit. May God comfort the troubled hearts of friends and loved ones!

NOTICES.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

For satisfactory reasons the Sunday-school Board has discontinued, regretfully, for the present the Institute work as per circulars heretofore sent to the preachers and superintendents. Therefore, all appointments for the same from this date are cancelled. It is hoped that the way will be opened in the near future to resume this much-needed normal work within our bounds.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Oct. 11, 1901.

To the Presiding Elders of the Louisiana Conference:

Each presiding elder of the Louisiana Conference is requested to select a worthy young man within the bounds of his district, and appoint him to a free scholarship in Centenary College.

I. W. COOPER, President,
HENRY BEACH CARRE, Vice-Pres.

The members of the Ministers' Education Aid Association of the Louisiana Conference will please take notice that their annual membership obligation of five dollars has now fallen due, and that I will be pleased to receive the same at an early date.

ROBERT H. WYNN, Secretary.
3317 Camp St., New Orleans, La.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference Brotherhood:

DEAR BRETHREN: You are hereby notified that Assessment No. 26, called on the death of Bro. P. A. Johnston, is now due, and must be paid within sixty days. Remit to Rev. B. F. Lewis, Treas., at Forest, Miss.

B. F. JONES,
Sec'y Miss. Conf. Brotherhood.

Indian Mission.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to report the following amounts received for Indian Mission since my last report:

Rev. I. L. Peebles, Wesson, Miss.	$5 00
Mrs. M. Galladay, Coffeeville, Miss.	4 00
Mrs. Rev. P. A. Johnston, Meridian, Miss.	5 00
Mrs. McPherson, Jackson, Miss.	2 50
Miss Texacana Coleman, Big Point, Miss.	1 00
Mrs. R. A. Harris, Oak Ridge, Miss.	3 05
Mrs. E. Legrand, Newton, Miss.	1 00
Dr. E. B. Partin, Hickory, Miss.	5 00
By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney for Three Ladies, Pickens, Miss.	3 00

Two or three of the first names on he above list may have been reported. I have lost some of my ADVOCATES, and, therefore, do not remember, and it will be better to report twice than not at all, and I am so thankful for amounts received.

Now, I hope as the Fall is opening up, and money is beginning to circulate, I will receive many contributions. Please send on as rapidly as you can, friends of the mission. Send to Lorman, Miss. God bless the ADVOCATE and its editor.

A. D. MILLER.

Lorman, Miss., Oct. 10, 1901.

A Prominent Minister Writes.

After ten years of great suffering from indigestion, with great nervous prostration, biliousness, disordered kidneys and constipation, I have been cured of Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, and am now a well man. Rev. C. C. DAVIS, Eld. M. E. Church, South, No. 28 Tatnall St., Atlanta, Ga.

A Prominent Memphian Writes.

Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised me to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced using Lemon Elixir.

R. L. ROCCO,
206 Hernando St., Memphis, Tenn.

A Card.

This is to certify that I used Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for neuralgia of the head and eyes with the most marked benefit to my general health. I would gladly have paid $500 for the relief it has given me at a cost of two or three dollars. H. A. BEALL,
Clerk Superior Court, Randolph Co., Ga.

GEORGIA LETTER.

BY REV. GEO. G. SMITH.

I, with all other preachers, have paid close attention to the great London Council. I confess to some anxiety resulting from the obvious leaning which some of its leaders show to modern rationalism as it expresses itself in what is known as the Higher Criticism, and the strange oblivionsness of others to what, it seems to me, is a great peril; but alarm from that direction is small compared to that produced by the discussion of "Indifferentism" as it was presented by a Canada preacher. "Not three per cent. of the laboring people in England are communicants!" "Eighty towns in Maine without any regular religious service!" "The churches abandoned in New Hampshire!" "The gulf between the church and the masses growing deeper and darker!" These are the statements of fact as they are presented. Are these things so? Is it not a mockery, if they are, that men of position and influence, in the presence of such facts, are talking of Hexatenchs and of two Isaiahs, and the clerical Miss Nancies are trying to remedy all ills by quartette choirs, ecclesiastical haberdashery and twenty-minute sermonettes? That these things are so is, I reckon, certainly true as far as the places which are referred to are concerned. As far as it goes in New England, it is bad enough, and was certainly to be expected when one remembers that for near sixty years the main purpose of the pulpit there seemed to be to put down slavery and Romanism, and Democracy and intemperance, and to promote education, loyalty to the Republican party, and total abstinence, and that the gospel had a subordinate place, if by the gospel we mean the atonement of Jesus Christ, repentance, and faith.

It ought, however, to be known that there has been an exodus of the evangelical Protestants of New England to the far West, and the change of location may show that there has been merely a change of homes, and not an entire loss. The people who have taken the places of these children of the old Puritans are Catholic laborers, who are the employees of the wealthy mill owners. There is some comfort in this fact, but it is painful enough at best, and the condition of things is not all due to emigration.

The startling statement of Canon Farrar as to England may be only true of the Church of England, which has no favor with the working classes of the higher order (it is the church of the peasantry still). The Free Methodists, the Primitive Methodists, the Baptists and the Wesleyans are, perhaps, not taken into the count by the Canon. As to the prediction of Goldwin Smith that we are on the eve of a great religious collapse, we may simply put that with Voltaire's prophecy of over a century ago. Thank God in our Southern section things are by no means so disheartening. There are evils enough, and I would be less disturbed if I saw a proper recognition of them, and an honest effort to correct them; and I see, as all observant men see, that while we have up to this time escaped the pestilence, it is slowly, but steadily approaching us, and in my old age I am burdened with anxiety because, as far as I can see, our leading people are so satisfied with things as they are that they are not awake to coming dangers. I find, however, much in the present state of things in the South to encourage me to hope for the best, if we take the alarm at the right time and begin to provide against the approaching storm. Germany, Holland, France, Switzerland, New England, all warn us against allowing rationalism to creep into our pulpits and our colleges, and all warn us against the supreme folly of dividing our forces and contending for mere speculations.

The sad and, as it seemed to me, needless controversy on holiness has done more to help on the rationalists than any other one agency. Of course, it will be vehemently denied by the very rationalists themselves that there is any such movement or any such danger in Methodism, but anyone who has open eyes can see its influence in the North and its invasion of the South. As yet it has had little influence on the great body of our preachers, and they still preach the old-time religion; but unless I am much mistaken, there are not a few preachers of culture among us even who care more for Dliver than they do for Clarke, and who relish the Outlook, the Christian Register and the Independent far more than they do the conservative Advocates. When we begin to distrust the Bible; when we cease to stress spiritual religion; when we decide, as one in the Nashville decided a few weeks ago, that the old-time emotionalism of Methodism and its manifestation is effete; when we substitute culture for spiritual power, then we may look for the same results which have followed in other sections.

Methodism is not old. We do not need many new methods, and we are not now to pinch the cerements of a dead church, and throw them around us as a royal robe. We need the vigorous use of our old-time methods of preaching and praying and singing, and we need to watch the enemy, and stand firmly against him. It is only when churches cease to have revivals, when droning platitudes take the place of stirring appeals, that they are empty. We need only an old-time revival to save us from the doom of indifferentism so vividly presented as having fallen on other lands. The preacher who accepts the methods of the Higher Critics and discredits the Book our fathers revered as infallible, that finds no place for the supernatural, that asks the abrogation or disregard of the General Rules, that discredits preaching and relies on ritualism, that cares more for culture than piety, is simply preparing the way for agnosticism, and finally atheism. Churches served by such men may be elegant, but they will be empty; the preachers may be well paid, but their ministry will be fruitless. As yet the evil is not here to any extent, but it is coming, and to be forewarned is to be forearmed.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NEWS.

BY PROF. B. E. YOUNG.

Since the opening a number of new students have come to swell the already unprecedented attendance at Millsaps. The total at present is about 210, besides a score of law students. The many small difficulties and problems which always attend a college opening have now been adjusted, and affairs are moving on smoothly. Millsaps has always been known for its orderliness, and all the students have settled down to hard work.

Under the revised schedule a much wider selection of courses is offered students. The A. B. students may now elect a modern language as early as the Sophomore year, while in the Junior year they may have a still wider choice, continuing the modern language study if they wish. In the B. S. and Ph.B. courses a still wider latitude is offered. This step in the direction of progress may be further supplemented in the next few years until every student may pursue just the work he is fitted for. At present, however, the limited teaching force is rather hard pressed to satisfy all demands.

Quite a number of our trustees attended the meeting of the Board of Trustees last week, when Major Millsaps' gift of the Jackson College property was accepted. Concerning this magnificent donation from our founder, we shall give details in a succeeding number of the ADVOCATE.

The two literary societies have just had enthusiastic and well-attended opening exercises. No feature of our college life is more productive of results than the literary societies, as shown by the fact that Millsaps now leads all Southern colleges in oratory and debating.

The Galloway Society was called to order by Bro. C. M. Simpson. After being led in prayer by Bro. W. L. Duren, twenty-three new members were received. After addresses by various members, the following officers were elected: W. L. Doren, president; J. R. Countiss, vice-president; Felix P. Gunter, treasurer; H. B. Heidelberg, secretary; R. E. Bennet, assistant secretary.

The Lamar Society was opened by Mr. Allen Thompson as president. Chaplain Hall led in prayer. Twenty new members were taken in. Mr. Allen Thompson then made an excellent address to the society. After several other vigorous addresses from members, who reviewed the long career of the society and prophesied future progress, the following officers were elected: Anselm J. McLaurin, Jr., president; D. C. Enoche, vice-president; W. C. Bowman, secretary; H. L. Austin, treasurer; L. R. Featherstone, corresponding secretary; Allen Cameron, critic; A. M. Ellison, censor; C. W. Hall, chaplain.

The Y. M. C. A. has opened another flourishing year. The association's reception to the new students is always one of our enjoyable occasions, and is indispensable in making the strangers welcome. It is doing a grand work, led on each year by conscientious and hard-working officers. This year these officers will be: C. M. Simpson, president; F. E. Gunter, vice-president; J. M. Kennedy, organist; W. C. Bowman, secretary; H. A. Wood, treasurer.

The following officers of the Millsaps Collegian have been appointed by the faculty: W. L. Doren, editor-in-chief; J. R. Countiss, associate editor; W. A. Williams, literary editor; Charlton Alexander, local editor; D. C. Enoche, business manager; O. W. Bradley and W. C. Bowman, assistant managers.

NOTES FROM THE JACKSON DISTRICT.

BY REV. T. B HOLLOMAN, D. D.

At this writing we have just finished our third round, taking in the hot, long days of July, August, and September. All of the nineteen appointments of the district have been visited in my own buggy, save one or two. The pastors have been at their posts and faithful to their work. In nearly all the charges there have been good revivals, and the spiritual condition of the churches is greatly improved. While we have not kept the data, the reports, as given by the brethren, justify us in stating that the number of accessions will exceed any year since we came on the district. From a financial standpoint this has been a typical third quarter. Are finances and the spirit of revival incompatible? Will these numerical additions add any to the salaries of the pastors, or will these works content themselves with "shouting and singing," and let the faithful men of God go unpaid?

I fear, Mr. Editor, that many see but one side of religion, whereas our Master said there were two sides—worship and service. "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

We are hoping and confidently expecting an advance in all of our reports at our approaching Conference. Such faithful work as the pastors, all, have done must bear its fruit. Not one has been a laggard, despite the fact that some have spent much time in building and repairing churches and parsonages.

Owing to the protracted drouth both the corn and cotton crops have been cut short, the corn, especially, suffering greatly.

AN OUTING.

During the quarter this "beloved" had a most delightful outing of four days. Getting four dollars and four days together, we proceeded to make good our oft-repeated promise to visit the friends in Natchez. From the time we began to pack the grip, and to realize that we really were going to make the trip, we were like a school-boy out for the first time. The train could not keep pace with our impatience until we rolled into the depot on the bluff. Here, on the streets, in the offices, in the homes, we met the cordial greetings of former friends. To them and the beloved pastor of Jefferson Street we are indebted for a royal time.

The citizen of Mississippi should not go abroad until he has seen Natchez. Her romantic scenery, her palatial homes, and her places of historic interest, are all worthy of the trip. Here we found Bros. Carpenter and Abney in favor with their people, and bringing up the work of a successful year.

In a few days we begin our fourth, when we hope to communicate more fully.

SOMETHING UNIQUE.

At a school-house appointment on the Summit circuit, Mississippi Conference, we have had encouragement. The village of Cold Springs, Lincoln county, is the mill-yard of Easterling and May, formerly Moreton and Helm. Here we have had Saturday night preaching occasionally during this year, with the usual inconvenience of poor lighting and seating, and general lack of organized effort. The Lord moved on the heart of Mrs. Mary A. Easterling, wife of the general manager, to come into our church from a sister denomination. She then determined, about two months ago, to build a house of worship for the people who were as sheep without a fold. This pious thought ripened rapidly into a purpose. She "arose and built." With a very few suggestions from the pastor, the co-operation of a good mechanic, the encouragement of a generous husband, and, above all, the good hand of our God upon us, the closing week of September found a beautiful church, capable of seating about two hundred and fifty persons, standing on a one-acre lot well situated for beauty and convenience. This was handsomely seated and well lighted—numerous windows for day, and electricity for the night. To all this she gave a full warranted title, fee simple, and with trust clause to the M. E. Church, South. The deed is in form prepared by our Church Extension Board, and flawless. The property is worth not less than one thousand dollars. The whole was the gift of Mrs. E. H. Easterling to perpetuate the memory of Mr. John J. Heim, and because of her love to God.

This is rare beneficence. May the recital of it move others to like action! There are numbers in our church at large who have the means to do such Christ-like work, but where are the willing hearts and hands? If they only knew the sweet satisfaction of soul that comes from thus providing a house for the Lord and a church home for his children, how swiftly would they move!

On Sunday, the twenty-ninth of September—a beautiful day—people came from several adjacent communities as well as from the mill-yard, and the new house was well filled. Dr. A. F. Watkins, president of Whitworth College—a personal friend of the family, and bound by many strong and lasting ties to the pastor—consented to preach the sermon for the occasion. Those who have listened to our brother need no assurance that wise words and strong were spoken in the name of our King. The text of the 11 A. M. sermon, "Holiness becometh thy house, O Lord, forever," was not more appropriate than its treatment by this gifted and gracious servant of God. It was full, deep, strong. I wish there were space for a syllabus.

The formal dedication, according to our Discipline, was made by the pastor, after its presentation by Bro. E. H. Easterling in behalf of the trustees. Bros. J. M. Martin and Ernest Newman stood with him on the platform. The scene was sweetly solemn and impressive.

Six children were baptized at the altar that morning, and a church of twenty adults was organized. This was a high day in our Israel, for which we thank the Lord.

The same evening and next day Dr. Watkins delighted us with more spiritual teaching. His wife lent the charm of her presence to the occasion, and thus added much to our pleasure and profit.

Bro Henry A Gatlin, of Sharon, was already with us preaching for a revival. His work was earnest, stirring, and effective. He stayed several days to the delight of the pastor and many friends. Much good was wrought in the name of the Master.

In good hope. J. P DRAKE.

MISSIONARY RALLY.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: The general Missionary Rally for the southern portion of Meridian district met in Waynesboro, Miss., Sept 24 and 25. Only four pastors, besides the Waynesboro pastor, were present, but the meeting was a decided success.

Tuesday morning, Sept. 24, Rev. C. S. Embree, of Wayne mission, delivered an interesting address on St. Paul as a missionary, and at eleven o'clock Rev. R. H. Barr preached an interesting sermon. The best methods for securing missionary collections were discussed by the brethren, and, we believe, to great profit.

Rev. J. T. Nicholson, pastor at Waynesboro, delivered a most admirable missionary address on Tuesday afternoon.

Tuesday evening service was in charge of Mrs. J. T. Nicholson, who had been training the young people and children for the occasion, and all who attended were, doubtless, profited by the songs and recitations. We make special mention of two features of this hour's service. First, a paper written and read by Mr. J. P. Davis, of Waynesboro. His topic was, "Am I my brother's keeper?" It was in many respects the best paper this writer had heard on the great missionary subject. It was convincing and, therefore, unanswerable to all fair-minded persons. The other feature was an address delivered by Rev. H. M. Ellis to the children upon our debt to the whole world, taking as his foundation Paul's remarkable statement, "I am debtor both to the Greek and to the barbarian, both to the wise and to the unwise." The address was a strong one, full of great truths.

The second day was devoted:

First. To hearing and answering objections that anyone had heard brought against the missionary work. Many and varied were these objections, but all were answered, and the answers supported by the Scriptures.

Second. To a missionary experience meeting, in which many incidents were related of books read, which had been an inspiration to those present, on the cause of missions.

Third. The day's exercises were closed with an hour of quietude, heart-searching, introspection, resolution, and consecration. This was indeed a very precious hour. Many testified this missionary meeting had been a great spiritual uplift to them. One sister said to the writer, "I have gotten more spiritual good out of these two days of a missionary meeting than I did out of a ten days' camp meeting."

Bro. Ellis preached on Wednesday night. It was not my privilege to hear his sermon, having been called away, but I heard it spoken of by one of the best judges of preaching as being the best missionary sermon he had heard in many years.

Upon the whole, the rally was a success, and those who attended will never regret it, and those who did not will never realize what they missed. F. B. ORMOND.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Two months hence our Conference will convene in Winona. We are anticipating a joyous time. The Winona people are making all needful preparations for the entertainment of the brethren, and also for the sisters who may come. We are glad that we are to have Bishop Morrison with us, and we hope to have the presence of a goodly number of the connectional officials. And, above all, we pray for the presence and guidance of the Holy Spirit in all the deliberations and ministries of the occasion.

Rev. W. D. Parrish and wife are occupying a neat and comfortable parsonage in Sallis. The old one has been made new under the supervision of the diligent pastor. He also expects to report collections in full at Conference.

A meeting is in progress in Coinmbus. The pastor, Rev. T. W. Lewis, is being assisted by Rev. W. K. Piner, of Kentucky, who has recently been transferred to the Memphis Conference. We hope great good will be accomplished. Bro. Piner is indeed a gospel preacher. He preaches not himself, but the Word of God clearly and forcibly.

Other meetings are being held at different places. May the Conference year close in a great revival tide!

West Point Epworth League has ordered eight sets of the new Reading Course. Who will be the next? Price, only $2.25 per set, delivered.

All Leaguers and others should read these four excellent books.

"Missionary Issues of the Twentieth Century" is one of the most valuable books ever issued by our Publishing House. It contains the papers and addresses of the General Missionary Conference held in New Orleans last April; also a number of maps and charts illustrative of the work of missions, the latest statistical tables, and a select bibliography. It is a large volume of 600 pages, well gotten up in every sense, and costs only $1, postpaid. Every Methodist should possess and read this great book, and hold it as a souvenir.

Bishop Candler's new book, "High Lives and High Living," should be read by every man, young and old, who would be good and useful in his generation. Price, $1.

No preacher or member who would be up to date in the knowledge of the work and state of his church can afford to be without "The Year-Book of the M. E. Church, South, 1901;" just out, and costs only ten cents.

Send orders for the above, and any books wanted, to the undersigned.

"One word more, and I shall have done."

The colportage work done during the year has been very gratifying, but we are just now in a dull season for sales; nevertheless, expenses are not lessened. Therefore, I most kindly ask all who owe me any amount, even the smallest, to remit soon—by the close of this month at farthest. The aggregate of the many small amounts due means much to your humble servant just now. This request does not apply to accounts recently made, with the understanding that they are to be settled at Conference. G. W. BACHMAN.

Winona, Miss., Oct. 4, 1901.

Set yourself earnestly to see what you were made to do, and then set yourself earnestly to do it; and the loftier your purpose is, the more sure you will be to make the world richer with every enrichment of yourself.—Phillips Brooks.

Christian Advocate.

What Our Editors Say.

A LESSON HARD TO LEARN.

God required of Israel the first fruits of the harvest. His portion came first of all. It was to be brought with thanksgiving into his courts. After the Lord's portion was paid, the devout Israelite could enjoy the remainder. This duty has not passed. It is upon us to-day. God's share of our harvest should be speedily brought to him. Delay is dangerous. We may be tempted to decrease it if we wait. Other calls will come. Alluring investments will persuade. It is wisdom as well as duty to devote the first fruits to him who gave us all that we have. He makes his demands for our good. He requires us to give that he may give to us. The most liberal man that ever rendered offering to the Most High, received in return far more than he offered. Those who "rob God" will not escape the consequences of their sin. "Honor the Lord with thy substance and with the first fruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty and thy vats shall overflow with new wine." Temporal and spiritual blessings will follow obedience to the law of the harvest. Some Christians give to God last of all. They take their portion and give what fragments are left. It is folly so to do. The poor widow gave first to God's prophet, and in all the famine there was no lack to her. Let us learn our lesson from her, and rejoice as she did over God's mercy.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE AWAKENING IN CHINA.

For the awakening in China the church of God here should be humbly grateful. It comes after years of hard toil and earnest prayer on the part of many who have caught the mind and will of God in Christ Jesus concerning them. It should embolden our faith to ask large things, and it should stimulate our zeal to more diligent service for the millions there who are lost. Our opportunity as a church becomes each day greater and more thrilling. The appeal to our liberality and consecration is each succeeding day made stronger. The "opened doors" in China and the increased liberality of our people in the home church towards foreign missions do not synchronize by mere accident. Opportunity for larger service and ability to render its coming together declare the unerring guidance of a Providence, and reveal unmistakably what the will of the Lord is. In view of these facts, our pastors and people can easily see that in bringing up full missionary assessments this year we do vastly more than make a record for our own gratification. We respond to that clearly revealed will of God as expressed in the thrilling events abroad and the quickened conscience of the church at home. This is religion.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

TIME FOR POOR GUESSING.

We are now in the season when secular papers are beginning to give voice to reportorial prognostications about Annual Conference appointments. Here comes a leading daily declaring that Rev. So-and-so will be made a presiding elder, and that So-and-so will be changed, and that So-and-so will do such and such a thing. It further declares that So-and-so will take the floor of the Annual Conference and vigorously oppose the changing of district boundary lines. It is enough to say that the "floor of an Annual Conference" has nothing whatever to do with the change of district boundary lines. The matter belongs to the secret councils of the Bishop and his cabinet. To predict a change of boundaries, or a change of preachers from one place to another, is, and can be nothing but guess work. Let Methodists be not disturbed, then, by the fanciful flourishes of reportorial goose quills. These flip predictions are generally accompanied by a display of ignorance of Methodist economy that is laughable. Brethren whose names are mentioned for this or that place or performance are not in the least responsible for such gratuity. Rumors outside of the newspapers are worth no more than those inside.—Midland Methodist.

TRUTH IS MAKING PROGRESS.

The world can not be redeemed by the ministry alone. The laity must accompany the ministry with like consecration, and, by the power of example and sanctified teaching, constrain a following after the Lord. . . . . How speedily would the world be brought to the Savior, did the whole church feel as the few who plan for the world wide conquest of missions. Gradually, however, the zeal of the few is being felt by the many, and, as a most hopeful sign, districts are being multiplied by the tens which pay in full their assessments; and the marvelous transforming power of the gospel is being noted by kingdoms, republics and governments of various kinds, so that the redemption of heathen lands is a realized necessity, even from the commercial point of view. Consuls, ministers and plenipotentiaries are loud in their praise of missions and the missionaries, and heathendoms' vast millions are rolling upon the heart of the church like the incoming tides of the great sea, never to recede till the glad song of its redemption shall thrill the world, and the angels of God shall catch up the refrain and sing it around the throne of God. Heaven speed the day.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

THE SUPREME CARE.

The personal salvation of the members of his church is surely the supreme care which every true pastor will carry upon his heart. Much work is to be done in the church. The traveling evangelists who berate the pastors for lack of spiritual power and the church for its worldliness turn out to be chief agents for increasing the evils against which they declaim. The method of the evangelist is to raise a furore, and under the impulse of a temporary excitement draw many into the church who have experienced no real conversion. A church gets worse by such revivals. The forcing process of conversion is not spiritually sound or safe. But in many cases the lapse into worldliness is chargeable to the pastor. We Methodists hold that real converts may backslide, and that babes in Christ need careful nourishment. The preacher may attend to his fine sermons, and means of drawing a large congregation; he may keep an eye on the financial resources of the people, and their worldly respectability, and so build up the church in these respects while spiritual life is dying out of it all the time.—Arkansas Methodist.

A MATTER OF FACT.

A church editor with great confidence alleges that the International League Conference is perilous as a field for propagating the doctrine of "organic union," but is equally confident that the Ecumenical Conference is free from such a chance. It is a matter of fact, however, that the only serious effort ever made to precipitate "organic union" was made in the Ecumenical Conference at Washington City in October, 1891. We were an eye witness of that memorable scene, when Bishop Foster, as the Senior Bishop of the M. E. Church, called on Bishop Keener, the Senior Bishop of the M. E. Church, South, to meet him in a present effort to effect Methodist union. We are opposed to "organic union" under present conditions, and shall be opposed to it so long as these conditions exist; but we could hail it as a benediction to Methodism and the church universal if God and our myriad-hearted and myriad-minded Methodisms made it possible. It is not to be dreaded as a plague or a mildew.—Epworth Era.

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS.

Immersionists have assigned various reasons why Jesus was baptized, none of which are scriptural. Being hard pressed at one point, their fertile imagination is quick to invent another. They know to admit that Jesus was initiated by John into his priestly office would prove disastrous to their pet theory, because priests were consecrated by sprinkling.

Ask the average immersionist why Jesus was baptized, and he will answer, "As an example for us to follow." Nothing is further from the truth. Were it true, he would have been the first person baptized by John instead of the last, as he was; then all could have followed him.

The theory presents several difficulties. If he was baptized as an example for us, he was baptized, then, for the same reason we are baptized, and was, therefore, a sinner. "Unless there was a difference in the act which John performed in reference to Jesus, or some other method of distinguishing his true character, Christ, by being baptized, would have been considered by the Jews a sinner like themselves."

The theory presents another difficulty. In whose name was Christ baptized, and upon what profession of faith?

"These are essential points in the baptism of immersionists. The absence of faith annuls it, they say; so also does the absence of the Christian formula. Now, it is evident that Christ did not profess faith in himself—that would be absurd—nor could he be baptized in his own name—that would be equally absurd. If, then, he was baptized in the name of the Father only, his example would lead to his own rejection. This is plain. And if he had been baptized in his own name, he would have acknowledged thereby that he was his own Savior. Our Lord could not thus, without denying his own mission, receive the same baptism which was administered to others. No formula could have been used, no repentance required, no faith or profession of it necessary, and the only point of similarity between the ceremony performed on the sinful Jews was the mode of administration. In this alone can it be said to be baptism at all."

Following Christ in baptism is equivalent to following him into the priesthood, and is the climax of absurdity. Hard pressed at this point, immersionists have flopped from this dilemma to another equally as entangling. "He was baptized," they say, "simply to honor John's ministry." This would also force the admission from him that he was a sinner, since John's baptism was designed for sinners only. Their vacillation does not at all help their tottering dogma.

Pedo-Baptists, generally, are a unit in ascribing the scriptural reasons of Christ's baptism. The Scriptures mention two, both of which point to his official character or priesthood.

1. "That he should be made manifest to Israel." (John i, 31.) So said John. His baptism was not only instituted for that purpose, but when he baptized Christ, it reached its climax. "The act thus was simply a formal recognition of Jesus as the Christ, the Anointed One, and henceforth the only High-priest who, by his intercession, could make atonement for sin." After John thus recognized Christ in his official character, he said, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." John's ministry had no force, except as it pointed to and was consummated in the manifestation of Christ's priesthood.

2. "To fulfill all righteousness." (Matt. iii, 15.) So said Christ. The righteousness to which Christ called John's attention was "all" specific, and referred to ceremonial law inducting him into the priesthood, as will be clearly seen in the next article. It will also be shown that Christ was not immersed, but baptized by affusion.

One historical fact in confirmation is here given, viz: "The artistic representations of baptism which have come down to us from primitive times all set forth the ordinance as performed by affusion." No less than six of these stereotypes have been discovered by modern explorers in the catacombs at Rome, dating back to the early centuries.

"Circuit Rider" used to see in some of the illustrated family Bibles one of these pictures representing John as pouring water on Christ's head. Within the bounds of his first pastoral charge lived an enthusiastic Baptist brother, who one day went to a near-by city and bought a family Bible. He carried it home and, while turning its pages, saw one of those historical pictures representing Christ being baptized by affusion. With "righteous indignation" he immediately got in his buggy, rode thirty miles back to town, showed the picture to the salesman, and said: "You sold me a Methodist Bible. I won't have it. I'm a Baptist." "Pardon me," said the clerk, "I thought you were a Methodist. I will get you another one." He carried the Bible into an adjoining room, and with his scissors cut out the objectionable leaf. He brought the same Bible back again with the remark, "Here's a Baptist Bible." The brother carried it back home, singing, no doubt, as he journeyed, that beautiful Baptist hymn, one verse of which begins:

"While water sparkles, blest the day;
Hasten, sinners, O haste away;" etc.

CONCERNING DUES AND PLEDGES.

The reports from our corresponding secretary and Conference treasurer for the quarter ending first of September were full of encouragement for our North Mississippi Home Mission Society. The receipts in dues and specials, and the increase in numbers, were very gratifying, in spite of the fact that the second quarter is always our hardest, for the reason that many of our officers and members leave the State for the Summer, and it is very difficult for the societies to hold regular meetings during the heated term. The third and fourth quarters are always our fullest, and, perhaps, a caution to auxiliary treasurers may not be out of place at this midway station in our third quarter.

It is understood that the dues of each member amount to $1.50 per year. Of this sum, $1.20 goes to the General Treasurer, who holds 50 per cent. of it subject to the order of the Conference treasurer. The balance, 25 cents, Contingent Fund, and 5 cents for publication of Minutes, is retained in the Conference treasury. These last items are somewhat difficult to report, as there is no provision made for them in the Wolff Record Book. If, however, our auxiliary treasurers are not careful to specify them in reporting to our Conference treasurers, they are sent on with other dues to the General Treasurer, and we only receive back half of what is really a Conference expense fund. You will, therefore, see the need of great care in reporting.

The delegates to our annual meeting in Water Valley made pledges amounting to $120, and the Conference officers were instructed to use a part of this, if necessary, for an organization fund. Most, if not all, of this sum will go to the general work, and I trust the auxiliary societies will be prompt in sending on their pledges to our Conference treasurer, Mrs. Phillips, at Winona, Miss., as the General Board has a place for every dollar. With the work constantly growing on their hands, our general officers look to the Conference societies to help meet the increasing demands. North Mississippi has never failed to meet such expectations, and I am sure will not fail now. MRS. E. W. FOOTE.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A GREAT MEETING.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: On the fifth Sunday in September, at 11 o'clock, we began a meeting at Big Rock Church, and continued through the following Friday night. To say we had a good meeting would be putting it mildly. The church was on a very low plane spiritually, some hard feelings and differences existed among the brethren, and many of the faithful few had almost given up hopes of a revival; but on Wednesday morning the fire broke out, and continued to burn through to the close of the meeting. The most remarkable features of this meeting (for a country church) were the taking of two collections—the first on Wednesday for a balance of $12 due on the Conference collections, but, when counted, we had $20. No one joined the church till after this collection; no one got real happy till after the collection. There were applications for church membership at each service following this first collection. On Thursday night, at the urgent request of the stewards, another collection was called for to pay balance due on support of the ministry. Only $28 was due, but when all had been counted, we had $50. For all purposes, incidentals, etc., the neat sum of $75 was raised during this meeting of only six days. Summing up the work done, we report eleven sermons preached, a number of reclamations and conversions, many old differences settled, family altars established, the church greatly revived, ten accessions to the church, and all financial claims on the church secured in cash and good subscriptions, besides back rations for the past two years for all purposes. The preaching (except two sermons) was done by Rev. H. W. Chambers, of the Alabama Conference. Rev. R. H. Barr was present two days, and rendered efficient help in prayer and song. Bro. Chambers is a promising young man. His preaching was scriptural, logical, and endued with power from on high. To him is due the credit for the good collections. He is, beyond doubt, the best collector I ever saw. Away with the idea that a collection will kill a revival. It was thoroughly tested in the recent meeting at Big Rock.

The work, upon the whole, is in better shape every way than it has been for several years. The older brethren at Big Rock tell me they never knew of just such a meeting at Big Rock before. We hope to report everything in full at Conference.

We begin this (Monday) morning to repair our parsonage, which work has been needed for some time.

For the many blessings, both temporal and spiritual, of which we have been the recipients, we give God the praise as the bountiful giver. We are praying, hoping and working for yet greater victories.

Success to the ADVOCATE.

SORANTON, MISS.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: There was recently a protracted meeting at the Methodist Church in Pascagoula Street. The attendance was full, and the services conducted by Rev. J. G. Galloway, of Ocean Springs, pastor, assisted by Rev. H. W. Featherstun, pastor of the Moss Point Church, were highly instructive and appreciated. The discourses upon religious duty and social purity, based on the temperance of opinion and the performance of individual guidance between right and wrong, can not but be productive of great good.

Bro. Featherstun's book of "The Christ of Our Poets" is just out, and is considered a sparkling gem in the galaxy of sublime Christian literature; that all the poets of immortal fame believed in the Savior. Mr. Featherstun proves in his estimable work that such is the deduction to be made from their inspired stanzas. "O pity, God, this miserable age!" We shall believe. M. T.

HARRISTON CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: We have just held our fourth Quarterly Conference, and a delightful occasion it was. I am now fully satisfied that Bishop Hargrove made no mistake when he appointed Rev. T. W. Adams as presiding elder of the Natchez district, or any other district, as far as that is concerned. He is magnifying his office, and growing on the people every day. He preached us four splendid sermons, and the people were perfectly delighted. His sermon on Sunday, at eleven o'clock, would have done credit to any time or occasion. Our people will be glad to have him remain on the district.

The circuit is in good condition, and, I think, is growing in spirituality all the time. At Cane Ridge Church I have and will receive members every preaching day for four months, and, I hope, longer. The stewards made a good report, and are now very hopeful of clearing and paying up everything. God grant that it may be so. The people have been very kind indeed to us, and we certainly appreciate their kindness. The ladies are looking after and improving the parsonage, and will soon have it in good condition. God bless them, one and all, and all the people that have in any way helped towards our support or comfort. We appreciate every act of kindness, and pray God's richest blessings to come upon them all.

We enjoy the ADVOCATE very much. You, Mr. Editor, are giving us a good paper. May God give you great success! Yours in Christ,

A. D. MILLER.

YAZOO CITY.

We have recently held a protracted meeting in Yazoo City, assisted by Rev. C. W. Crisler, of Brookhaven, and Rev. B. F. Lewis, of Forest. Bro. Crisler was with us only four days. He rendered efficient service while here, and we regretted that circumstances necessitated his early departure. B. F. Lewis was with us throughout the meeting, except the last night, and did most of the preaching. Nine persons have been received on profession of faith, and two other applications for membership are pending. Six have been received by certificate during the meeting and since. There were some bright conversions, and many of our people were led to seek a closer walk with God. On the whole, the church was strengthened and blessed. Up to this time we have had forty-four accessions to the church this year. Our church is in good condition. Harmony prevails, and zeal for God characterizes the lives of many of our people.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

NETTLETON, MISS.

During one of our meetings, some weeks ago, we went for dinner to an humble home where the father had been a dissipated man. His wife was inexpressibly happy that the long-prayed-for time had come when husband and father should give his heart to God and be a changed man. There were three children—two girls, and baby boy about four. Though humble, they were truly glad to have the preacher with them. We had just held our missionary mass meeting the previous Sunday, and all seemed anxious to know more of the great movement. The two older children were planning with their parents how they would make some missionary money by picking cotton. While looking over some papers later in the evening, "little Tom" came quietly into the room and, without saying a word, handed us a little red copper. He was asked if this was for missions, but, smiling, shyly walked out of the room. At the service that night we told of the incident, and started a "Junior List" of all children under ten years of age who would give one cent for each year, to be headed by the name of "little Tom," and the money to go for missions. A great many names have been gladly handed in, and the number increases daily. Are there any who would like to start a Junior List? It may help you bring up your per cent. R. P. NEBLETT.

CARROLLTON, MISS.

The Quarterly Conference, last Saturday and Sunday, was a meeting of interest. The reports of the pastor, Rev. Eugene Johnson, showed a very good degree of prosperity during the year. Some good revivals have been held, and quite a number added to the church. The best meeting held during the year was at Valley Hill, which was really a remarkable meeting. The people at that point are quite liberal and progressive, and this year have built a splendid house of worship. Carrollton and McAneruey each already

Aching Joints

In the fingers, toes, arms, and other parts of the body, are joints that are inflamed and swollen by rheumatism—that acid condition of the blood which affects the muscles also.

Sufferers dread to move, especially after sitting or lying long, and their condition is commonly worse in wet weather.

"It has been a long time since we have been without Hood's Sarsaparilla. My father thinks he could not do without it. He has been troubled with rheumatism since he was a boy, and Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine he can take that will enable him to take his place in the field." Miss ADA DOTY, Sidney, Iowa.

had good churches. Bethel has no church, but they have beaten their former record this year. During the year the circulation of the church papers has made substantial gains. Rev. J. H. Mitchell is a good presiding elder. His sermon on Sunday, at eleven o'clock, was exceptionally good. His plea for character and manhood, in the home, in politics, in official position, in the church, in the pulpit, was timely and forceful.—Carrollton (Miss.) Conservative.

PONTOTOC, MISS.

DR. BOSWELL: I have just closed my protracted meetings. Had Brother J. R. Roberson with me in two meetings, and helped him in one. He had 15 or 16 conversions; same number of additions. I had 25 or 26 converts; same number of additions. We had some wonderful revivals on the old plan. No "hold up your hand," nor stand up. We told them at the start we would not have it. They came to the altar and were converted. The church is wonderfully built up. No man ever had better help than Bro. Roberson in a revival.

My charge is doing well. Congregations are large; never saw better. I think collections will be full, or nearly so, at least. We have peace in all our borders, though there is a great deal to contend against. Some men are preaching that a man can commit any sort of sin, even to cold-blooded murder, if he has once been converted; but God is bound to save him. Another class is stirring to shake the faith of all Christians, necessarily damning every child and Christian of all ages, unless they got the second blessing, or had it. But I am attending to them, and don't you forget it. Well, I hope to see you soon down at the grand convocation. Fraternally,

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

GRAND CHENIERE.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Our third protracted meeting closed Sunday night, Sept. 29, at Arnaudville, which is a little town of about 250 or 300 inhabitants, and is the terminus of the St. Martinsville branch of the S. P. R. R. It is an old town, but it has taken on new life since the railroad came there about two years ago. The town is, of course, almost entirely Catholic, our Methodist membership being very small; but I don't think I ever saw a more generous, enthusiastic and hopeful little band of Christian workers anywhere. They have built the nicest and neatest little church in the Crowley district. Bro. Dan Hayes helped us in the meeting, doing about half of the preaching. He is a very promising young preacher, and is fine help in a meeting. The congregations kept increasing from the beginning, and though we got in some more chairs to accommodate the crowds, several had to be turned away the last night. A great many French Catholics came to the altar seeking religion in the old-fashioned Methodist way. They regard it as a great privilege to hear the gospel in their own language. The Holy Ghost blessed the preached Word, and a great work was done. Fourteen united with the church, and there are several more to follow.

We are now taking our Conference collections, with good results. Not many of our people take the ADVOCATE, for the good reason that not many of them can read English.

Yours,

MARTIN HEBERT, P. C.

PORT VINCENT CIRCUIT.

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: I am just back from New River Church, where I had a grand time with those good people. We had quite a revival. We preached Friday and Saturday, and at night. Bro. M. F. Johnson, of Baton Rouge, was with us on Saturday, and preached us an able sermon on the text, "Who is on the Lord's side?" The people of New River are a good people, and appreciate the gospel. I held a meeting over there some time ago, and two or three joined the church. We organized a church there; got them a church register, and enrolled their names, and we have now a membership of about twenty, and they say now they are a happy people. I preached to at least two hundred and fifty or three hundred people several times at that church, and I think the Conference would do well to send them a good preacher. They are a good people, and ought to have a leader. The church there is a union church—Methodist and Baptist. Brethren, pray for us, that we may be useful in the work of the Lord.

Respectfully, your brother in Christ, J. L. MCMANUS, P. C.

BUNKIE CIRCUIT.

DEAR DR BOSWELL: We have had revival meetings at three of the churches on the charge. Bro. C. C. Miller, of Alexandria, assisted me at Bay Hills after Monday, at 11 o'clock service. The church revived, some conversions, eight accessions. At the closing service I took a collection, and raised money enough to build a new church, which will soon be completed.

At Bayou Clear, Bro. Luther Roberts assisted me. We had eighteen accessions. The church was revived.

At White Chapel we were assisted by Bro. D. E. Kelley, of Boyce, and Dr. A. F. Watkins, of Brookhaven, Miss. We had fifteen accessions, of the best material of the neighborhood. These brethren were all at their best, and preached with great power. Bro. John Kelley, of Gloster, Miss., who is gifted with musical talent, led the choir with silver cornet, greatly aiding the organist and the congregation in singing.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

QUALIFICATIONS OF TEACHERS.

A Sunday-school teacher, to reach the highest efficiency in the work of teaching a class and leading the pupils into the fold of Christ, must have certain mental and spiritual qualifications, which we will endeavor briefly to outline. In the first place, the teacher must have common sense. It is not necessary to be a great scholar or an intellectual giant; indeed, such may make the poorest teachers, because they are so far removed from their pupils in attainments that they may not have sympathy in their trials nor understand their needs. But the faculty of "getting along" with a class, of knowing what to do, how to do it, and the proper time to do it, the teacher ought to have in a large degree.

Then the true teacher must be deeply spiritual. To teach others the way of life, he must drink deep of its spiritual fountains. To teach the Bible properly, he must know by experience its spiritual truths. It is not necessary for the teacher to be able to give a critical analysis of the Bible—valuable as such an attainment would be—but it is necessary to know and experience the primary truths of religion.

In short, common sense and tact, a godly life, and a heart full of sympathy and love, are the main qualities the teacher should possess. Any of these being lacking, no matter how bright and intellectual the teacher may be, the work will be disjointed, if not a failure. But with these qualities the teacher, however lowly in station, will do a work that will tell for time and eternity. We recently heard related the story of an old-time local preacher, who possessed the qualities named above, but who could not write his name, and who could do but little more than spell out a chapter in the Bible. And yet he led more than twenty of his neighbors to Christ, and was a spiritual power in the neighborhood in which he lived. The Sunday-school teacher, however limited in attainments, may accomplish equally great results.

TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE.

One of the most difficult of Sunday-school problems is the social question. There is a great difference in the social condition of the pupils in the average Sunday-school, and social equality among them, no matter how desirable, will never be attained so long as human nature remains the same. But how can I best secure and keep the good-will of my pupils? is a serious question with every conscientious teacher. We believe a symposium on the subject will be profitable, and, therefore, submit the following question: "How can I best keep in social touch with my class?"

Please send replies by Nov. 15.

The Executive Committee of the New York Interdenominational Convention met together the day before their last Sunday-school convention, and spent a season upon their knees, praying for the guidance of the Holy Spirit and the conversion of the children of the State. The result was such a manifestation of the power of the Spirit that they changed the programme for the convention and sent for a child evangelist. Indiana, California, Kentucky, and other States, are moving in the matter of holding special evangelical services for the children. What a grand thing it would be if Louisiana and Mississippi would follow their example, and if the revival spirit would break out in all our County, State and Conference Conventions.

The Sunday-school is in some respects the largest undeveloped missionary resource of the church. In 1890 the number of children in the Sunday-schools of Protestant lands exceeded 22,000,000. If they were trained to give even two cents a week per member, it would yield an amount greater than the present total missionary gifts of Christendom. That this is not an unreasonable estimate is proved by the actual practice of many Sunday-schools.—John R. Mott.

Last Sunday, Oct. 20, was the day set apart for a Missionary Rally Day in our schools, and it was suggested that the collection be directed to go towards the $10,000 subscribed by Dr. Atkins for the Yuan Fund. Attractive programmes were sent free to all who requested them.

One of the best ways to keep up the interest in a class is to get the children to ask questions. That will also be a good way to keep up interest in our Sunday-school column. Ask any question you desire about Sunday-school work. Some one will answer you.

A Thing of the Past.

The town crier is a thing of the past, but medical methods as old and as obsolete as the town crier are still practiced in many a country town. Women suffering from womanly diseases shrink from the offensive examinations, indelicate questionings, and obnoxious local treatments, still in vogue with some local practitioners. Any sick woman is invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free, and so avoid methods which are offensive to her modesty. All correspondence is held as strictly private and sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is peculiarly and particularly a medicine for the cure of womanly diseases. It establishes regularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness.

"You have my heart-felt thanks for the kind advice you sent me," writes Mrs. Florence Archer, of Eaton, Macon Co., Tenn. "Words fail to express what I endured for about eight years with female trouble. The awful pain that I had to endure each month, no tongue can express. These bearing-down pains, backache, headache, distress in my stomach and sores in my breast, cramp in limbs—they have all left me and health has taken the place of these distressing troubles. What caused them to leave? It was the last medicine on earth—Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. In one week's time I began to feel better. After taking six bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' and using the local treatment you advised I felt like a new woman."

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will meet in annual session, Oct. 30, 1901, at 10:30 A. M., instead of the 31st, as announced last week.

S. S. KEENER, Pres't.

A CLUB OFFER.

On another page will be found our offer to club with THE COMMONER, Mr. Bryan's paper. It is one of the sprightliest and best-edited papers in the country. Mr. Bryan, late candidate for the presidency, has thousands of admirers in Louisiana and Mississippi who will be glad to read his paper.

We will send the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and The Commoner for one year for TWO DOLLARS AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS; cash with the order. Read the advertisement. Send orders to

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

In a tilt between the editor of the Texas Christian Advocate and the bachelor editor of the Midland Methodist anent the "junketing" of the young folks to San Francisco, and the frolicking of the D. D.'s on the way to the Ecumenical, who, according to the Texas editor, acted "like school-boys turned loose," the bachelor got the better of Texas, and Texas begged for a "let-up." We are much surprised. We had an idea that Brother Rankin would "fight it out on that line if it took all Summer." He knows when he is whipped.

The Baptist, at Jackson, desires to know whether we endorse the views of "Circuit Rider" as set forth in this ADVOCATE, of Aug. 15. Brother Bailey says: "We wait the answer of Dr. Boswell with deep interest." Our reply is this: We endorse "Circuit Rider" as a reputable minister of our church. He is responsible for his utterances. The controversy is between him and those whose views he antagonizes, and not between the editor of the Baptist and the editor of the ADVOCATE. We do not propose to take part in the discussion.

One of the denominational papers asserts that the Methodist ministry is notoriously weak. Another of the "same faith and ardor" hastens to confirm his brother's word, and goes a step or two further. They would make their readers believe that all great preachers are in the Baptist Church. We are reminded: A few years since a good brother invited one of our useful local preachers to join his church. He argued thus: You are only a local preacher among the Methodists, and are as high and as much honored as you will ever be. Join the Baptists, and you will be a big bug among them. Comment is unnecessary.

HOLINESS.

"Holiness is the central idea of Christianity." It is characteristic of believers. There is no such thing as an unholy Christian. Unholy men and women may be in connection with the church — in good standing, and in the full exercise of all the privileges of membership — but they can not be true believers. "He is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh; but he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God."

Holiness is necessary. This is said on the authority of the Spirit. "Follow peace with all men, and holiness without which no man shall see the Lord." This simply means that every impulse and act of a man's life is to be according to God's will, and in conformity to the divine character. The Christian must be like his Lord. "Be ye holy, for I am holy, saith the Lord." The image of the Master must be enstamped on the heart. Christ must be formed within, the hope of glory. Looking at these statements, and bearing in mind the moral condition of the human race, it will be seen that holiness is not a natural product. It can not be, for "an evil tree can not bring forth good fruit." Holiness is the product of grace. In a sense it is wholly so, as without it no man could be sufficiently quickened from the deadness of his moral state to know that he is a sinner, or have strength, even though quickened, to do the Lord's will. Man can not turn and prepare himself to faith and calling upon God. Grace must go before and give him a good will. In another sense, grace is only an assistant, enabling, as it does, a sinner under conviction to believe with a heart unto righteousness, and to do works meet for repentance. "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." "It is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."

Holiness is moral soundness; soundness of spiritual life or health. Thus its nature clearly indicates that such a state can not be produced without supernatural aid. We have a practical illustration of this fact in the case of the impotent man at the Pool of Bethesda. He was there to be healed; waiting for the moving of the waters. In his enfeebled state it was impossible for him to reach the water. Jesus saw him, and, moved with compassion, knowing that he had been in that case thirty-and-eight years, said unto him, "Wilt thou be made whole?" When the man plead his friendless and helpless condition, evidently manifesting a desire to be healed, Jesus said, "Rise, take up thy bed and walk." "Immediately the man was made whole." This intervention on the part of Jesus would have been unnecessary had the man been able to restore himself to soundness. So grace would be useless if a sinner in his own strength could make himself whole.

In addition to the fact that Jesus restored the impotent man to soundness, there is significance in the statement, "immediately the man was made whole." It is not said that the man grew into a state of wholeness, but that he was "made whole." Nor was there any long and tedious process put it operation to effect the cure. Jesus simply spoke, and the work was instantaneous. Taking this as an illustration of the work of grace in the heart, we reach the following conclusions:

1. That it is impossible for a soul to grow into grace. Some men vainly imagine that this can be done, and systematically set about the work of cultivation while as yet the heart is untouched by divine power. But such an effort is as useless as to try to make a sour crab grow into an Arkansas Shannon pippin. Grace must first be planted in the heart—regeneration must be effected by the power of God. The penitent sinner thus made whole, is able to grow in grace—that is, to develop and manifest in his life the grace of the gospel. Such development is natural and easy under the influence of the Holy Spirit.

2. The moment a sinner is regenerated, that moment he is made whole. No more unsoundness is left in a saved soul than was left in the impotent man when Jesus gave him strength, and told him to take up his bed and walk. But let it not be inferred from this that such a soul is mature in grace, or thoroughly informed in all that pertains to Christ and his gospel. The state, at this period, is characterized as a state of infancy, and like an infant, a new-born babe in Christ, needs nourishment, and guidance, and instruction. And, as a well-developed and healthy infant possesses all the elements of manhood, physical and mental, so has a young convert all the elements necessary to Christian growth and perfection. On no other supposition could St. Peter say, "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Once in grace, the sinner may be sanctified throughout, soul, body and spirit; every thought may be brought in obedience to the captivity of Christ, and every act conformed to the divine will. This means that the soul is freed from sin, and the sinner has become a servant of God. It means that he daily produces fruit unto holiness, and has his eye steadily fixed on the end, which is everlasting life. This is St. Paul's conclusion. This freedom, whatever it may mean, must be effected in this life. The end of this life is not perfection, but the end of perfection is life eternal. Amen!

A CATHOLIC BAPTIST.

It is not often that Methodists are greeted in such a brotherly spirit, and at the same time acknowledged as belonging to the church of God by a minister of the Baptist Church, as was the case at the recent Ecumenical Conference. In an account of the Conference, written by Dr. Jesse Bowman Young for the New York Evangelist, he gives a short extract from an address by Dr. John Clifford, "a shining light among the Baptists." The address, it is said, "was full of evangelistic fire, which deeply moved his audience." Dr. Clifford said:

"The Spectator described you the other day as an Imperial Church. That is too narrow for you! You are far more than an Imperial Church—you are a Catholic Church, a true Catholic Church! I rejoice in your great numbers, your thirty millions of adherents. But I do not count them your best possession. I rejoice in the tremendous grip you have got of the world's wealth—and I wish we Baptists had some of it. But what I rejoice in most is your ideas; your ideas are universal, and your spirit is in accord with the universality of your ideas. As a lad, I was taught by my grandmother—who was a good Methodist—that you stood for three great universalities; the universality of the love of God, a love for all men everywhere, white and black, black and white; the universality of the sacrifice of our Lord Jesus Christ, a provision not made for a limited few, but made for the whole of mankind, so that the whole world might come to the heart of God; and the universality of the work of the Holy Spirit, the Spirit given to convince the world of sin and righteousness and of judgment, and to bring all men to the enjoyment of the forgiveness of sins and the regenerating power of the Holy Ghost. These are your great ideas, and these ideas make your Ecumenical Conference really Ecumenical. It has to be remembered by us that when John Wesley said, 'The world is my parish,' he was not talking geography—he was breathing the very spirit of his religion—he was uttering the great heart of the Christianity of Jesus Christ."

It is refreshing to meet with such expressions. How different from the narrowness we sometimes see exhibited on this side of the water. Here we come in contact with men who not only decline to recognize Methodists, Presbyterians, etc., as members of the church, but refuse to associate with them in any public, religious capacity. Such narrowness is not justified either by the spirit or letter of the gospel, and any man professing to be a Christian, and acknowledging others as Christians, certainly must find himself blushing when he repudiates the claims of others. A broader-gauged idea of our church relations must prevail before we can hail the millennium.

A NEEDED REFORMATION.

The great city of New Orleans needs nothing so much as reformation in the matter of Sunday observance. We say reformation, because we take it for granted that all the citizens, or nearly all, know what Sunday is, and in what light it is set forth in the Holy Scriptures. If not, then there is a vast amount of ignorance inside our corporate limits. A Sunday law in regard to trade, especially in regard to the traffic in liquor, is fairly well enforced. But in some other respects Sunday is not regarded. We have seen laborers engaged in repairing the streets on the Sabbath, and on a recent Sunday we saw four or five drivers delivering loads of stone for a building. On the same day, during the eleven o'clock services, we heard shooting. "At first we thought the police were in a difficulty of some sort, but it continued so long, we concluded that such was not the case. We learned the next morning from the daily paper that men and boys were engaged in general jollification. Those who were engaged in it, perhaps, did not intend to disturb public worship, and, perhaps, the good citizens who are accustomed to such things were not disturbed.

Sunday, also, is a great day for fishing and hunting. Monday's papers often regale their readers with full accounts of Sunday's "luck." Sunday, the thirteenth instant, according to the papers, was an exceptionally good day, both for fishing and hunting. Such reports of the general disregard of the Lord's day is amazing. It is new reading to one who has lived all his life no further North than Tennessee. We wonder if such a state of things exists in any city of the South other than New Orleans? Who is responsible?

TO LOOK AFTER THE COUNTRY.

The Episcopal Church has not gone into politics, but it has done that which is next to it, and in so doing has taken a step that can not be fully justified. At the Triennial Convention, just held at San Francisco, a committee was appointed consisting of "three Bishops, three presbyters, and three laymen," whose business it is "to study carefully the aims and purposes of the labor organizations of our country—in particular, to investigate the cause of industrial disturbances as such may arise, and to hold themselves in readiness to act as arbitrators, should their services be needed." What inspired such action we do not know, unless it was to impress the country with its superior standing; perhaps to place itself on a par with the Pope of Rome, who, if accounts be true, would like right well to be the arbiter of the world's destiny. That any member of the Episcopal Church, lay or clerical, has a perfect right in his individual capacity to act as arbitrator between corporations and organized labor, when requested to do so, is not to be denied. But for the church, as such, to organize itself into a body, and work through a committee to settle questions of a purely secular character, is not to be tolerated. Let that thing get started, there is no telling where it will end. The next move will be to settle international disputes. We protest against any such assumption. Bishop Potter, of New York, is a great man, and influential in New York. We are glad it is so, but we modestly suggest that his church has no just right to put him at the head of a great National Bureau of Arbitration.

ROLLING IN MUD.

The title under which we write seems out of place in a Christian Advocate, but it has reference to a literal occurrence—two teams in a foot-ball game on the campus of a Christian institution of learning. We saw the account, given in detail, in one of the most reliable daily papers in the South. As our colleges and universities are bound to promote athletics, or suffer loss of patronage and be classed as "moss-backs," it will not be regarded as out of order to report progress through the church papers.

The game reported was played on Saturday, Oct. 12. We quote from the daily:

From morning till night the clouds dripped, scarcely taking a breathing spell, and by the time for the game to be called the few hundred spectators were in a moist state of discomfort. . . . The field was a morass. The everglades of genial Florida would have been a blessing compared with he loblolly in which the giants had to play foot-ball. A fast game was out of the question. When the Kentuckians made a lunge to stop the mad rush of the opposing halfbacks, the feet of the combatants, as they were separated from the caressing mud, made a loud noise of suction similar to that produced by a Norman horse plodding over a deeply muddy country road. Meanwhile the rain descended in a delicate mist. The combined embarrassements irritated the players. They found it impossible to be suave and courteous.

Literally, twenty-two young gentlemen—eleven on each side, from two denominational schools—rolled in mud. Foot-ball is so important to the development of physical manhood and to the strengthening of the mental faculties that, no matter how much it rains, or how muddy the ground, the programme must be executed. It might be otherwise were there no gate receipts in view.

How these young gentlemen looked at the close of the game the reporter did not undertake to say. Their appearance may be better imagined than described. Teams returning from a well-fought field in dry weather look like wild men just out of a spree. Men who have rolled in mud, we suppose, look like well-diggers, only well-diggers take better care of their heads and hair.

Honestly, we think intercollegiate foot-ball games played in mud are disgraceful. And Annual Conferences composed of Christian men are asked to sanction such barbarism!

SOMETHING NEW.

The wise man said, "Money answereth all things." It is to be used in a New York church for the development of the best talent among Sunday-school teachers. This church has felt the need of expert teachers, and proposes to apply the commercial method of securing them—that is, to raise a large fund, the interest of which is to be applied to the training of teachers, and to pay such teachers as shall qualify themselves for the work.

We suppose there is no intelligent superintendent anywhere who does not realize at times the need of good material for teachers. The need is often apparent, even to an onlooker. But we are sure that if a love for God, and an earnest desire to instruct and save the young, does not prompt a teacher to specially prepare for the work, a few dollars as compensation will not avail. A good salary might tend to develop a class of technical experts, but something besides qualification as an expert is necessary in a successful Sunday-school teacher—that something money can not buy. We hope never to see our Sunday-schools brought under the grasp of the money power.

INCIDENTS IN THE LIFE OF REV. P. A. JOHNSTON.

We would appreciate any incidents of especial note in the life of our Bro. Johnston that might appear to profit in a memoir. There were many who were associated with him in meetings that might give items of interest. Please write me at once.

Fraternally, D. P. BRADFORD.

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT.

We are indebted to Henry Altemus Company, Philadelphia, for a copy of the memorial edition of "Lead, Kindly Light," President McKinley's favorite hymn. It is in elegant style, set to music, and finely illustrated. The publishers will please accept our thanks.

PERSONAL.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, of Brooksville, has been assisting Rev. R. M. Evans, of Shuqualak, in a meeting of great interest. Sixteen persons were added to the membership, and the church placed on a firmer footing than ever before.

Rev. T. B. Clifford spent a week, or more, with Rev. J. S. Parker in a meeting at Gulf Port, Miss.—a town that seems destined to prominence in the near future. Some success was achieved, but the particulars we have not learned.

A note from Rev. D. W. Babb, Batesville, Miss., tells us that his charge is prospering nicely. He will, no doubt, have a good report to make at Conference. Brother Babb is one of our best men, and a great friend of the ADVOCATE.

Rev. P. H. Fontaine, assisted by Rev. W. W. Drake, conducted a meeting last week at Gonidsboro, just across the river from the city. At last account the meeting had not closed, and we do not know what success attended the effort.

The name of Philip Werlein reappears in the advertising columns of the ADVOCATE. His house is one of the recognized institutions of the city. If the readers of the ADVOCATE need anything in the way of a musical instrument—piano, organ, guitar, etc.—or music, let them correspond with Philip Werlein.

Rev. W. H. LaPrade, Jr., transferred from the St. Louis to the North Georgia Conference, has been spending the time between the meeting of the two bodies with his parents in this city. We had the pleasure of hearing him preach a thoughtful and edifying sermon at Carrollton Avenue last Sunday evening.

Rev. J. T. Murrah, of Shaw, Miss., in a brotherly note to this office, adds a cheering paragraph in reference to his charge. He says: "My year's work is winding up well. I will be able to make the best report of my life at our approaching Conference. The Lord has greatly blessed me this year, and the work of the church has prospered."

Rev. J. A. Bowen, in his first year at Tupelo, has added eighty-six members to the church. He is held in highest esteem by his congregation. He is treated kindly. The Tupelo Journal, of the eighteenth, tells of a "ponnding" the good people gave the preacher on a recent evening, when, unaware to him or his family, they "quietly deposited a goodly store of choice edibles on the front verandah"—enough to "completely supply the pantry and make it unnecessary for a grocer to send around a porter for orders for some time." We rejoice with the preacher. We congratulate the people.

ATTENTION, PREACHERS.

Now is the time for you to do some good work for the ADVOCATE.

The ADVOCATE greatly needs your help.

We need a new dress of type, that we may make the paper attractive.

Our machinery needs repairs, and there are quite a lot of other things that are necessary to bring the paper up to the proper standard.

It can not be done without your individual help.

Now, will you not make one hard effort, before Conference, to aid this worthy cause?

We believe the following will help you:

For Two Dollars we will send to all new subscribers the ADVOCATE from now until Jan. 1, 1903.

Thus, by sending us the names now, they will receive the paper nearly fifteen months for two dollars. This is worth considering.

If subscribers have not the cash on hand, you can send any time between now and your first Annual Conference.

To all old subscribers who will pay their subscription in full to date, and send us two dollars additional, we will send the paper from now until Jan. 1, 1903. The label tells when subscriptions expire.

The paper will also be sent from now until January, 1903, at our regular club rate: $1.50 in clubs of ten, cash with the order.

Now, brethren, please give this your personal attention, and by sending us one or two new subscribers, we will have as well printed a paper as anybody.

Next week we will mail you some sample copies to help you in the work.

Please help us. We want to make a good report at Conference.

Fraternally yours,

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

The Commoner.

(Mr. Bryan's Paper)

The Commoner has attained within six months from date of the first issue a circulation of 100,000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the discussion of political, economic, and social problems. To the columns of The Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts; and his review of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

The Commoner's regular subscription price is $1 per year. We have arranged with Mr. Bryan whereby we can furnish his paper and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE together for one year for $2.25. The regular subscription price of the two papers when subscribed for separately is $3 net. When remittance is made by personal check, ten cents extra will be charged.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To the Presiding Elders and Preachers in Charge, and Church Members, Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

DEAR BRETHREN: A report from the Treasurer of our Conference Board of Missions lies before me, under date October 4. From it the following facts are gleaned:

1. Eight charges in the Seashore district, to-wit—Hattiesburg, Lumberton, Brooklyn, Ocean Springs, Vancleave, Columbia, Amerione and Mt. Olive—have remitted $429.80 for foreign and $175.25 for domestic missions. Twelve charges in this district have paid nothing into the hands of the treasurer this year.

2. Thirteen charges in the Forest district, to-wit—Vossburg and Heidelberg, Newton and Hickory, Shiloh, Neshoba, Montrose, Rose Hill, Lake, Raleigh, Trenton, Laurel, Decatur, Carthage, and Ellisville—have sent to the treasurer $363.10 for foreign and $122 for domestic missions. Oct. 8 he received from Vossburg and Heidelberg $15 additional, and from Rose Hill $10 additional for foreign missions, carrying the total to $388.10. Five charges (besides Indian Mission) have sent in nothing.

3. Eight charges in the Brookhaven district, to-wit — Crystal Springs, Adams, Wesson, Summit, Magnolia, Gallman, Providence, and Caseyville — have remitted $325.10 for foreign and $64 for domestic missions. Eleven charges are uncredited with aught.

4. Five charges in the Jackson district, to-wit—Yazoo City, Capitol Street, Brandon, Thomasville, and Benton — have been credited with $220 for foreign and $100 for domestic missions. Oct. 8, Madison sent in $50 for foreign missions, making the total $270. Thirteen charges are without credits.

5. Six charges in the Meridian district, to-wit — Central (Meridian), Shubuta, Winchester, Wayne, Middleton, and Porterville—have sent in $131.10 for foreign and $11 for domestic missions. Oct. 8, Central (Meridian) paid in $6.65 additional, making the total $137.75 for foreign missions. Thirteen charges have not paid in anything.

6. Six charges in the Natchez district, to-wit—Washington, Harriston, Liberty, Centerville, Wesley Chapel (Natchez), and Wilkinson—have paid in $113 for foreign and $45 for domestic missions. Oct. 8, Harriston was credited with $14.50 additional, thus making the total from the Natchez district for foreign missions $127.50. Nine charges are uncredited.

7. Four charges in the Vicksburg district, to-wit — Mayersville, Satartia, South Warren, and South Vicksburg—are credited with $89.45 for foreign missions and $91 for domestic. Eleven charges are uncredited.

8. Total to date, Oct. 8, foreign missions, $1,765.45; domestic missions, $526.25. Total to date, 1900, foreign missions, $1,550.77; domestic missions, $558.85.

The treasurer says: "We are in great need of domestic funds now." By referring to the October number of the Review of Missions, page 294, it will be seen that the Board of Missions, Nashville, had to borrow $12,500 in August. Other numbers of the Review will show that money had to be borrowed in June and in July. On these loans interest must be paid at banker's rates for short times—thirty, sixty or ninety days, as the case may be.

Brethren, please press the missionary collections and remit promptly, so as to help stop interest on the money borrowed for foreign missions and to help pay our own home missionaries.

Yours faithfully,

T. L. MELLEN,
Miss'y Sec'y for Miss. Conf.

Algiers Home Mission Society.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: The ladies of Algiers Church have reorganized the Woman's Home Mission Society. We feel greatly encouraged at the outlook. I have been asked to send you a list of officers for publication, which is as follows: Mrs. C. C. Kempt, president; Mrs. F. A Daniels, first vice-president; Mrs. H. J. Thompson, second vice-president; Mrs. Louise Rhodes, third vice-president; Miss L. E. Hafkesbring, recording secretary; Mrs. K. W. Dodson, corresponding secretary; Miss Emma Samuels, treasurer; Miss K. Brinkley, agent for Our Home; Mrs. J. D. Levine, chairman of Visiting Committee. MRS. K. W. DODSON

DR. BULL'S COUGH SYRUP is pleasant to take. Children never object to it. The medicine positively cures cough and cold.

NOTICE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Conference Annual is now in course of preparation, and it is proposed to make it the best copy of Conference Minutes we have ever had. It will contain much valuable information in regard to the Conference work and history. A complete Local Preachers' Directory, Roll of Lay Members, Roll of Dead, and a revised Conference roll, besides a complete hand-book of General and Annual Conference organization, including the women's missionary societies. I hope also to have an up-to-date Conference map from one of the leading map publishers of this country, in the best style of the printer's art. This work will increase the price of the book considerably, but if the whole of the assessment is paid, it will be an easy matter to get advertising enough to pay the balance. Please, brethren, if you appreciate a complete hand book of Methodism in Louisiana, see to it that every cent of your assessment is raised in full.

I now have in my possession the pictures of about thirty of our deceased brethren, that I hope to present to you in this year's Annual. I am also trying to arrange to print the pictures of some of our churches and parsonages. If any of the readers of the ADVOCATE can assist us to locate the families or pictures of our deceased preachers, or can give us any information as to the whereabouts and occupation, or, if dead, the time of death and place of burial of any persons who have ever been connected with the Conference and have located, withdrawn, been dropped, or expelled, it will be greatly appreciated, and will be used to perfect a "complete roll of the Louisiana Conference."

I will be very much obliged to the presiding elders if they will send me their rolls of lay delegates to the Annual Conference, giving their occupations and postoffice address. Also please give me the facts asked for in regard to local preachers and the location of church property. Please give me also the place selected for holding the next district Conference. I also want the names of District Epworth League officers. If there are any special days set for observance in the district, or any plans of district organization, please let me know it. I will be very much obliged to the presiding elders for an early response, and for their hearty assistance in bringing up the collection for Minutes in full.

Respectfully,

WM. G. EVANS.

Grand Cane, La., Oct. 7, 1901.

Missionary Anniversary of North Mississippi Conference.

The following is the programme for the missionary anniversary of the North Mississippi Conference, to be held Friday, Dec. 6, 7:30 P. M:

1. Home missions. By Rev. T. W. Lewis. Subject, "Our Changing Social Conditions, and How to Meet Them."

2. Foreign missions. By Rev. L. M. Lipscomb. Subject, "My People Are Destroyed for Lack of Knowledge." Hos. iv, 6.

We expect to have with us during the session Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor.

Will the pastors please be ready to answer on the first day of the Conference the following questions:

WONDERFUL CURES BY SWAMP-ROOT.

To Prove What the World-Famous Discovery, Swamp-Root, Will Do for YOU, All Our Readers May Have a Sample Bottle Free by Mail.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for more sickness and suffering than any other disease, and if permitted to continue fatal results are sure to follow.

Your other organs may need attention—but your kidneys must, because they do most and need attention first.

So when your kidneys are weak or out of order you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince any one.

D. W. SMITH.

Among the many cures of this wonderful medicine, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, investigated by the "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," the ones which we publish this week for the benefit of our readers speak in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great remedy:

DES MOINES, IA., Oct. 20, 1900.

"I had been out of health for a long time, and I was taking medicine from a doctor's prescription when I received your sample bottle. I stopped taking the doctor's medicine and used the sample bottle of Swamp-Root. I afterwards took two of your large bottles, bought at my drug store, and they cured me entirely, and I have not felt so well for years. I thank you very much for sending me the sample bottle."

D. W. SMITH, 1811 Center St.

MRS. H. K. WHEELER.

Mrs. H. K. Wheeler, of 117 High Rock St., Lynn, Mass., writes on Nov. 2, 1900: "About 18 months ago I had a very severe spell of sickness. I was extremely sick for three weeks and when I finally was able to leave my bed I was left with excruciating pains in my back. My water at times looked very like coffee. I could pass but little at a time, and then only after suffering great pain. My physical condition was such that I had no strength and was all run down. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, and while I

DID NOT KNOW I HAD KIDNEY TROUBLE,

I somehow felt certain my kidneys were the cause of my trouble. My sister, Mrs. O. E. Littlefield, of Lynn, advised me to give Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root a trial. I procured a bottle and inside of three days commenced to get relief. I followed up that bottle with another, and at the completion of this one found I was completely cured. My strength returned, and to-day I am as well as ever. My business is that of canvasser, I am on my feet a great deal of the time, and have to use much energy in getting around. My cure is, therefore, all the more remarkable, and is exceedingly gratifying to me." MRS. H. K. WHEELER.

Swamp-Root will do just as much for any housewife whose back is too weak to perform her necessary work, who is always tired and overwrought, who is—is that the cares of life are more than she can stand. It is a boon to the weak and ailing.

Sample Bottle Free.

The mild and immediate effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Swamp-Root will set your whole system right, and the best proof of this is a trial.

You may have a sample bottle of this famous kidney remedy, Swamp-Root, sent free by mail, postpaid, by which you may test its wonderful curative properties for such disorders as kidney, bladder and uric acid diseases, poor digestion, when obliged to pass your water frequently night and day, smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, headache, backache, lame back, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, heart disturbance due to bad kidney trouble, skin eruptions from bad blood, neuralgia, rheumatism, diabetes, bloating, irritability, wornout feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh, sallow complexion, or Bright's disease.

If your water when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is for sale the world over at druggists in bottles of two sizes and two prices—fifty cents and one dollar. Remember the name Swamp-Root and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

EDITORIAL NOTICE.—If you have the slightest symptoms of kidney, liver or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured by Swamp-Root. In writing, be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE."

About Little Things.

Jean and I were talking over some of our experiences one bright autumnal morning lately. Her kitchen was spotless, as usual, and she was doing her Saturday's baking, without any litter on the white table, or the very least disorder. Jean is one of those rare women who never looked disturbed nor flurried, who get through a great deal of work without bustle or hurry. It did me good to look at her, as she sifted her flour, and rolled her pie-crust, and, at last, I said what I thought: "Jean, dear, you do your work so like a lady!"

"And pray why not?" she answered, smiling. "Is not cooking for her family a lady's work, and does not lady mean loaf-giver?"

"Well, you know what I mean. You put your heart into whatever you do, and you give it grace, and are sweet and dignified and never in a fuss. I like the way you keep house, Jean. You look as if you had never had any troubles."

But the moment I said that I was sorry, for Jean has had many trials, and in the background of her life, as I happen to know, there is a very terrible anxiety for one dear to her, who is surely tempted and sometimes yields to temptation. Jean knows bitterness of soul on this brother's account, and often, when she goes to her room and shuts the door, we who watch her are aware that she is praying for him. Her faith never falters, she tells every thought and carries every care to Jesus; but she is not free from trouble. She put her pies into the oven, and sat down by the window.

"Big troubles may be endured with fortitude," she said. "They are patiently endured by many people who do not know the refuge and the rest of faith. It is the series of little provocations, pin-pricks of the hasty temper, small envies, petty jealousies, and sinful misunderstandings, which, coming into hearts and homes, blot out the sunshine, and wear us to shreds. We are often ashamed of our lack of self-control, of our impatience and irritability, of our morbid low spirits, and our gloomy moods; but those do not come when there is mortal illness in the house, nor when our dead are lying there, cold and still. Then we gird ourselves to carry our load. The trifles, light as air, are the occasion of most of our earthly discomfort and our pain."

"Yes; that is true. Jean, by the way, did you hear that Will Jones and Margaret Dale have broken their engagement? We are all so sorry, for they seemed so exactly fitted for each other. But there has been a shadow over them for months, and I have feared 'the little rift within the lute, that by-and-by would make the music mute.' They are both only children; Will's mother has idolized him, and Margaret's father has spoiled her. Each is impatient of contradiction, and attaches an undue importance to matters of no consequence. If Will called on Margaret, and his trousers were not creased properly, she would be miserable and lose all the pleasure of the evening. On the other hand, Will was annoyed because Margaret was so very punctual, because she did not like Shakespeare, and because she spent so much time in waiting on her father. The two gradually drew apart; an atmosphere of discontent enveloped them."

"It is matter for thankfulness," said Jean, "that they have found out their mutual weaknesses before they were irrevocably bound."

"Yet, here are two well-born, well-taught, highly educated and Christian young people, conscientious, single-hearted and refined, who have let their happiness break into pieces on the reef of insignificant foibles."

"The art of living together in harmony is one that we should all study, since God has placed us here in families. Nobody masters it who disdains small daily self-denials, and who is not willing to surrender the personal caprice or whim, that another may be gratified. I have seen whole lives spoiled by the harshness shown to children, who were started wrong through their parents' over-emphasis on matters of superficial moment."

"Think of it in another aspect," said Jean, brightening, "think how little things add to the cheer, the charm of life. The well-set table, the flower at the plate, or pinned in the husband's button-hole; the pleasure granted, instead of thoughtlessly forbidden; the concession graciously made; how much these contribute to the real zest of life. Even in a prayer meeting there is a chance to bring in the benediction of the little things. If the room is well lighted, and the group of young people who sing are gathered near the piano if, beforehand, the pastor has spoken to one and another, and provided against those cold and wearisome pauses that so often drop freezingly into the meeting's heart, old and young will go away stronger and better for the hour. Every successful enterprise on earth depends on a great many small things, done by a great many unobtrusive agents, for its perfect carrying on to completeness.

"Then, too, there are the little courtesies, the remembering to be ready and liberal with thanks, the small acts of attention to the aged, and the gentleness which never snubs the bashful and the young. Politeness is composed of innumerable little nets, which, by constant repetition, have grown automatic, but their practice makes the distinction between the gentleman and the boor."—Mrs. Sangster, in Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

Sarah.

Her name was Sarah Moore. All of the Moore family were round and rosy and jolly. And Sarah was the roundest and rosiest and jolliest of them all. Papa and Mama and Anna and Mary all called her Sunshine. So, when she went to school for the first time, she said, "My school name is Sarah Moore, but my home name is just Sunshine." After that Miss Gray often called her "More Sunshine." If you knew her well, and saw the light in her eyes, the gold in her hair, and the laugh hidden away in her dimples, you would call her Sunshine, too.

Papa was going to the city to spend New Year's Day with Grandma Moore. Sarah wanted to go, too. So, on New Year's Eve, her red dress with its pretty ruffles, her new red coat and hat and her little shoes and stockings, red, too, were all laid out, ready to be put on the next morning.

Of course, Sunshine wanted to go. What little girl doesn't want to go to Grandma's to eat New Year's dinner? But if only Mama could go, too! Somewhy, whenever Sunshine thought of Mama, the very dearest name in all the world, a queer, lumpy feeling came into her little throat—"froat," she called it. At bedtime the lump grew bigger. When she was all tucked into bed, and Mama bent to kiss her, she said, "If you think, Mama, that you will be too lonesome without me to-morrow, I just as soon not go." Mama smiled. "I shall think what a good time you and Papa are having," she said. "Good night, dear!" A little time afterward Sunshine called, "Mama."

"Yes, dear."

"You don't s'pose, Mama, that 'twill snow so hard to-morrow that we can't go, do you?"

"No, Sunshine, I think not."

A long time afterward Mama was surprised to hear a sweet, tired little voice say, "Mama, I most wish it would snow!"

But it did not. The morning was as clear and bright as New Year's morning should be. Sarah kissed Anna and Mary and Grandma and Grandpa Brown, each once, and Mama many times. Then she took Papa's hand and went away to the station. But you would never have thought that her name was Sunshine. She looked so sober.

The house was quiet for fifteen long, long minutes. Then, there was a sudden bang of the front door, a rush of little feet down the hall, and the sitting-room door flew open and Sunshine, herself, sprung into Mama's arms.

"O Mama," she said, "O Mama, my froat's felt bad all this morning, and when the train whistled, something choked me so! I just couldn't stand it, Mama, so I came back. I ran all the way."

Anna and Mary and Grandpa and Grandma Brown all laughed a little. But Mama didn't. Mama only kissed her. And someway that kiss made the big, achey "lump" in her "froat" ever so much better.

When story-time and bed-time came, together, Sunshine, cuddled down in Mama's lap, said, "Mama, what kind of a sick was it made my froat feel so queer like as I couldn't swallow this morning?"

Mama smiled her own lovely smile. "I think, dear, it was a homesick," she said.

Then she went on with the story.—Good Housekeeping.

TRIBUTE TO BR. C. B. DUNNING.

On Friday morning, Sept. 27, 1901, our entire community was a source of profound grief when awakened to the fact that the reaper, whose name is Death, in the hour of shadow had plucked from our midst C. B. DUNNING, one of our most prominent and worthy citizens. While it is sad to know that he who hath attributed so much to the upbuilding of our churches and schools had crossed the river of Jordan and reached the great beyond, where all pure lives shall receive the loving embrace of a blessed Savior, we have the assured promise that we can again meet him where death and parting is not known. Words can not express our sincere sympathy as we looked upon him, who presented a picture of health, lying cold in death, and the grief-stricken family—wife and fatherless children—weeping over a kind and noble husband and father; but in the midst of our great sorrow we are made to realize that He who doeth all things well will bless, guide and protect the grief-stricken family in this, their greatest hour of bereavement.

Resolved, That in the death of Dr. Dunning his family realize their great loss of a true, devoted and providing husband and father, and the community a most loyal and charitable man. His daily examples teach us that his was a life governed and controlled by true Christian faith, and if we follow closely to the doctrines which were exemplified in him, we again shall meet him in the home which our Father hath prepared for those who fear him and keep his commandments.

Resolved, That in the death of Dr. Dunning we, as his Sunday-school class, lose a kind and devoted teacher, whom we loved and respected, and who did a faithful part as teacher. In his death the church and Sunday-school lost a consistent member, and the community a Christian gentleman and highly esteemed citizen.

Resolved, That in the death of Dr. Dunning the citizens of Magee have lost a leader who was true, noble and just; one always foremost for that which was right. His character stands before us without spot or blemish; one worthy to be exemplified. "A life most useful to his country led; beloved and honored while living, revered now, dead."

Resolved, That we, the committee, deeply sympathize with the bereaved family in their great sorrow, and pray that God may graciously bless, keep and save them.

MISS MATTYE LOFLIN,
MISS DORA WILKINSON,
MR. F. N. TAYLOR,
Committee.

Bro. J. W. HUMPHREY was about forty-three years of age, and departed this life Sept. 25, 1901. He has been an acceptable member of the M. E. Church for a number of years; has been steward several years; was a delegate to our last District Conference at New Albany. Bro. Humphrey loved his church. He was a devoted husband and father. I think he was one of the happiest men I ever saw last year at our meeting at Dumas, when all of his children were converted and joined the church (Methodist), except the baby boy—five in number. The community has lost one of its very best citizens, the school one of its very best patrons, and the church one of her best members. Bro. Humphrey did all he thought he could to make a community better by his having lived in it. Singing seemed to be Bro. Humphrey's gift. Oh, how we miss him! He was always jolly. I don't think I ever met him that I was not greeted with a smile. He never had what people call the blues. The preacher has lost in the death of Bro. Humphrey one of his best and truest friends. He was always ready to hear his part in everything that was for good. He spoke evil of no man. He will be missed, for his seat will be empty. May the blessings of our Heavenly Father be with the aged father, and the bereaved wife and children!

B. P. FULLILOVE, P. C.

MRS. JOHNIE ROBERTS (nee Miss Johnie Hill) was born Aug. 13, 1860; was married to Mr. T. M. Roberts, Aug. 4, 1892. She was called home Aug. 8, 1901. She was an affectionate, loving daughter; a true and devoted wife, and a consecrated Christian. She professed religion in her seventeenth year, and united with the M. E. Church, South. She was as much devoted to her church as anyone I ever knew. Her seat was never vacant, unless providentially kept away. She was a widow six years. While she was left in this sad condition she seemed to realize that there was something she could do, and never relaxed her energies as long as she was able. After the death of her husband the remaining days she had upon earth were devoted to her dear, aged mother. She and Miss Lillie Tilghmon (her cousin) agreed that if either o' them should die, the other would take care of the mother of the deceased. She told Miss Lillie a few days before she died that she did not think she would get well, and said, "Will you take care of mother?" "Yes," was the reply, "just as if she were my own mother," and she said, "Well." Soon after she said, "Not my will, but thine be done."

B. P. FULLILOVE, P. C.

MRS. SARAH ELIZABETH TATUM (nee Abney) was born in Hinds county, Miss., April 27, 1832. She was reared in Jasper county, Miss., where she was married to Thomas Marion Tatum in about 1853. Bro. Tatum died in 1857. To them were born two children, John, now of Montrose, Miss., and Mary (Mrs. A. L. Rawls), of Poplarville, Miss. Besides those two devoted Christian children, she leaves a number of brothers (Anneys), prominent citizens, scattered in Mississippi, Louisiana, and Florida. Sister Tatum, after lingering in poor health for years, died at the home of her daughter, July 15, 1901, falling but a little short of her "threescore years and ten." Sister Tatum was converted and joined the church when a girl. She ever remained a faithful and consistent Christian. We have seldom known a purer, more gentle, and unpretentious Christian than was this good woman. Her life was a spotless one. She was possibly meekest to a fault, meek and lowly, and yet a most exalted character. She will walk in white forever.

B. S. RAYNER.

MRS. SARAH E. TILGHMON was born Oct. 23, 1831; married Nov. 17, 1851, to Mr. J. N. Tilghmon, who fell at his post while fighting for his country in the battle of Franklin, Tenn. Sister Tilghmon joined the M. E. Church, South, at the age of seventeen, in which she lived a faithful and consistent member until her blessed Lord called her home last February. In the death of Sister Tilghmon, Bine Mountain lost one of her very best citizens, and the M. E. Church one of her purest and best and most devoted members. Sister Tilghmon leaves two daughters to mourn their loss, and two sisters and a host of friends. No one was more beloved by all than was Sister Tilghmon. Her home was one of the preacher's favorite stopping-places, where he always found a hearty welcome. She was indeed the preacher's friend. May heaven's richest blessing rest upon and abide with the bereaved daughters and sisters! The separation will not be long. We will soon meet to part, no, never, on that bright shore.

He who knows nothing of pillow prayers, says a writer in the Bible Reader, is ignorant of one of the sweetest modes of prayer practicable to men on earth. In heaven we may have need of pillows; it is said we are to have none for the sun. Nor shall we there have any need of night, in which to rest; but here there is a night, and we need it. The day with its engrossments being gone, it is a most favorable time for the gathering in of our thoughts upon ourselves—our sins, our wants, fears and hopes, and then the turning of them up toward heaven. This is what the Psalmist is apparently referring to in his words, "When I remember Thee upon my bed, and meditate upon Thee in the night watches." That he uttered many a pillow prayer is a thousandfold more than probable. "I have remembered thy name, O Lord, in the night." "I prevented the dawning of the morning and cried." Those cries were prayers before the dawn of day.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

A telegraph wire must be completely insulated before it can convey the electric communication. So we must be separated from the world before God's message to sinners can have free course through us. When Saladin looked at the sword of Richard Cœur de Lion, he wondered that a blade so ordinary should have wrought such mighty deeds. The English king bared his arm and said, "It was not the sword that did these things; it was the arm of Richard." We should be instruments that the Lord can use, and when he has used us, the glory should all be his.—Rev. George F. Pentecost.

Beauty is Health.

Walnut Lake, Ark., June 3, 1900.
I thank you for the benefit I received from your advice and the Wine of Cardui I took in my terrible condition. My life was no pleasure to me at all and I was of no use to anybody. After receiving your advice and medicine I commenced taking it and began immediately to improve. The pains left me and the menses, which came at the correct time, continued three days. I have gained strength and my weight has increased. My husband says the medicine has made me better looking than ever before.
Mrs. LIZZIE MANNELL.

Womanly health means bright eyes, rosy cheeks, clear complexion and elasticity of form. This is the youth unmeasured by years—the beauty of perfect womanhood. Beautiful women are happier and get more out of life than their sisters whose faces indicate suffering. Wine of Cardui made Mrs. Mannell "better looking" and infinitely happier because it cured her of those terrible pains. But she is no exception.

WINE OF CARDUI

is giving thousands of women health, beauty and freedom from the dragging pains which made their lives so miserable. Wan faces, haggard eyes and emaciated forms are the results of suffering. What suffering can compare with the torture of irregular menstruation, leucorrhœa and falling of the womb! Beauty flees quickly before the ravages of such disease. The sharp pains of falling of the womb deepen the crow tracks in the face. Menstrual irregularities rob the eye of its fire and the complexion of its transparency. Leucorrhœa drains the body of its strength, but Wine of Cardui restores the natural beauty, brightens the eye, clears the complexion, rounds out the figure and brings back the vigor of health. Every druggist in this city handles $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui.

Sweet Toned—Reliable

Epworth Pianos

Why I am going to buy the Epworth

—because it has a sweet, pure, sympathetic tone—the singing tone. I dislike a piano with a cheap, common, harsh tone, no matter how pretty the case.

—because Epworth sounding boards are made by the slow, old-fashioned, German process—by hand—giving greater vibration and resonance to the tone,—and more life to it. I don't want my piano to get "tinny" or "thumpy" after awhile, like so many pianos I have seen.

—because the action of the Epworth is easy and prompt—repeats rapidly and has a delightful touch. I don't like to play on a piano that rattles or works sluggishly.

—because the Epworth is finished by the old reliable, slow process—not rushed. I have seen pianos whose finish peels off after a while.

—because the Epworth has the strongest ten year warrant I ever saw,—the Company takes all the risks of piano lasting. Most other warrants don't warrant the working parts, nor the sounding board from splitting.

—because I can buy the Epworth direct from the Company, instead of through an agent or dealer. I prefer to be my own dealer—sell it myself and save that middle profit. It costs lots of money to sell pianos ordinarily, and that expense is a dead loss, which I avoid by buying the Epworth direct.

—besides the Company will send me a piano on trial. It must be perfect and satisfactory to me or they take it back. In this way I get to use my own judgment—and no agent around to worry me.

Above are some of the reasons Epworth pianos are growing in favor with intelligent buyers.

Our catalogue explains a number of other interesting points. Tells how some pianos soon become hard and metallic while others seem to get better and better—sweeter toned with use.

No matter what piano you are thinking of buying it will pay you to sit down and write for the Epworth Piano Catalogue—free for the asking.

Write for that catalogue to-day.

THE ECUMENICAL.

BY REV. F. N. PARKER, D. D.

At one of the sessions of the recent Ecumenical Conference a negro delegate, after strenuous efforts, succeeded in getting the floor. His opening remark was suggestive. He declared that, having been sent by his people, they expected to hear from him. In fact, he dared not go home without having made a speech. Believing this, he, therefore, spoke. There was much philosophy in this. My own sense of responsibility did not reach this pitch, but I believe that some account of the proceedings may be of interest to readers of the ADVOCATE.

The sessions of the Conference were held in Wesley Chapel, City Road. This historic place added an interest of its own to the Conference, especially to the American and colonial delegates. The consciousness of what God has wrought was intensified by the fact that representatives of many millions of Wesley's followers were meeting in Conference in a church built by himself, hard by a house in which he lived and died, and on ground made sacred by his grave. Standing in the room where this apostolic man died, I could but pray that a double portion of his spirit might fall upon the Methodists of the twentieth century.

The opening service was somewhat liturgical in character, but impressive and devout. Bishop Galloway, as usual, fully met the demands of the occasion. The sermon was spiritual, appropriate, and eloquent. I heard many appreciative comments.

A general impression of the body is difficult to give. It had a general Methodist unity of spirit, but was very diverse in character. There were men of great ability in abundance, but these, with a few exceptions, rarely took part in the general discussions. The essays and appointed addresses were generally of a high standard in every respect. The programme was too extensive to give an adequate account of the Conference as a whole, but many important topics were presented with ability. The essays and addresses presenting the present position of Methodism were very suggestive. Dr. Goucher read a capital essay on Methodism in the Western Section. One remarkable feature of the treatment of this subject was the judicial and critical estimate of our general condition. The spirit of boasting over past successes and present statistics was absent. It appeared that our strength was greater than ever, but threatened with greater perils and face to face with greater responsibilities than ever before.

The report of Methodist union having been accomplished in Australia and New Zealand projected the general subject of union into the Conference. The result was scarcely soothing. Evidently our English friends are in no immediate danger of taxing their resources in the way of mutual concession. During this discussion even the talking members of our own delegation relapsed into a most peaceful silence.

I was greatly interested in the successful issue of the Free Church Federation movement. No doubt the existence of the Established Church is a large factor in causing the Nonconformist bodies to draw closer together, but the result is decidedly beneficial.

The discussion on the subject of the spiritual integrity of Methodism was very helpful. As Dr. Davison rightly said, this was the most important subject the Conference could consider. Our theological fidelity to spiritual regeneration as the central aim of the gospel was fully vindicated. From every section of the church the testimony to the supreme importance of personal fellowship with God was as one voice. My own conviction resulting from observation during the Conference is, that the spiritual condition of Methodism is as vital as it ever was. Our great need to-day is the wisdom to give practical direction to the latent energy of our vast following.

The matter of Higher Criticism brought out the fact that the church, as a whole, is not much affected by it. The Wesleyans have been touched by it more than we in America, but it is evident that a number of leading men on this side of the water are in sympathy with the principles of the movement, though conservative in regard to the extent of their application.

In regard to the liquor problem, it was apparent that we in America are leading the world in measures for the suppression of the evil. There is no doubt, however, that the temperance sentiment in England is growing. The evil is greater there, and, perhaps, "the conservative instincts of fallen nature" are stronger there, but many noble men and women are preaching by precept and example the doctrine of total abstinence.

The general results of the Conference are of such a nature that they can not be tabulated. We gain chiefly in breadth of view and that world consciousness so essential to any branch of the church of Christ which aims to maintain the spirit of our founder in the statement that "the world is our parish."

FOURTH ROUND.

BY REV. T. B HOLLOMAN, D. D.

This is the busy round. The farmers are busy gathering in the crops, the merchants are busy looking after accounts, the stewards are busy hunting for delayed quarterage, and the preachers are busy rounding up for Conference. In many instances little money has been paid the faithful pastors, and they have lived close rather than incur debt. How little our people know of the pinchings, often, in the pastor's home. And then some would use the fact that no debt is due to excuse them from meeting the promised salary. The pride of some congregations seems to extend no further than a fair percentage of whatever amount may have been promised.

Already some churches have met their obligations to the preachers, while others are far behind, and seem indifferent to the result; yet the assessment was of their own making, and the crops are good.

This is the time of greatest anxiety to the pastor, because of collections to be made on the various interests committed to him. All want to make reports "in full," but, alas! alas! the time is short and the opportunities past. He realizes now the wisdom of making some effort in the early part of the year.

This is the round of greatest trial to the presiding elder. Like a belated comet, he is whirling around the points of his district, compressing the work of the quarter into a few weeks, trying to stimulate the energies of his co-laborers, and encourage the workmen for collections in full; a special effort at one point in one direction, and at another still another interest must be pressed.

Then, this is the round to hear, sub rosa, complaints. How much the pastor would have profited by some suggestions made, and in many instances they would have been gladly received. Many reasons are given for failure at different points; many suggestions are made as to the needs of the work, the kind of man required, etc. "Like children sitting in the market-place." To one he "has a devil;" to another he is a "glutton and wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners." What a relief to have a request, "Return our pastor; he is a good man."

The certainty of getting a pastor, I fear, encourages a people, in some instances, to ask for another preacher, when, by a brotherly spirit and proper encouragement, the present pastor would do better than any other.

Again, for reasons insufficient within themselves, and inspired by a hope for something better, the pastor finds cause for removal which brings only disappointment.

At this point I would thank you, Mr. Editor, for your excellent editorial in the ADVOCATE, of the seventeenth, "An Ugly Habit," and commend it to all for careful reading. In it you forcibly remind us of Burns' humorous poem, "Wod some power the giftie gie us, to see ourscls as others see us."

In a recent issue there also appears from the masterly pen of Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan an article addressed to young ministers, which I would that all could read and profit thereby. Neither age, wisdom, nor experience, warrant in me the assumption of a counselor; but, coming from such a source as it does, I ask only to be allowed a most hearty endorsement.

SOME GREAT REVIVALS.

BY REV. W. D. BASS.

MR. EDITOR: On invitation of pastors in the Mississippi Conference, I assisted them in meetings during August and September.

The first Sunday in August we began with Bro. Crossley at the nice country village of Walnut Grove, and continued the battle eight days, which resulted in a fine revival in the church, and about thirty-two additions. Walnut Grove has a large class of promising young people and a splendid school. I shall not soon forget how they prayed in public and testified to the saving power of Christ. Bro. Crossley is one of our best pastors, and is dearly loved by his people. He is fully consecrated to the work of the Master, and is growing in power and usefulness. His people ought to give him a good salary and keep him, for he is certainly capable of commanding a work that will pay him a comfortable support. I have never helped a pastor who impressed me more with the fact that his life was given to the one work of saving sinners and building up the church.

August 12 we began with Bro. Rutledge at Pleasant Hill, on the Vimville circuit. That was one of the best country communities I had visited in a long time. We had a real good meeting, notwithstanding it rained more or less all the week. A good work was done in the church—some saved. The majority of the people in the immediate community of Zero, where we held the meeting, were Baptists, but they attended and enjoyed our services. Bro. Rutledge is a good man, devoted to the work of his Master.

Next, we assisted in the Lake Camp Meeting, of which Bro. Dawson has already written. The records of eternity alone will reveal the number of conversions at that meeting. I shall long remember those powerful prayer meetings we had in the grove with men only. Bro. Dawson is a good preacher.

September 6 we began the great meeting at Shiloh Camp Ground. That I shall always remember as one of the greatest revivals of my life. I have conducted revivals that resulted in a larger number of additions to the church, but I have been in but few meetings where I thought the work was deeper, spiritually. We had sixty-two additions to our church. Bro. P. D. Hardin is closing his fourth year on that charge. His people love him. He has the right idea about how to hold a successful camp meeting. He first has to know who he employs to help him, and then he makes that one feel the burden and responsibility of the work, and by that means he gets the very best service of which his helper is capable under the guidance of the Holy Ghost. Bro. Hardin is one of the most promising young pastors in his Conference.

Bro. Mellen, the presiding elder, was there during the most of the time, and preached three good sermons. He is a wide-awake leader in the church. I am not surprised that the Forest district has made such rapid developments under the administration of such a learned and consecrated leader as Bro. Mellen. He not only knows how to preside with grace and dignity, and look carefully after all the interests of the church, but he can preach in revivals and talk to mourners. God bless Bro. Mellen. He is a true man of God; I love him.

Dr. Watkins, president of Whitworth College, was there looking for girls to educate. He is doing a great work. He preached an interesting sermon.

Prof. Huddleston was there in the interest of Millsaps College. I like the way he approaches young men in their educational interest. He makes it a personal matter, and takes a young man to himself, and talks to him about going to school just like I talk to a boy about his salvation. That's the plan by which to succeed, both educationally and religiously—explain the advantages of obtaining the blessings promised. I have not the time, nor the editor the space, to say many good things that could be easily said of other ministers who attended the camp meeting and added to its interest and success. Bros. Selby, Langford, Gale, Guice and Dominick preached once each.

Finally, we began with Bro. Dominick, at Morton, the third Sunday in September, and continued eight days, which resulted in the greatest revival that town ever had. Some fine material was received into our church on profession of faith; eighteen additions in all, with yet others to join. There were as many, or more, converted in the church as out of it. The pastor's wife, two daughters and son were among the additions.

In all of these battles Bro. Willis Bass accompanied me as my leader in the music. To God be all the glory.

Corinth, Miss., Oct. 2, 1901.

MISSIONARY RALLIES.

BY REV. J. H. SHUMAKER.

MR. EDITOR: We are very much gratified to hear from so many of the brethren who have held the missionary mass meetings. Their notes of success are indeed encouraging and cheering. One layman says he had been opposed to missions till the mass meeting enlightened and converted him to the cause perfectly. Another said that there was never a more profitable or interesting meeting held in his church. One writes: "Sunday, at my central church, I had a missionary mass meeting, which was a grand success. The largest church-house on the work did not begin to hold the crowds. Everyone of my young people on the programme did beautifully. One result was the raising of one-half my assessment for missions; another was, a new impetus was given to missions, and my leading members say a greater missionary interest and spirit were set in motion than ever in the history of the circuit." Another says, "We ought to have such a meeting every year in every church."

We pray to God and earnestly entreat the brethren of the North Mississippi Conference to render the programme prepared and sent them by the Board of Missions, or one of their own make, before Conference. It will add something to the contribution to missions, and will add much to the permanent prosperity of the church. Our greatest need is "faith in God and facts for the people."

Kosciusko, Miss.

FOREST DISTRICT ITEMS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Raleigh, the county seat of Smith county, and the center of the circuit of that name, has been stirred from center to circumference, and turned upside down and inside out—completely revolutionized by a gracious revival. There were many conversions and reclamations, some professions of entire sanctification, 18 additions to our church, some to the Baptist, and several to the Presbyterian. R S. Gale, P. C., was assisted by R. A. Breland, L. E. At Trinity Church, on the same circuit, there was another revival, and up to last Thursday night (Oct. 17) there had been 11 accessions.

Pelahatchie, Morton circuit—W. D. Dominick, P. C., assisted by W. D. Bass, L. E.—has undergone a similar experience, resulting in about 100 conversions and 47 additions to the church. Bro. Dominick is the happiest man in the district.

At Lovett's School-house, four miles south of Forest, B. F. Lewis, P. C., Forest circuit, and W. J. Dawson, P. C., Lake circuit, held a four days' meeting, which resulted in 7 accessions by vows and 2 by certificate, and the organization of a society with 24 members.

C. M. Crossley, P. C., Walnut Grove circuit, writes me, Oct. 14: "Had a good day yesterday at Pine Grove and White Plains Church. Six accessions, 5 conversions, 2 sanctified; $34 in cash and subscriptions on Conference collections, and $60 in cash and good subscriptions for new church [at White Plains], with all the nails and all the logs needed for the inmber. One man gave all the logs."

M. L. White, P. C., Carthage circuit, under date Oct. 4: "Closed meeting last night at Jessie. Great good; 8 accessions, 6 baptised. Building Committee appointed; we will build there. This ends my protracted meetings of eleven weeks; 67 members in all; net gain, 59 to date."

J. W. Crisler, P. C, Newton and Hickory, reports 10 accessions since last report, and two more meetings to be held at school-house appointments off the railroad. Will soon begin building a church near Wall's School-house.

Meetings are now in progress at Taylorville and Laurel. Many of the preachers and I are confidently looking for the thousand additions to the church in this district this year for which we have prayed. The conversions already exceed a thousand, and the accessions six hundred.

I have just returned from a trip of eighteen days through the country in my buggy behind "Maud" and "Mack"—the holding of eight Quarterly Conferences and preaching fourteen times. Five of the Conferences were very delightful occasions—Ellisville, Laurel, Heidelberg, Montrose and Raleigh—where everything financial and spiritual and reports were all in good shape. There were many pleasant features in connection with the Taylorville, Rose Hill and Trenton Conferences. All indicated marked advance over last year at the same time. Six of the eight charges will probably pay all Conference assessments in full, and five will likely pay in full the amounts promised for ministerial support; and all could if the people only would. Raleigh circuit deserves special mention for being the first charge in this district (and possibly in the Conference) this year to pay the assessments for foreign and domestic missions and Conference claimants in full. A brighter day has dawned for Raleigh and for Raleigh circuit. Every charge in the district is able to do as well, and some much better. Out of the eighteen charges (not counting the Indian Mission) fourteen will probably be in "Class A" at Conference, and the other four ought to be. The pastors expect to report $100 special for Soochow University from each the Vossburg and Heidelberg and the Morton circuits. The Board of Church Extension will be asked to help in the building of at least six houses of worship—possibly eight. It is to be hoped that all our pastors will see that the assessments for church extension, as well as for foreign and domestic missions and other causes—particularly the Bible cause—are fully paid. Yours faithfully,

T. L. MELLEN.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

This writer had the privilege of spending last Sabbath in Grenada, where he preached in the morning and attended the Woman's Missionary Rally in the evening. Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, the pastor, is in great favor with his people, and is doing good work.

Grenada College is flourishing. The boarding capacity is full, and the enrollment is as large as ever before. Applicants are being turned away for want of room. The contemplated additional building is greatly needed. It is hoped that during the session of Conference proper arrangements will be made for its immediate erection. With ample buildings and equipments we may have in Grenada a college for female education second to none in the South. Let us "arise and build."

A meeting is in progress here. The pastor is being assisted by Rev. Theo. Copeland, of Alabama. Interest is good, and we are praying for a great revival.

We want a Local Preachers' Directory in our next Conference Minutes. For this purpose I respectfully request each pastor to write me at once the names and postoffice address of the local preachers in his charge, distinguishing between licentiates, deacons, and elders. Brethren, please attend to this immediately.

G. W. BACHMAN.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

DEAR DOCTOR BOSWELL: Many of the readers of the ADVOCATE will be glad to learn that our work here moves on nicely. We have a fine student body. All the departments are well organized, and the work being done by the students is of a high order, and is quite satisfactory. Our enrollment to date is 125. These, it must be remembered, are college students, as we have no Preparatory Department. We have twenty-one in our Senior class, six of whom are candidates for the A. M. degree. The students manifest more interest than usual in the work of the Y. M. C. A. I doubt if the religious interest of the school has ever been better than it is at present.

We are also gratified at the increased interest upon the part of the students in the two literary societies.

We are encouraged to believe that we shall have a successful year.

What Our Editors Say.

FREE SPEECH.

In an effort to get at the anarchists, who should never have been permitted to breed in our society, some legislative reformers would trample down the very traditions of our liberty, and would introduce Old World doctrines of a limited speech and a censored press. No man has a right to utter a violent speech, or print an unjust or malicious statement; yet the ideal condition of restraint in such matters must be reached through a cultivated moral sense, rather than through legislative repressions. Already we have come to the place where the public taste and the public sense of decency and propriety demand an abatement of the newspaper license which, for the sake of a mere political advantage, heaps abuse and opprobrium on public officials, and which makes a vaudeville of private and official honor and a variety show of public morals. The red, the yellow, and the black newspapers are the parentage of a multitudinous progeny of vile manners, vile thinking, and violent doings. The virtue of public and private execration alone can destroy by making unprofitable this contaminating and infectious literature, which, as all Old World centers prove, would find a way even under the rigid censorships and legal restrictions practiced in monarchical states. The Bill of Rights which guarantees freedom of speech is the purchase of centuries of sacrifice and blood. It is itself not to be abridged, but protected and vindicated by a widening and deepening moral sense in the body public. Let the youth of this generation constitute themselves, in their enlightened and ennobled literary taste, a bulwark against the tides of literary license.—Epworth Era.

CONFERENCE IS NEAR.

What preacher do you think we will get next year? It is hard to tell. Some of our secular papers can tell, so they think. But they know nothing about it. The presiding elder and the Bishop may have some one in view, but even they may be mistaken. The Bishop can not always make such appointments as he would be glad to make. If the Bishop does not know the conditions of your church, go to him, and tell him the facts about it, and what sort of a preacher you need, and then leave the selection to him. He will certainly do what he thinks best for you if he can. Do not insist on his sending a certain man. He may know that that man is not the one that will do you the best service. Churches are sometimes anxious to have certain men sent to them, and at the end of the year are just as anxious to have them sent away from them. The presiding elder knows, or ought to know, all the facts connected with your church. But if you think he does not, tell him and the Bishop all they ought to know, and be satisfied to leave the matter where the law puts it—in the hands of the Bishop. He will do what he thinks best for your church. And let that be the end of it. Co-operate with the new man just as if he were the one you desired.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

METHODISM IN 1900.

That which makes Methodism distinctive is not her doctrines, but the incarnation of that doctrine which has forced the creeds of Christendom to imbibe its spirit; not her machinery, but the flexibility of that machinery to accommodate itself to the needs of humanity in any age or clime. Hence, a vital and vitalizing spirit has permeated Methodism from the beginning, yielding cheerfully to the leadings of Providence, that she might finish her course with joy. Her evangelical power holds the world in blissful abeyance. In the United States the past year her increase is nearly one-third of all the other denominations, including the Catholics, and notwithstanding Methodism planted itself in America one hundred years after Congregationalism, yet statistics show the Congregationalists have an increase last year of less than 2,000, while Methodism had over 100,000 increase. This comparison is not made to disparage the invaluable work of our Congregational brethren, or to inflate Methodism, but to indicate our inheritance, that we may humbly meet what God, by a most propitious providence, demands of us.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

ANARCHIST FACTORIES.

The anarchist and the saloon are inseparable. Most, the leader of the New York brood, is a saloonkeeper. When Emma Goldman was in this city a few days before the President's assassination, she made her home with the keeper of a saloon in a not particularly reputable part of the city. There is a general desire expressed among the good people of this country for the expulsion of the anarchists. This is well as far as it goes, but with it there should also be a demand for the abolition of the saloon. The saloon makes anarchists. If the present tribe is expelled from the country, the saloon will only train others to take their places. To expel the anarchists and leave the anarchist factories would simply signify that in a few years the work must all be done over again.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

AN IMPOSSIBLE TASK.

No dozen men on earth could take the work of a Conference cabinet and place one hundred and seventy-five men perfectly. A dozen of the most disgruntled persons would, most likely, miss it as far as anybody else. From the inside we do know that those who bear the brunt of the battle have the cause at heart, and grieve much over the necessity of hurting any man or place. Let us all bear, heroically, the criticisms put upon us, and strive to be true even under pressure. We shall come to the "Land of the Unclouded Day" after awhile.—Midland Methodist.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS

His baptism can not be explained upon any other hypothesis than his priesthood. The phrase, 'all right eousness,' which he mentioned as the ground for his baptism, can not possibly refer to moral law, because we can not imagine any period in his history in which he had not obeyed or fulfilled that law. That law was fulfilled in the moment of his conception, being without inherited depravity. To refer it to moral law would make him a "veritable sinner; hence under guilt, and consequently totally unqualified to redeem the world." It must refer, then, to the ceremonial law governing the initiation of priests, as the preceding part of the sentence also testifies. "It becometh us"—John and Christ—"to fulfil all righteousness."

Jesus called John's attention to that law because it was still in force, and he purposed being consecrated lawfully. That the word (dikaiosunen) translated "righteousness" refers to ceremonial law is further evident by its being translated 'ordinances" in other places in the New Testament. In one place it is even translated "ceremonies" on the margin. (Heb. ix, 1.) This is conclusive that our Lord referred John to the ceremonial requirement anent the consecration of priests.

That John was himself a priest, and the proper person to induct him, the Scriptures abundantly testify. That Jesus came as a high-priest, read the whole book of Hebrews. The genealogies given by the inspired writers also testify. Christ himself said so. When he purged the temple at Jerusalem, and broke up that den of thieves, the chief priests and scribes said unto him, "Tell us by what authority thou doest these things." He referred them to his baptism by John, showing them that he had the prerogative to induct him into his priestly office, and as a priest, thus consecrated, he had a right to cleanse the temple.

It only remains to be seen what the law required concerning the consecration of priests. That the priest to be consecrated must be thirty years old. (See Num. iv and I. Chron. xxiii.) Hence Luke (iii, 23) tells us that he deferred his consecration until he was of that age. If the reader will refer to Num. viii and Lev. viii, etc., he will find that the manner of consecration by priests was by "pouring oil" upon them and by "sprinkling water" upon them. The "laver of brass" that was placed "between the tabernacle and the altar," with "water put therein," was for Aaron and his sons to "wash their feet thereat" before entering to do the priest's office, and was a distinct thing from the anointing and consecration of priests.

In like manner was Christ consecrated to his holy office. John "sprinkled water" upon him, and then was he anointed with the Holy Ghost, of whose influences the anointing oil poured upon the head of Aaron was symbolical, and from that hour Jesus was the Christ. (See Acts x, 37, 38.)

Even if the phrase, "all righteousness," is to be regarded as referring to every institution, ordinance, type, ceremony and prophecy of which Jesus was himself the "fulfillment," still it points to his baptism in his official character, and necessity was upon John thus to "manifest" him.

That Jesus was consecrated by John into his priestly office is evidenced also by the next verse, where we are told that he "immediately" entered upon his ministry. "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway from the water." (R. V.) The Greek word translated "straightway" is an adverb of time, and carries with it the idea of "immediately."

The average immersionist has heard so much unscriptural nonsense about "Jesus going down into the water" and "coming up out of the water" that he really believes the Bible says so, and the whole of them believe that Jesus took a straight, rectilinear line up the bank. That is all they can see in the text. But the Greek says no such thing. Here it is, "Apo ton hudatos"—"from the water." So translated by the Revised Version, and admitted to be correct by every scholar in the world.

"Ulner, the great German critic on idioms, shows that 'apo' (from) can not be applied to a case where a subject was literally in or under the water, but only to cases where he was at, by, near to." (Ditsler.)

Hence our Lord was not in the water at all, but simply went "from" the water's edge. Moreover, "If 'baptizo' means, as they say it does, to dip—as dip in all cases implies withdrawal—how could he come up out of the water in their sense if dip had already withdrawn him?"

If John had immersed Christ, he would have overleaped the bounds of his priestly prerogative and ceremonial requirement, and established a precedent unheard of before in priestly ceremony. But John, in all his life, never heard of such a monstrosity and travesty upon divine institutions as immersion.

PACIFIC CONFERENCE.

BY REV. W. P. ANDREWS.

The Pacific Conference was convened in its fifty-first session Thursday, Oct. 3, at 9 A. M., and adjourned after reading the appointments in connection with a sacramental service, on Sunday evening, Oct. 6. This was the shortest Conference that I ever attended. We have usually begun on Wednesday, and adjourned on Monday, occasionally holding until Tuesday. For all that, the session was so short, and many felt too much hurried, I believe nothing was neglected. Bishop Duncan is evidently an adept at expediting business.

It was our privilege to have a visit from the Bishop in Salinas before Conference. He was in fine spirits, nor did his spirits decline at Conference. The brethren, too, wore a hopeful air.

The reports indicated some advance. There had been a small increase in number of members and in some of the collections. The San Joaquin district was the banner in all things. On a correct assessment its contributions for foreign missions were in full. Rev. J. J. N. Kenney is the happy presiding elder. He is in every respect a first-class man. He was chosen Conference Secretary of Missions, to devote such time as he may be able in connection with his duties as presiding elder. Under his direction I look for an advance in the interest of missions.

All the preachers were pronounced blameless in character and official administration except L. A. Green, who was expelled from the ministry and the church for drunkenness. The poor fellow succumbed to an appetite formed before his conversion. J. W. Ray located after the appointments were read.

We received several transfers, and four transferred from us. Some of the new men who came to us a year ago had done well.

J. J. N. Kenney heads our delegation to the General Conference. His companions are: Clerical, W. E. Vaughan, and lay, J. W. Potter and Judge Strother. Jos. Emery and R. F. Allen are the clerical alternates, and G. V. Northby and D. R. Wilson, lay alternates. Kenney was elected on the first ballot by two-thirds majority.

J. C. Hyden joined the ranks of the superannuates. He had been an effective itinerant preacher for more than fifty years.

T. D. Baner and J. M. Martin had died. The former had done faithful service in the Conference for seventeen years. The latter was a young man on trial, who came from Texas last year. He was in poor health when he came, and his health got worse rather than better.

On Saturday afternoon of our Conference session I received a note from Berkeley requesting me to call on Sunday afternoon to see Rev. J. H. Holland and wife, who had recently arrived from Mississippi, and were ill. I complied with the request, which came from their son. I found that they had been quite sick for five weeks, but were improving some. I had not known they were in the State. They seemed delighted to see me, and it was a pleasure for me to be with them. We had not met before in twenty years.

J. E. Moore and J. J. N. Kenney continue in the presiding eldership, and I. F. Bette succeeds Jos. Emery, the latter going to Hollister. E. J. Harper, formerly of the Los Angeles Conference, was announced as a transfer from the South Georgia Conference, and appointed to Centenary. P. T. Ramsey succeeds W. E. Vaughan at Sacramento. W. O. Waggoner and W. F. Coffin, who were respectively at Santa Rosa and Ukiah, exchanged places. Your humble servant remains at Salinas.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

BY REV. I. L. PEEBLES.

We fear that in this day of so much to be done that the right observance of the Sabbath is not being considered as it should be. We are so liable to forget how to keep the Sabbath. We are not only to be careful about what we do and what we do not do, but about what we say. In other words, we should be careful about our conversations on the Sabbath. It is not the day for talks about hunting and shooting, fishing, farming, merchandising, railroading, boating, factory work, etc. It is true these things may be mentioned to illustrate religious truths but not as mere subjects of conversation. Worldly conversations are not to be indulged on God's day. God says, "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day, and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable, and shalt honor Him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord, and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob, thy father, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." (Isa. lviii, 13, 14.) Indeed, I firmly believe that we are not to be too worldly in our conversations at any time, for our Savior says, "For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh" (Matt xii, 34); that is, "out of the excess of the heart the mouth speaketh." If there is more of the world than there should be in one's heart, he is sure to speak of it, and therefore is it not clear to every real child of God that he should avoid too much talk of the world in the week, much less on God's holy day, the Sabbath? No talk of the world on God's day is allowable that does not help us to love and serve him more and more. God's day is a sanctified day—that is, a day set apart for a different use from all the rest of the week; and hence we are not to talk about business and worldly matters on that day as we may on any other day. Therefore, how careful should all Christians be about their conversations on the Sabbath, most especially ministers of Christ, who are expected not only to instruct the people wisely, but to live wisely before them. Let us not have our own pleasure, nor speak our own words on the holy Sabbath.

SALEM CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: Our camp meeting opened on Wednesday night, the ninth instant, according to previous announcement. There were only about sixty or seventy persons present in the introductory service, but the crowd increased till Sunday, at eleven, when the congregation numbered about 400. The pastor was without ministerial help till Thursday night, when Bros. G. W. Huff and L. R. Roberts came in. Both of these brethren did splendid preaching, which was honored by the presence and power of the Holy Ghost.

Bros. C. J. Phillips, M. J. Marble and F. W. Robinson each preached a sermon—all of which were good. While, as a matter of course, some services were more demonstrative than others, there was not a dull service in the entire meeting.

The brethren who have been visiting Salem Camp Ground twenty-five or thirty years say they never saw such general interest manifested. The behavior from beginning to end was of a commendable type. The young folks seemed deeply interested in all the services, rendering excellent service in song. We feel we owe them a great debt of gratitude for this valuable assistance, especially Miss Claudia Davis, who was so faithful at the organ. May the Lord abundantly bless all these young people, and may they one of these days blend their voices with angels in singing the song of Moses and the Lamb around the throne of God in heaven!

The tent-holders did all within the bounds of reasonable service to make their guests comfortable, and we believe this Salem Camp Meeting of 1901 will be long held in sacred memory by all who attended.

There were about sixty or seventy professed conversions, and Christians were led to a higher and more consecrated life. There were only four accessions to the church, but nearly everybody in this community belong to some church.

The last sermon was preached Sunday night, and the congregation remained in the tabernacle till a late hour, and shouted and prayed and praised God.

The last prayer was prayed and the last song sung Monday morning, the fourteenth instant, and people turned their faces homeward. Many resolved to live nearer the Lord.

IS THE TOBACCO HABIT SINFUL?

It is not our purpose to sit in judgment upon anyone who is addicted to the tobacco habit, but merely desire to inquire into the character of a very widespread habit. No matter where you go, you find men of all ages, classes and races who use tobacco in some form.

To determine the moral quality of any act, we must first determine its effects. If it results in neither good nor bad, we say it has no moral quality; if it results in evil, we say it is itself evil; but if it result in good, we say it is a good act.

Let us notice the tobacco habit in the light of cause and effect. If it produces no effect, then it is not a cause; if it produces good effect, it is a good cause and vice versa, if it produce evil effect, it is an evil cause.

Some of the most learned leaders of scientific investigation tell us that tobacco is a very strong narcotic poison, and that it poisons the system of every man addicted to its use. They hold that it undermines the constitution, and shortens the average human life from ten to twenty years; that it dulls the intellect and blunts the moral sensibilities. To deny these statements is to fly in the face of clearly discovered scientific facts and to question the statements of the most learned scientists of the day.

In the next place, it produces positive discomfort and actual suffering in thousands who do not use it. To avoid discomfort and actual nausea, many women and not a few men are forced to leave the company of those who use it.

Now, we ask, Is it right for me to indulge a habit that produces discomfort to others? Let conscience answer, and not appetite.

Again, it renders many otherwise clean people unclean. I have never seen any man who could use tobacco decently. Who that reads this has not seen the very sanctuary of God itself defiled with the spittle of the tobacco habitue? Has any man a right to use a thing that forces him to be indecent? We simply ask for information.

Lastly, the habit costs the nation $900,000,000 per annum. This is more than is spent for education or the spread of the gospel at home and abroad. It is enough to educate 9,000,000 children annually, or to send 900,000 missionaries into the regions beyond.

Now, since tobacco shortens life, dulls the intellect, blunts the moral sense, renders men unclean, produces discomfort, destroys millions of money that could be used in the education and conversion of the ignorant and unsaved, we ask again, Is the habit sinful? If the use of the weed lengthened life, cleared the brain, quickened the conscience and increased the finances of the consumer, we would not hesitate to declare the use of it a positive good.

If any who read these lines can justify its use, can harmonize it with reason and Scripture, we would be pleased to read what he has to say. There must be something wrong about the habit, for I have never seen a man who used it but that regretted the habit and discouraged his boys from its use. Why regret it? Why discourage its use? Why?

INQUIRER.

AN UNEXPECTED DEBT.

Some score and a half of centuries ago the wise man remarked: "There is a time for everything," and the jolly old world has been shaken with laughter at ill-timed performances ever since. And the wiser and less likely the belated one is to be caught in the Rip Van Winkle act the more she has enjoyed the joke.

Now, it would have been a beautiful thing if, when the editorial pack was hot after some few small, lean hares, Bro. Lew's had come to their rescue and beaten off the dogs with such stout clubs as "Seats too close," "Standing is a scriptural attitude in prayer as well as kneeling," and "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." But to see him sit smilingly on the fence under his silk umbrella enjoying the rabbit chase till some hunter with more sportsmanlike proclivities tries to blow off the pack to set them after fat and full-grown bear, depredating the same fields, then throw down his umbrella, leap from the fence, and, with dishevelled hair and tear-streaming cheeks, go tearing down the field after the hunter, crying, "Poor bear! poor bear!" is entirely too much for the maintenance of a solemn face. If I had just heard some murmurings of "Poor hare!" I should have been better prepared for his outburst of pity for the "Poor bear!" and not have come into his debt to the full value of a ten-pound roast for recently acquired fat. But I would just like to reassure my dear brother by saying here that my reason for the call off was not so much to hurt the bears (for I had more faith in them than he—I knew they could take care of themselves) as it was to relieve the distress of the hares, for it was very plain that our hunters very much preferred chasing small game. As for the bears, I haven't the slightest uneasiness, for it is evident we haven't a bear dog in the whole pack.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

Sunday-School Work in China.

BY MISS ELIZABETH HUGHES.

Wherever we have a mission station in our China Mission, there we have the Sunday-school. These schools, wherever practical, are conducted according to modern methods. Native preachers, teachers, and other native helpers, furnish us with the necessary men for the superintendence of these schools, and some of them take a lively interest in their work. These men—most of them—have been educated in one or another of our mission schools, so are not only well-instructed in the Bible and other Christian literature, but have some knowledge of modern methods of teaching and conducting schools. Our pupils, for the most part, come from the various boarding and day-schools of the mission. In Shanghai, for instance—one of our largest centres of work—we have not only the Anglo-Chinese College for men and boys, and two boarding-schools for girls, but a number of day-schools as well. The college and the two boarding-schools furnish us with something over two hundred pupils, while in the various day-schools there are more than four hundred. The work is so large and so extensive at this station as to require not only three preaching-places on Sunday, but we have the three Sunday-schools as well. One, the largest and most central, is at Moore's Church, located in the most flourishing and prosperous part of the new, or modern, Shanghai—the English concession. Here, as a nucleus for the Sunday-school, we have pupils from the Girls' Boarding school — McTyeire — located quite near the church, and the pupils from four of the day-schools in that part of the city also attend Sunday-school and church at the same place. In the American concession, on the other side of town, about two miles away, with Anglo-Chinese College boys as a nucleus, another flourishing Sunday-school is found, where the pupils from the day-schools located in Hongkew—American concession—are brought together for the Sunday services. And down in the French concession, not very far from Moore's Church at what is known as Trinity Compound, we have one of the oldest centres of work in the mission, and a Sunday-school it would make one's heart glad to attend. The church is located in the same compound as the Clopton-Lambuth School—our oldest boarding-school for girls—and so, on Sunday morning, those who live within the walls of this mission compound have the privilege of meeting in the little church for the Sunday services without going out upon the street, filled, as it always is on Sundays as on week days, with the noise and confusion of the accustomed traffic of a busy city. Three or four day-schools meet with us in this Sunday-school, and here, as in each of the other churches named, groups of men and women—many of them native Christians, others seekers after the truth, while some prompted by no other motive than to witness "something new"—are to be found. Teachers are provided for all. Rarely does a man or woman who may chance to come into one of our Sunday-schools in China have an opportunity of being there long with no one speaking to them about the Christian truth we are teaching. Amongst our native Christians many advanced in years seem greatly to enjoy the Sunday-school, and are faithful attendants, never counting themselves too old to take part in the lesson in the capacity of pupils. Our best teachers, however, are always from those who have been instructed in some one of our mission boarding-schools.

At Soochow—another large centre of work—very similar conditions of work exist as those already mentioned as pertaining to Shanghai. At Sungkiang, and other stations, not so much centres of work as the cities referred to above, the work, while less extensive, is conducted on similar lines to that in the larger places. A Sunday-school is conducted in every place where we have a church or preaching-place, and wherever a day-school is located an effort is made to secure the attendance of the pupils on the Sunday-school and church services. Such efforts are usually successful. Boys in Sungkiang have been known to walk a mile over wet and slippery streets to attend these services. Our hearts rejoice when we think of the hundreds of boys and girls, taught in our mission schools in China, gathered together for the services of God's house and the study of his Word, Sabbath after Sabbath. They sing with zest, though not always with harmony, the songs of Zion, and the name of Jesus, the Savior of mankind, is very familiar to their youthful lips. School work—and we would never except the Sunday-school—is one of the most potent factors of our mission work in China. God is in it, and he is teaching those into whose hands he has committed these things, more and more to "do it as unto him;" to so labor as to glorify his name, the hope of China and of the world.

Sunday-School Work in Louisiana.

The number of Sunday-schools reported to the last session of the Louisiana Conference is 276, with 13 134 scholars. These schools may safely be divided into three classes: (a) Those doing thorough work, (b) those doing work that is fairly good, but far below the standard of excellence, and (c) schools that are schools in name only. Class C is larger than Class A, while in Class B you will find the largest number.

The crying need of our schools all over the State, and more especially in the smaller towns and country circuits, is for competent, consecrated men and women for superintendents and teachers. How are they to be supplied?

I was greatly rejoiced when I saw the announcement that Prof. Hamil, Superintendent of Training Work, would make his home in the South, and enter upon his work at an early day. I will do all in my power to have him hold an Institute in our State and for our Conference.

At the last session of our Conference the Conference Sunday school Board, in its report, recommended the holding of a Conference Sunday-school Convention. The report was adopted, but it met with such strong opposition from some of our strongest men that the convention was never held.

I trust Prof. Hamil will succeed in rallying our somewhat scattered forces, and give us a course of training that will equip and qualify for efficient Sunday-school work.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

NORTH BOSSIER CHARGE.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Our fourth Quarterly Conference was held at Emma Church, Oct. 9. Our beloved presiding elder, Dr. Sawyer, was on hand in fine spirits, and gave us an elegant sermon on the love of God, which drew the hearers nearer to God and to each other.

This has been a year of hard labor with us, but God has owned and blessed our feeble efforts for good. We have had good revivals and a goodly number converted, the church built up spiritually; have had an accession of thirty-four during the year, and have several other applications for membership. We have about all the Conference collections in cash and good subscriptions. We expect to bring every cent of these collections up in full this year. Have put a new $50 organ in Concord Church, and new (Standard) hymn books in two other churches on the work; put a new cooking-stove and heater in the parsonage, and are now building a $1,200 church in Plain Dealing. We have money enough in hand to complete it, and when completed, it will be one of the neatest and most comfortable churches in North Louisiana. We did not raise this money by church suppers, concerts, shows, etc. Every cent is clean money, contributed by the people in and near Plain Dealing, and by the Church Extension Board.

There is much water around Plain Dealing, and it has been said by some of the former pastors that Methodism will never accomplish much here, but we believe that the time is not far in the future when Methodism will stand "head and shoulders" above every other denomination in the town. We have more than doubled our membership here in the last two years.

We hope to see old North Bossier charge come to the front. May God bless the ADVOCATE and all her readers!

Your brother in the work,
G. D. PURCELL, P. C.

LECOMPTE, LA.

DEAR BRO: I have just closed a fine meeting for Bro. L. L. Roberts at Pisgah, La., where we had a gracious time. Thirty-four added to our church, and about forty-five conversions. The Alexandria district is coming out with her head up this year. Yours truly,

W. T. WOODWARD.

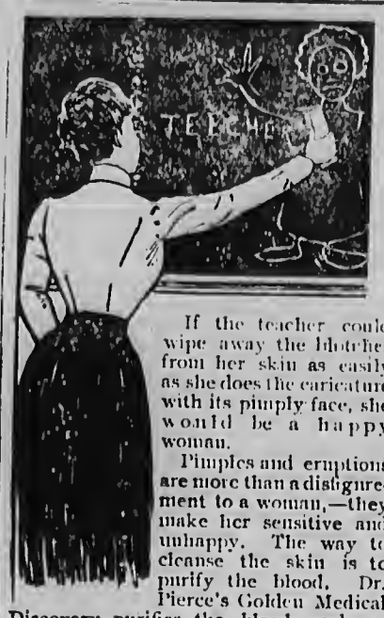
NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

COLUMBUS, MISS.

Dr. Walker K. Piner, of Bowling Green, Ky., has just left for home, after having spent ten days with us and preaching twenty sermons for us, besides making several talks to the children. He is, undoubtedly, one of the greatest preachers I ever heard. His sermons are great masterpieces of sacred oratory, and they were delivered with a forcefulness and fire which moved the people to a nobler life. Dr. Piner possesses all the elements of a great preacher. He is tall and handsome in person, has full control of his hands and eyes and voice, and while he employs no elocutionary tricks, he has all the charming mannerisms of a master on the platform, without any of the stilted, studied and strained movements of a man-made orator. His language is chaste and pure, and no slang word or expression fell from his lips while in Columbus. He did not move the people to laughter. A more serious mission absorbed and employed all his powers. His pathos was irresistible. But the great and glorious truths of salvation took fire in his soul, and in our souls, as he preached to us the gospel of the Son of God. The results can not be estimated. We have used the arithmetic altogether too much in our church work. How many conversions we had, I do not know. A number of grown people—most of them in the church—claim to have found the light; and how many children were saved, I did not try to count. No effort was made to urge people to join the church. Several tell me they want to join. Our people are stronger than they were. We now have 702 members. Thirty-six have been dismissed by certificate, 25 have been "lost sight of," and 14 have died, but our gains have been sufficient to keep the number of members about the same.

Our old friend, Dr. W. L. Lipscomb, has been at death's door for four weeks, but is slowly recovering.

T. W. LEWIS.



If the teacher could wipe away the blotches from her skin as easily as she does the caricature with its pimply face, she would be a happy woman.

Pimples and eruptions are more than a disfigurement to a woman,—they make her sensitive and unhappy. The way to cleanse the skin is to purify the blood. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery purifies the blood, and removes the clogging accumulations and poisons which corrupt it. When these are removed, pimples, boils, eruptions, sores, and other consequences of impure blood are entirely cured.

"For about one year and a half my face was very badly broken out," writes Miss Carrie Adams, of 116 West Main St., Battlecreek, Mich. "I spent a great deal of money with doctors and for different kinds of medicine, but received no benefit. At last I obtained a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Before I had taken one bottle of this medicine I noticed a change, and after taking three bottles I was entirely cured. I can well recommend Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to any one similarly afflicted."

Accept no substitute for the "Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for impure blood and skin diseases.

A CLUB OFFER.

On another page will be found our offer to club with THE COMMONER, Mr. Bryan's paper. It is one of the sprightliest and best-edited papers in the country. Mr. Bryan, late candidate for the presidency, has thousands of admirers in Lonisiana and Mississippi who will be glad to read his paper.

We will send the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and The Commoner for one year for TWO DOLLARS AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS; cash with the order. Read the advertisement. Send orders to

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

A writer of some ingenuity asserts in one of our exchanges that "wherever the disciples of Christ who administer the ordinance of baptism are named or specified they are always ordained men." If the writer can show without doubt that Ananias, who baptized Saul of Tarsus, was an ordained elder or bishop at Damascus, he will settle a matter that has puzzled many wiser and older men. By so doing he will give some we wot of a clearer proof than they can now present of their apostolic succession.

There is much plain, outspoken and fearless talk about the enforcement of law in Louisiana. The Monroe Bulletin, of Oct. 17, is conspicuous in this line. We have read nothing anywhere on the subject so refreshing. Brother Sholars is not wasting his talent. The Ruston Leader also speaks some wise words. Other papers also are to be congratulated. We hope they will keep the matter before the public. Upon the preservation of morals and enforcement of the law in our towns and rural sections depend the salvation of the land. We can expect nothing from our cities.

There is a vast deal of unconscious lying going on in the world. Much of it grows out of the fact that "the wish is father to the thought." A man wishes a thing to be true. He persuades himself that it is true, and then positively asserts that it is true. He is now in a position to recklessly declare that nothing else is true, and he uses his position to the best of his ability. His imagination is vivid and lively, and it adds daily to the store of his facts. We sometimes think that such men are not accountable. At any rate, we charitably think that their deviation from a straight line, even when intended to hurt somebody, is unconscious. On no other ground can they be excused.

ORGANIC UNION.

The organic-union fever breaks out among Methodists every ten years. It does not last long. It is caught at the Ecumenical Conferences—a favorable time, it appears, for such an outbreak. The Methodists, gathered from all parts of the world, carrying with them the holy and brotherly impulses of Methodist catholicity; and hearing experiences similar to their own from men gathered from all parts of the earth, and seeing how good it is for the brethren to dwell together in unity when away from home, many contract the fever, and declare it ought always and everywhere to be thus. Happily, the more thoughtful and conservative element, though none the less fraternal, check the tendency towards a stampede. The enthusiastic brethren, who see no difficulties in the way, are impatient, and would, if they could, effect the union of universal Methodism, without waiting the slow and cold process of formal action.

The last Ecumenical Conference turned out the usual number of patients suffering with the organic-union fever. Since the adjournment, free use of the press has been made by editors and correspondents in setting forth their sentiments. With considerable unanimity our brethren of the North are pleading for union.

As far as we have seen, no reason is assigned other than that it will be for the glory of God for the two Episcopal Methodisms in the United States to unite. This is not new. Besides, it is a pure assumption. Our fathers judged it to be for the glory of God for us to separate. They had good grounds for such a judgment. We were not living in peace. Like Abraham and Lot, they agreed to separate, and to a division of resources. Separation was effected, and results have demonstrated the wisdom of their action. If it was judged to be for the glory of God to separate, because we could not live in peace, we can not see that it will be for the glory of God for the same elements to come together again.

We readily acknowledge, as is often stated, that we are to-day living under new conditions. But conditions have nothing to do with causes and principles. They neither annihilate the one, nor change the other. Certainly the change of conditions in the country and society has not wiped out the causes that led to separation in 1844. This is acknowledged by those who have read and understand the history, but some, with unblushing audacity, ask us to ignore history, and bury our differences as though they were light and trifling, and come together. Dr. Levi Gilbert, editor of the Western Christian Advocate, says: "There is nothing to keep us from coming together as far as our mutual spirit and disposition are concerned. There remain only questions of polity and method." Pray, are "questions of polity" nothing? Are they to be ignored in efforts to bring together a mighty mass of men, a majority of whom sanction that polity which Southern delegates in 1844 repudiated as spurious and unsound, holding with a death-like grip to that polity which they believed to be true in their unsuccessful effort to save Bishop Andrew from slaughter? Dr. Gilbert ranges himself along by the side of the Presbyterian brother at the Ecumenical, who, in his advice on the subject, ventured to say "that though there may be a certain latitude necessary with regard to local arrangements and all that, there is nothing to hinder men swamping all their sectarian divisions and saying, 'We will be one army of the living God.'" The idea of Southern men swamping their differences!

If Southern men in the General Conference of 1844 had viewed the questions under discussion in the same light as did the majority, there would have been no discussion—no division. The attitude of the majority has not changed one iota. If this is true, the cause of division remains, and as long as the cause remains Southern Methodists can not with consistency or self-respect consent to re-union. This is the whole matter in a nut-shell.

If the organic union of all Episcopal Methodists is a thing to be desired, there is no more reason why the Church, South, should unite with the Methodist Episcopal Church than with the African Methodist Episcopal, or the African Zion, or any other body of colored Methodists. We say this because the Methodist Episcopal Church contains a very large number of colored members—a larger number, if we are not mistaken, than belong to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. The only difference between the M. E. Church and the colored churches named is, the colored churches have colored Bishops, and the M. E. Church has not. But she has colored connectional officers, editors and secretaries. The prospect is she will have colored Bishops—not missionary Bishops, with limited jurisdiction, but Bishops. To unite with them would bring about a disturbance over the "color line." "We judge it best to stand fast in the liberty wherewith God hath so strangely made us free," at least until the problem concerning color, social equality, etc., is definitely settled.

Our wise brethren of the North who advocate the union of the white churches are equally as much in favor of the consolidation of the colored churches. They really think the colored churches ought to unite. Observe: Not colored people, but colored churches. In all their enthusiasm and propositions for union and consolidation of colored churches, not one of them, as far as we have ever read, has offered to transfer their colored membership to the consolidated colored church. To do so, and press the matter, would raise a storm, the effects of which they would see and feel for years. If they desire union, let them make terms whereby every element, likely to create trouble, will be eliminated. Unless they do this, time and breath are wasted in talking about organic union.

Nobody sees the difficulties above alluded to, with others not named, any clearer than does Dr. Gilbert. He anticipates the objections, but declares "there need be no insuperable difficulties over questions concerning the 'race problem,' etc." If he will tell us how the difficulties can be removed, we will gladly hear him. We dare say that since his editorial of the sixteenth instant was written he has seen enough to convince him that the "race problem" is as much in the way to-day as it was thirty years ago. The problem can not be solved by organic union, and it would be worse than foolish to effect union until the problem is solved. We can not "swamp our differences," and we do not propose to add to our burdens.

THE LABORING MAN.

The laboring man, whether in field or factory, is the bone and sinew of our country. Every wheel in the vast machinery of our commercial and manufacturing interests depends on his brawn and brain. The money-kings themselves would cease to rule, should the laboring man cease to work. He ought, therefore, to be honored and encouraged and well paid for his toil. In our country he has no superior before the law. He is the peer of the millionaire. That there are distinctions between the one and the other is true, but they are purely of a so-called social character, due entirely to the arbitrary rule of wealth. Among the poorer and well-to-do classes, if the laboring man is not respected and received, it is his own fault. He has some failing or shortcoming that unfits him for their society.

The social ostracism of the laboring man is much more prevalent in the cities than in country districts. This is natural, as in the cities the wealthy classes, especially the women who govern society, are wholly out of touch, and, of course, out of sympathy with the classes who labor for their bread. They know nothing absolutely of the laboring people, save those who are employed by them as servants. That an individual who labors for a living can be a gentleman or a gentle lady never enters their minds. Yet, even in cities laboring people need not be deprived of the benefit of good society, and are not, unless they so elect. As a rule, the very best classes of society are Christians and members of the churches. They are not always the richest, but generally they possess wealth, more or less. Here laboring people may find welcome, not only to the privileges of the church, but to the social gatherings of the congregation. Persons as much respected as we ever saw were day laborers. They held office in the church, and their children were as welcome and as popular as the children of merchants and professional men. It will always be this way, whenever and wherever the laboring people identify themselves with the church, and take interest in its work.

We are told there is a breach between the church and the poor, and that, in consequence, the laboring classes have abandoned the church. It is said that the breach grows wider and wider. The statement is not true. The church has not deserted the poor; on the contrary, it is working harder to-day than at any time in the world's history to help all classes. That many poor people have deserted the church, or hold aloof from it, is true. But this even is not general. It is true only in places where evil influences have been brought to bear by men who are not, and never were in sympathy with the church. Eliminate these bad elements and we would soon cease to hear respectable laboring men declaiming against the church.

That there is a breach between labor and capital is not to be denied. But that is a very different thing from a breach between the church and the poor. And that breach, we dare say, so far as the laboring classes are concerned, was never effected or encouraged by Christian men, but by men who have little or no regard for religion or morals. And on the part of the rich it is chargeable to those who are not only godless, but work to defraud the laborer out of his hire. How this state of things can be bettered we undertake not to say. But we are sure there can never be an adjustment by a combination of capital on the one hand or of labor strikes on the other. We leave this question, however, for others to deal with.

So far as the alienation of the poor from the church is concerned, we are disposed to think it is the result of pride rather than the force of conviction. The poor often plead the lack of suitable dress to appear in what they are pleased to call "a fashionable congregation." Holding aloof from the church for this reason can not be justified—for the excuse exists often more in imagination than reality, but those whose feelings are involved must be considered and meet with sympathy. Earnest Christians among this class who fully recognize their duty, do not let this keep them from the Lord's house. Others who do not so sensibly feel the duty should be considered, at least to such an extent by those who are able, as to induce them to refrain from putting gold and costly apparel when they attend public worship. This, with a cordial welcome, would cure the evil in many places.

The church should remember that our Lord said: "Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will, ye may do them good." Except in cases of absolute need, kind words of an encouraging and uplifting nature, coupled with courteous treatment, are worth more than gold and silver. More might be said, but let this suffice.

THE ESSENCE OF POPERY.

A few years since a leading preacher of evangelical faith charged that some of the teachings of his brethren partook of the nature of Popery. We could not see at the time just how he was able to sustain the charge, but after reading and studying their assumptions, and seeing so much of their arroganee, we are convinced that while they repudiate the forms and ceremonies of Rome, and her general tactics, in essence, their teachings accord with the spirit of Popery. They assume for their church priority of organization, as well as scriptural soundness in doctrine. They assume that in all details, including form of government, administration of the ordinances, etc., their churches conform to the first church in Jerusalem. They assume that the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," was given exclusively to them, and that upon their church "the responsibility to evangelize the world rests entirely." Popery goes no further save in claiming actual jurisdiction, temporal and spiritual, over men.

These assumptions, proclaimed with an air of authority, and backed by detached portions of Scripture, are only such as any sect on earth, claiming to be true and apostolic, might quote with equal truth and fairness. These boastings sometimes have effect on persons not as well informed as they might be, and impress them with the idea that other denominations have no scriptural foundation at all. And they become alarmed lest the foundations be destroyed.

Dear brethren and sisters, quiet your fears. These boasters, according to their statement, have been in existence nearly nineteen hundred years, and in the United States since about 1635, and they number to-day only about one-fifth of the evangelical population of the country, and a far less proportion in the old world. As the light of truth shines more and more into the minds and hearts of the people, they will get further and further from these exclusive and bigoted notions. They have never been anything but notions, and mere notions can not stand against reason. Do not be alarmed!

THE N. C. K.'s.

Not many moons ago Dr. Palmore, of St. Louis, organized as many boys as would join into a society under promise not to swear, drink liquor, or use tobacco. Everybody thought the society a good thing. Dr. Palmore thought so, too. He now proposes, through the N. C. K.'s, grown into a host, to increase the circulation of his paper, and to enlarge the per capita amount of the boys' pocket change. His proposition is to sell the papers to the boys for cash, and let them take the risk of getting back the outlay, with an added per cent, by peddling the papers on the streets, or from house to house. He would turn his N. C. K.'s into newsboys. This last—an afterthought, perhaps—is the wisest move the Doctor has made since his return from Russia. It is shrewd! He asks the boys to paste the proposition in their hats.

PERSONAL.

Dr. S. A. Steel was booked for a lecture at Lumberton, Miss., Oct. 31. The good citizens were looking forward with great interest and expecting a rare treat. We feel sure their expectations will be fully met.

Rev. T. B Clifford was at Laurel, Miss, last week, assisting Rev. W. L. Linfield in a meeting. He reports a revival of considerable interest, the altar crowded with penitents, and up to the twenty-sixth instant fourteen persons had been received into the church.

Dr. E. E. Hoss is held in highest esteem throughout the whole church. In no section is he more honored than in his own Conference—one of the largest in the Connection—as was shown last week, when he was elected delegate to the General Conference, receiving every vote cast except six.

A note from Rev. N. G. Augustus informs us of the death of Mrs. Wilson, wife of Rev. J. R. Wilson, of Cornersville circuit. She passed away Oct. 7. An extended notice of her life and death is promised for our columns. We extend to Brother Wilson our sympathy, and assure him of our prayer in this trying hour.

Rev. J. C. Mimms, recently of the North Mississippi Conference, but now of the Northwest Texas, was married Tuesday evening, the twenty-second, at the Trinity M. E. Church, South, Chattanooga, Tenn., to Miss Lucile Ball. The bride is a granddaughter of Rev. John Boring, who officiated, assisted by Rev. J. O. Straley, pastor of Trinity.

Bishop Duncan, who has been on the Pacific coast, constantly preaching and lecturing and holding Conferences for more than two months, wound up his work in that field on the twentieth by dedicating the Bellevue Avenue Church at Los Angeles. The Bishop has greatly endeared himself to our brethren on the coast by his tireless and self-sacrificing labors.

We had the pleasure of meeting Rev. R. A. Burroughs in our office last week. He was on his way to San Antonio, Texas, the seat of the West Texas Conference, which meets Oct. 31. We much regret the transfer of Brother Burroughs from our Conference (the North Mississippi). He is one of our best men—a good preacher and good worker—and we commend him most heartily to our brethren in Texas.

Hon. A. H. George, of Carrollton, Miss., is making a splendid race for the Secretaryship of the State of Mississippi, to fill the place so long and faithfully occupied by the late Col. J. L. Power. Some of the Mississippi dispatches that meet our eyes indicate that he is among the foremost in the race. Should he be elected, the good people of the State would never regret it. He is one of our foremost laymen, intellectually and morally.

Sunday, Oct. 27, was a red-letter day for the Methodists of Covington, La. The occasion was the re-opening of our house of worship in that community. The sermon was preached by Dr. I. W. Cooper, president of Centenary College. Brother Hoontt and his people are to be congratulated. The cost was considerable, but the whole of it was provided for. Dr. Cooper, who called at our office on his return to Centenary, says the church is a credit to Methodism.

At the last Quarterly Conference for Bauton, Shreveport district, the following was adopted, as reported in the Bossier Banner:

Whereas, Mr. F. W. Abney, of Charleston, West Virginia, has generously offered to pay the debt of $170 on the Methodist parsonage;

Resolved, That we tender Mr. Abney our heartfelt thanks for his great kindness in our time of need.

We learn from a private letter that Brother Abney is one of a noble family who have been Methodists, and founders of churches for generations back. The Good Spirit still moves them to generous deeds.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To the Preachers in Charge, Mississippi Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South—

DEAR BRETHREN: Our friend and brother, W. M. Thornton, Lake, Miss., so long the treasurer of the Joint Board of Finance of our Conference, has sent me a statement of receipts from the various pastoral charges, by districts, on account of the Conference Claimants' Fund up to Oct. 19:

1. Forest District—Harperville $15.43; Neshoba, $15; Carthage, $8.25; Lake, $55; Ellisville, $31; Rose Hill, $30; Vossburg, $75; Walnut Grove, $8.30; Shiloh, $55; Raleigh, $8; Montrose, $25; Decatur, $5; Trenton, $10; total, $330. Five charges had not remitted to the treasurer. Assessment, $900; balance, $570.

2. Meridian District—Waynesboro, $51.60; Shubuta, $20; Central, Meridian, $46; Porterville, $12; Vimville, $10; Wayne Mission, $4; total, $143.60. Fifteen charges have sent nothing. Assessment on the district, $1,100; balance due, $956.40.

3. Brookhaven District—Providence, $35; Crystal Springs, $50; Wesson, $43.35; Caseyville, $10; Magnolia, $20; Gallman, $30; Summit, $25; total, $213.35. No credit from twelve charges. Assessment, $1,100; balance, $886.75.

4. Vicksburg District—Mayersville, $38 60; South Warren, $5; Hermanville, $40; total, $83.60. Eleven charges without credit. Assessment, $950; balance, $866 40.

5. Seashore District—Columbia, $55; Ocean Springs, $20; Hattiesburg, $100; Brooklyn, $45; Vancleave, $20; Poplarville, $40; Eastabutchie, $13; total, $293. No credit from thirteen charges. Assessment, $950; balance, $657.

6. Jackson District—Yazoo City, $47; Capitol Street, $45; Brandon, $46; Benton, $10; total, $148. Fifteen charges are uncredited. Assessment, $1,100; balance, $952.

7. Natchez District—Gloster, $45; Harriston, $26.50; Wesley Chapel, $10; Woodville, $20; Washington, $5; total, $101.50. No credit in favor of ten charges. Assessment, $900; balance, $798.50.

From time to time the Annual Conference has ordered, on the suggestion and request of the Joint Board of Finance that, the collection for Conference claimants be taken on its own merit and separate from the other assessments; and the continuance of the quarterly payments; and also the observance of "Veterans' Day" in March—the last Conference said, "the third Sunday in March."

Two or three years ago the Annual Conference ordered that ten per cent. of the collections received for the Conference claimants be turned by the Joint Board of Finance over to the trustees of the Conference Endowment Fund, to become part of the Trust Fund; but the delays in collecting the assessments, the failure to observe Veterans' Day, and the shortages in the collections, have not only prevented the Joint Board from paying over the ten per cent. to the trustees, but have forced the trustees to give moneys received as interest on notes and bonds to the Joint Board to help pay the pittances promised the worthy claimants, instead of adding such moneys to the principal of the Trust Fund.

Some years ago the Rev. W. W. Hopper, while evangelizing, acted as financial agent of the trustees, and collected several hundreds of dollars in cash and as much more in subscriptions in the shape of promisory notes, of which scarcely one has ever been paid, notwithstanding the efforts made by the trustees through our treasurer and sundry preachers-in-charge.

The only way apparent to me for increasing the Endowment Fund is:

1. Let the preachers and people observe Veterans' Day and take the collection in March; and be satisfied with nothing short of the assessment in full.

2. Remit the money so collected at once to the treasurer of the Joint Board of Finance; do not lay it aside; do not use it for other purposes, even though it should be made good by the time for holding the Annual Conference.

3. The Joint Board will then be able to pay the ten per cent. over to the Endowment Fund Trustees as heretofore ordered by the Annual Conference.

4. Let our laymen of means, like our Brethren Enochs, of Natchez, and Jones, of Woodville, and Holloman, of Phœnix, be encouraged in their efforts to get others interested enough to contribute as liberally as they propose and purpose to do.

5. This will enable the trustees to add the annual interest from bonds and loans to the principal; and in the course of a few years by judicious investments we will be able to provide for the material comfort and welfare of our superannuates and the widows and orphans of the itinerants who have fallen on sleep while in front of the battle against the devil and sin.

DR. BULL'S COUGH SYRUP CURES sore throat, hoarseness and coughs. It is the specific for throat and chest affections. 25c.

Agents of the Texas and Pacific Railway Co. in Louisiana have been instructed to sell tickets to Ft. Worth, Texas, Nov. 11, 12, and 13, 1901, with final limit to leave Ft. Worth, Nov. 25, 1901, at rates of one first-class fare plus $2 for the round trip. Tickets to be executed for return on payment of fifty-cent fee to joint agent at Ft. Worth. This reduction is announced on account National Meeting Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Nov. 15 to 21, 1901.

Mississippi Conference.

Each (and every) pastor will please bring with him to the Annual Conference, for the use of the Sunday-school Board, a complete list of all the Sunday-school superintendents within the bounds of his pastoral charge, and their postoffice address for the year 1902.

The Board is dependent altogether upon the pastors for this necessary information, which will be gratefully received. JNO. D. ELLIS, Sec.

Notice.

The treasurer of the Mississippi Conference Board of Church Extension is fully prepared to receipt for all moneys sent him. The preachers who send money orders will please draw same on Vicksburg, and not on Phoenix.

The Conference Claimants.

BY REV. HOUSTON ARMSTRONG.

MR. EDITOR: According to my observation, there has been more said through our religious papers this year in regard to a better support of our Conference claimants than ever before in one year. In your last issue Dr. S. S. Keener laid his heart on paper in behalf of this cause. I have always felt a special solicitude for the beneficiaries of my Conference, and have seldom failed to bring up the collection for that purpose in full. How many of the superannuates manage to live above distress and suffering is something that I have never understood. Perhaps some of them do not.

In returning from Conference at Ruston, five years ago, Brother and Sister Manly and myself lodged in the same house in Chenoyville. As Brother Manly was left off of the effective list, and, of course, would receive nothing during the year, I asked Sister Manly how they expected to make out. She said that the future was dark, but her trust was in the Lord. "How much have you?" I asked. She replied, "You saw what was raised for us at Conference—$47." "Is that all, and have you no house?" "Yes, sir," she replied, "that is all, and we have no house." Two old people, and the preacher blind, homeless, and destitute. Jesus said, "The poor ye have with you always." I suppose we shall have superannuates and the widows and orphans of our deceased itinerants as long as Methodism lives, and I trust that as our beloved Zion becomes stronger, numerically and financially, that better provision will be made for the comfort of her superannuates.

Commencing Monday, May 27, the Queen and Crescent Route Pan-American Special, leaving New Orleans 9:10 A. M., will make direct connection at Chattanooga with train on Southern Railway, arriving at Asheville at 5:50 A. M., Washington at 9:00 P. M., and New York at 6:30 A. M.

This gives the Queen and Crescent Route two trains daily to Asheville and all the Summer resorts of East Tennessee, Virginia and the Carolinas, as well as two trains daily to Washington, New York and all Eastern cities, and is in line with their constant efforts to give the traveling public the very best service possible. The new service is proving to be of great advantage to the people in the city of New Orleans.

Good Positions.

You may, without paying to the college a cent for tuition, until course is completed and position secured, attend one of Draughon's Practical Business Colleges—Nashville, St. Louis, Atlanta, Montgomery, Little Rock, Shreveport, Ft. HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney troubles; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

A Banker Praises Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy.

Worry kills lots of people and sometimes bankers. It impedes digestion, irritates the nervous system and in many ways destroys the health. If you are worried with business or other troubles, Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy will meet and baffle all ill effects. It cures indigestion and dyspepsia, tones up the stomach and thus insures calm, refreshing sleep and a good healthy and invigorating appetite.

What a Banker Says.

Mr. Chas. E. Currier, of the Atlanta National Bank, says: "I often use Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy for acute indigestion, and have always found that it gives immediate relief. I consider it a medicine of very high merit."

Price 50 cents per large bottle. For sale by druggists. Six bottles for $2.50 or sent by express on receipt of price by Tyner's Dyspepsia Remedy Co., 107½ S. Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga.

Telling "Nice" Things.

I know a girl—in fact, she's a very dear friend of mine—a young, timid, struggling artist, who is trying to support herself by her brush. This is not a small thing to accomplish, as perhaps many of you know by experience; so my little friend has begun housekeeping in a modest way. She lives in two rooms at the top of a very tall house, and she does her own cooking on a small kerosene stove; but she's a brave girl, and paints away for dear life.

I went to call upon her the other day, and took with me a friend of mine who is also an artist, but one who is far along that hill of success which Nan is now so patiently climbing. I had hoped much for Nan from this call, so introduced them with a beating heart.

She shook hands cordially enough with Nan, who was trembling with nervousness, and seemed graciously interested in her work, for she turned over sketches, looked at paintings, and then, with the picture of an old woman's head in her hand, sat down and talked art all the rest of the afternoon to her heart's content. I did wish it had been to Nan's "heart content," but one glance at the child's face told me it was not, for it was art that was away over her head.

Meanwhile there was no word of praise from her lips, neither any criticism, even of the kindest, and her comments were of the mildly polite style that is exasperatingly like the faint praise that condemns. Do you wonder that I felt like shaking her when I looked at the repressed hope and longing on the face of the poor little striving Nan? I was almost ready to cry with disappointment when we got into the street again.

"Why didn't you say something nice to that child, you miserable woman?" I burst out at last. She looked at me in unmitigated astonishment.

"Say something 'nice' to her?" she echoed, her face one whole exclamation point of surprise. "Why, it never entered my head to do so. Do you suppose she expected me to say anything?"

"But," I artfully inquired, with an eye to the future, "don't you think she has talent?"

"Most certainly I do. The head of that old woman is a gem in itself, and, what is more, I know a man who will buy it at her own price. I wonder who her model was?"

"I don't know," I said, abstractedly, for I was planning a call upon Nan the very next day; "but I will ask her." And I wish you could have seen Nan's face when I carefully repeated the "nice" thing I had saved for her. It was the impersonation of joy itself.

"And to think what a perfect goose I was yesterday," she said, with a happy laugh. "I actually cried myself to sleep after you had gone, and forgot about my supper. But there, I do believe I'll never be discouraged again," and she shook the frying-pan so joyously that the chop she was frying over the kerosene stove danced a merry jig as though out of pure sympathy with her.

Oh, it's a wonderful tonic, is this "telling nice things to people!" I have seen it work the most surprising results at the most surprising times. I have seen jaded men lift their tired heads and square their shoulders after a hard day's work at desk or counter or bench, and the bright light of hope leap into their eyes again, from the magical influence of a timely, sincere word of praise, or that "nice" thing one has heard, or thought, about them, and remembered to tell them. I have seen wives and mothers whose faces were faded and worn with the weary round of planning, baking, stewing and boiling, and the drudgery of counting the pennies, look up into the faces of their husbands at some unaccustomed word of praise or tenderness, with the light of youth in their eyes and a tremulous feeling in their hearts that glorified every duty to them. I have seen servants take their brooms and sweep more carefully in the corners, dust the picture rails and the pictures, take up the rugs and give them an honest shaking, and then brush away the cobwebs that they had noticed hanging for a week at least, but had not thought it necessary to remove until that happy word had made it a pleasure to do so.

And I myself—why, I feel to this day the glow of strength and hopeful possibilities that filled my heart at a word of affectionate appreciation from my pastor.

He is dead now, but often, when tempted to see the dark side of life, I recall the tender words of encouragement he uttered that day so long ago, and hope refuses to be thrust away.

The really selfish element in telling the nice things to people (if one can call it a selfish element) is the exquisite happiness it brings to one's self.

I can liken it to nothing that is earthly, but to everything that is heavenly.

Try it and see for yourselves.
—Christian Work.

Learn to Pray.

Emma Graves Dietrick relates a touching incident which perfectly illustrates this: "A Christian mother, when her first-born babe was laid in her arms, reverently said, 'This is God's boy and mine.' A partnership was formed between God and the mother for the training and teaching of the child. The mother resolved that her boy should never know when first he heard a prayer or heard of Jesus' love. So every night, after the little one had been made ready for bed, the mother would kneel down, and taking both tiny palms in one of hers, would gently place her other hand over baby's eyes and ask in simple, audible words that the dear Lord who loved children would keep and bless her boy and help him to be good and true. By and by, when baby was strong enough to sit up, the mother would have him sit on the edge of the bed and lean his cheek against hers; but always one hand covered his eyes, while the other held his.

"There came a time when the little frame was racked with agony. Mother and doctor and friends were seeking to save a little life. Not old enough to talk, he could not tell his pain, but after awhile rest came, and the doctor said, 'The worst is over; and if baby will go to sleep, nature will do the rest.' But the little eyes kept opening with a restless look, and the hands reaching out, and mama stooped over and said, 'What does my darling want?' Instantly two tiny palms were put in hers, and, moving his head toward mother's cheek, the eyes closed.

"A moment of silence followed, for the mother thought she could not pray with the doctor there. The blue eyes opened, and the little hands nestled closer into hers, and the eager coo of the sweet baby voice broke the silence. 'He wants something; do you know what it is?' asked the doctor. And the mother, remembering the partnership with God, knelt down and prayed the simple, brief sentences, and baby slept. With moistened eyes, the doctor said, as he laid his hand upon the mother's bowed head, 'I wish every child could grow up that way.'"

Highway Robbery.

A school teacher recently had an amusing experience with her favorite pupil, a bright little maid of eight years. The class, for the first time, had been asked to write a composition at home, and bring it for criticism the next day.

A moment after the school bell had rung little Amy, panting and red-eyed, stumbled to her desk and dropped her face on her arms, her shoulders shaking with sobs.

The teacher went to her and tried sympathetically to find out what was the trouble. Amid piteous sniffs and gasps she thought she caught the word "composition."

"Didn't you get your work done, Amy?" she asked, kindly.

"Oh, yes!" sobbed Amy, in a burst of indignant grief. "I got it done, Miss Brown, but B-b-billy Smith's horrid g-g-g-goat chased me and ate it up!"

Still funnier was the robbery committed by a gray ape of terrifying size and aspect, which once escaped from the zoo at Washington, as the story is related by Mr. Camillus Phillips.

The monkey was missing for several hours. When it was found, in a bit of woodland near the city, it had not only escaped from its human captors—it had captured a human being!

It was holding prisoner a trembling little darky, who stood with hands held up and tears running down, while the contents of his pockets lay scattered around.

The ape had him firmly clutched by the trouser leg, and was investigating his foot with interested gravity of aspect.

"He's done hel' me up," the little chap whimpered as the keeper approached. "He's stole ma hoss-shoe-nail ring, an' de sho-nuff slabjack, an de kyite string, an' de tenpenny nail, an' de chunk ob chewin'-gum, an' de candy sour-ball dat ain't half sucked yit, an' now he's tryin' to steal ma big toe. Fo' de good lan's sake, please gemmen, take him off'n me befo' he gits it!"

He was rescued, with the toe still intact, and his assailant, chattering and grimacing with fury, went ignominiously back to captivity.—Youth's Companion.

The Useful Telephone.

Two Baltimore young ladies went to an evening entertainment, and, as luck would have it, forgot to take a latch-key. On their return, they rang the bell repeatedly and beat on the door, but could arouse no one.

Almost in despair they stood on the porch, says the Baltimore Sun, wondering what they could do, when a neighbor, who had been awakened by the din, appeared at his window opposite, and asked what was the matter.

"We are locked out and can not seem to waken papa," came the reply from the ladies.

"Wait a minute," said the quick-witted man on the other side of the street. "Your father has a telephone in his room, and I will call him up." So Central was called "Give me number ——," said the neighbor.

The sleeping father awoke with a start and ran to the telephone.

"Hello, what is wanted?"

"Is that you, Mr. ——?"

"Yes, what is it?"

"Your daughters are at the front door trying to get in. Go down and let them in. Good night!"

The young ladies were soon indoors, rejoicing in the usefulness of the telephone.—Youth's Companion.

Cheer Him.

At a fire in a large city, while the upper stories were wrapped in smoke, and the lower stories were all aglow with flame, a piercing shriek told the startled firemen that there was some one still in the building in peril. A ladder was quickly reared until it touched the heated walls, and driving through the flames and smoke a brave young fireman rushed up the rounds on his errand of mercy. Stifled with smoke, he stopped and seemed about to descend. The crowd was in agony, as a life seemed lost, for every moment of hesitation seemed an age. While this shivering fear seized every beholder, a voice cried out, "Cheer him! cheer him!" and a wild "Hurrah!" burst from the spectators. As the cheer reached the fireman he started upward through the smoke, and in a few minutes was seen coming down with a child in his arms. The cheer did the work. How much we can do to help the brave ones who are struggling with temptation or almost fainting in their effort to do good to others. Don't find fault with your brother in trial, but cheer him. Give him a word that shall urge him on the way; and if you can't help him in any way, give him a cheer.—Selected.

To point out a man's failings and errors, and so labor with him as to bring him back to the right, is very different from leading the public to believe that he is wholly unworthy of confidence by impugning his motives and charging him with corruption. St. Paul said: "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted." The contrary method of dealing with the erring shows the accuser to be destitute of charity, which "thinketh no evil."

Religion that does not make men better, more loyal to Christ and his church, that does not draw Christians close to one another and cement them together in love, is not the religion of Christ. Even profession of the highest attainments in the divine life amounts to nothing if it does not produce these fruits. The Spirit of Christ which Christians possess forces them to take all good men into their loving embrace. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another."

Died in DeSoto county, Miss., at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. E. Cummings, Mrs. FRANCES HALL OWEN, Aug. 29, 1901. Sister Owen was born in Brunswick county, Va., Feb. 6, 1813. Her long life of eighty-eight years six months and twenty-three days was one of devotion to duty in childhood, womanhood, and even down to old age. She was baptized in infancy, and joined the M. E. Church in her thirteenth year, and was faithful to her vows until the end came. She was the daughter of the Rev. Thomas and Frances Dromgoole, under whose parental roof she grew and after whose godly example she followed, and here she learned the secret of a happy life, and formed those habits of devotion and prayer which prepared her for and sustained her in the many trials of the long pilgrimage she was called upon to make. November 4, 1832, she was joined in holy wedlock to Mr. Harrison Owen, also of Brunswick county, Va., who long since preceded her to the better land. She was the mother of eight children, four of whom have died, and those left behind mourn the loss of a dear, devoted mother. Sister Owen was remarkable for her deep piety. She reared her family after the scriptural way—in righteousness and true holiness. She gave two sons to the ministry of the M. E. Church, South, viz.: Rev. W. B. Owen (deceased), who was chaplain of the Seventeenth Mississippi Regiment, and noted for his faithful services to soldiers in the Army of Northern Virginia. He was deeply spiritual, and intensely interested in the salvation of his comrades. On all the long and toilsome marches made by that renowned army, Bro. Owen accompanied it, and as opportunity was afforded, preached in the camp, or visited the sick in the hospital, or went upon the field of battle to relieve the wounded and comfort the dying. It is said of him that such was his self-sacrificing devotion to duty in the midst of danger that he won the admiration of all who witnessed his faith and courage. Rev. James M. Owen, once a member (on trial) of the North Mississippi Conference exhibited useful traits as a minister of the gospel, but, on account of failing health, he had to desist, and after suffering long, he, too, passed away in triumph. One noble son she gave to her country's cause and all her children to God. Sister Owen lived a life of faith and prayer, and died as she had lived. She now rests in the cemetery at Cockrum, DeSoto county, Miss., near the church in which she had worshiped and to which she belonged forty-six years. May God bless those loved ones left behind, and bring them all together at last in heaven! R. M. DAVIS.

TRIBUTE TO MEMORY OF JOHN ANTHONY VANDERWALL, JR.

By a sad and startling accident our beloved Sunday-school pupil, Epworth Leaguer and young church member, JNO. A. VANDERWALL, JR., was taken from us on the morning of Sept. 5, 1901. We are deeply saddened by this great loss, and our hearts go out in genuine sympathy to the desolate father, mother, and sister. In the midst of our grief, however, we are gladdened with the remembrance that he was remarkably faithful to every obligation which the church, Sunday-school or League laid upon him. He was always present, unless sickness forbade. He assisted with his cornet in the music, and did it most gladly, and at considerable expense to himself of time and toil. He was always in his place at Sunday-school, ready for his work. His example in these details is invaluable to us. His home life was as beautiful as his church life. His kindness and helpfulness, his simple-hearted confidence in his mother and father, and his concern for their comfort and welfare, were most beautiful. The high white life that he lived, winning the respect of even the coarsest who came into touch with him in life's business, and commanding the admiration of all who knew him, was a rich possession to the church and community, and the memory of it remains a priceless legacy. No one had aught to report against the purity and sweetness of the quiet, helpful, manly life that he lived among us. We put these statements to record as our tribute well deserved to his memory.

Committee: H. W. Featherstun, C. H. Wood, P. W. Cuningham.

IN MEMORIAM.

At a memorial service held in the Methodist Church at Greensburg, La., Sunday, Oct 13, 1901, the following resolutions were adopted by a rising vote:

Whereas, God, in his wisdom, has seen fit to call from his labors on earth to his reward in heaven our beloved ex-superintendent, Dr. C. W. REAMES; therefore,

Resolved, By the Greensburg Sunday-school of the M. E. Church, South, that while we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, and who is too wise to err, yet we feel very keenly the great loss the church has sustained, and especially her Sunday-school interest.

Resolved, That during nearly twenty years' service as superintendent of this Sunday-school, he was ever faithful, zealous and enthusiastic in his labors, and his walk before men godly and upright.

Resolved, That in his death the church has lost one of its most zealous and faithful members, the State a valuable citizen and patriot, his wife a true and devoted husband, and his children a tender and loving father.

Resolved, That we tender his bereaved family our deepest sympathy, and that a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed, be furnished the family, and that they be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the St. Helena Echo.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our Sunday-school and from our homes little GRAFTON SMITH, beloved son of Mrs. Geo. L. Neil; therefore, we, the committee appointed by the superintendent of Montrose Methodist Sunday-school, offer the following resolutions of love and respect to our little friend who was so suddenly and sadly taken from this world to the land of which our Savior said, "For of such is the kingdom of heaven."

First, That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father in this dispensation of his providence, being assured that he doeth all things well.

Second, That in the death of our little friend and brother we, as a school, have lost one of our brightest and most faithful pupils, who, by his constant attendance and cheerful disposition, was a source of comfort and encouragement to all.

Third, That we tender our heartfelt sympathies to the family in this bereavement, and pray God that he may, in this time of sore distress, send the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit, that they may be enabled to bear this dispensation of Providence and say, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family; also to the Jasper County Review and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Committee: Preston Blackwell, Pearl Abney, Bessie Abney.

Death entered the home of W. A. Wilson and his wife, Mary McC. Wilson, and claimed for its victim the little daughter, HELEN LEE, aged ten months and seventeen days. Rev. W. A. Wilson is a missionary from Japan, and has been visiting for some time relatives and friends in Asha county, N. C. Little Helen Lee was born Nov. 14, 1900, in Kobe, Japan, and died Oct. 1, 1901, in Sutherland, N. C. To the family this loss is great, but to the darling child it is gain. Thus the little flower has been plucked from the garden here below and transplanted in the paradise of God. The dear little one can not come home again, but, thank God! father and mother can meet her in heaven. God grant that the entire family may meet in the sweet beyond. God bless the bereaved family. T. B. JOHNSON.

LONA CHRISTINE, daughter of Jno. S. and Mrs. Clara McDonald, was born near Dobson, Rankin county, Miss., Aug. 11, 1897, and died Oct. 13, 1901. She was dedicated to God in holy baptism by the writer in November, 1899. For four years and two months sweet little Carlatine was spared to brighten the home of her parents. She was bright and intelligent, and had a sweet, affectionate disposition. How sad the home will be without her! But she is safe in the arms of Him who said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." In heaven she will await the coming of dear ones left behind. P. D. HARRIN.

Registers and Records not presented at the third Quarterly Conferences will be called for. In those charges where Ques. 15 was improperly answered, or not answered at all, full written reports will be expected. Let the preachers in charge renew their diligence, and make earnest, honest and persistent efforts to collect all Conference assessments in full. No charge is assessed beyond its ability to pay; all are underassessed. Let the stewards be diligent, and see that the assessments for ministerial support are fully paid. Let all pray for the continuance of material and spiritual blessings.

ATTENTION, PREACHERS.

Now is the time for you to do some good work for the ADVOCATE.

The ADVOCATE greatly needs your help.

We need a new dress of type, that we may make the paper attractive.

Our machinery needs repairs, and there are quite a lot of other things that are necessary to bring the paper up to the proper standard.

It can not be done without your individual help.

Now, will you not make one hard effort, before Conference, to aid this worthy cause?

We believe the following will help you:

For Two Dollars we will send to all new subscribers the ADVOCATE from now until Jan. 1, 1903. Thus, by sending us the names now, they will receive the paper nearly fifteen months for two dollars. This is worth considering.

If subscribers have not the cash on hand, you can send any time between now and your first Annual Conference.

To all old subscribers who will pay their subscription in full to date, and send us two dollars additional, we will send the paper from now until Jan. 1, 1903. The label tells when subscriptions expire.

The paper will also be sent from now until January, 1903, at our regular club rate; $1.50 in clubs of ten, cash with the order.

Now, brethren, please give this your personal attention, and by sending us one or two new subscribers, we will have as well printed a paper as anybody.

Next week we will mail you some sample copies to help you in the work.

Please help us. We want to make a good report at Conference.

Fraternally yours,

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

The Commoner.

(Mr. Bryan's Paper)

The Commoner has attained within six months from date of the first issue a circulation of 100,000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the discussion of political, economic, and social problems. To the columns of The Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts; and his review of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

The Commoner's regular subscription price is $1 per year. We have arranged with Mr. Bryan whereby we can furnish his paper and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE together for one year for $2.25. The regular subscription price of the two papers when subscribed for separately is $3 net. When remittance is made by personal check, ten cents extra will be charged.

THANKSGIVING DAY PROCLAMATION.

The season is nigh when, according to the time-hallowed custom of our people, the President appoints a day as the especial day for praise and thanksgiving to God.

This Thanksgiving finds the people still bowed with sorrow for the death of a great and good President. We mourn President McKinley because we so loved and honored him, and the manner of his death should awaken in the breasts of our people a keen anxiety for the country, and at the same time a resolute purpose not to be driven by any calamity from the path of strong, orderly, popular liberty which, as a nation, we have thus far safely trod.

Yet, in spite of this great disaster, it is nevertheless true that no people on earth have such abundant cause for thanksgiving as we have. The past year in particular has been one of peace and plenty. We have prospered in things material, and have been able to work for our own uplifting in things intellectual and spiritual. Let us remember that, as much as has been given us, much will be expected from us; and that true homage comes from the heart as well as from the lips, and shows in deeds. We can best prove our thankfulness to the Almighty by the way in which, on this earth and at this time, each of us does his duty to his fellow-men.

Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, do hereby designate as a day of general thanksgiving, Thursday, the 28th of this present November, and do recommend that throughout the land the people cease from their wonted occupations, and at the several homes and places of worship reverently thank the Giver of all good for countless blessings of our national life.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Dated at the city of Washington this second day of November, in the year of our Lord 1901, and of the independence of the United States 126th.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

By the President:

JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State.

More than once we have said that, with all our boasting, we lack several points of being a fully civilized people. We have reason to reiterate the statement. Some time during the Summer past there was a regular bull fight at Omaha. The barbarities of Spain and Old Mexico were introduced into our country, which, if not sanctioned by the keepers of the peace, were at least tolerated. We, down South, lifted our hands in holy horror and cried out, Such barbarity can never be practiced in our section. But we seem not to know ourselves. We forget, when we make such brags, that we are human, and not only liable to fall under stress of temptation, but also to take on the ways of our fellow-sinners of the North and West. And we have fallen! A bull fight was "pulled off" (pardon the expression!) last week at Montgomery, Ala. In spite of the protest and earnest efforts of good citizens, including the ministers of the city, to prevent the disgrace, the promoters persisted and succeeded. And to add to the shamefulness of the whole thing, peace officers stood guard to see that the poor animal should not get hurt. Neither in Alabama nor in Nebraska would such a thing as a bull fight been allowed five years ago. We are retrograding, as anyone can see who will consider the prevalence of prize fighting, and the increase in the whisky and beer traffic. This appears to be unaccountable, in view of the fact that the church is growing, and the number of good people constantly enlarging.

Good citizens who cherish the right of suffrage, and exercise it for the benefit of our common country, and who believe that foreign-born persons ought to have at least an average amount of intelligence before being granted naturalization papers, will heartily approve the ruling of Judge Neville at Scranton, Miss., delivered a few days since. "A native of Sweden applied for naturalization papers, upon showing of residence, etc. Judge Neville said that before the important rights of an American citizen should be conferred upon a foreigner, he should satisfy the court that he was sincerely attached to our constitution and laws and system of government. He then proceeded to question the applicant, with the result that he showed a most profound ignorance of our laws and system of government. He knew that Mr. Roosevelt was President, but did not know how the State or National Legislatures were elected, nor anything about the various officers of the State and Nation, etc. Judge Neville then very emphatically denied the applicant's petition for citizenship, and said that the fault that ignorant foreigners are admitted to citizenship is less in the naturalization laws than in their administration by the courts, and that, so far as his district was concerned, he would not tolerate the admission of ignorant foreigners to rights of citizens."

THE KEY TO THE SITUATION.

BY BISHOP W. A. CANDLER.

If one's faith and love can not rise to the height of saying, "All the world for Christ," surely he might dare to say, "Half the world for Christ." Certainly the Christian men and women in the United States should not desire less than "the Western Hemisphere for Christ."

The Monroe doctrine is as wide as that. It proposes that the republican influence of the United States shall be at least hemispheric in extent. The great commission of the Master as it comes to us ought to extend the force of his kingdom as far, at least, as diplomats demand the force of this young republic shall be felt.

If the United States owes to the western world the political obligation implied in the Monroe doctrine, the church of God in the United States certainly owes a commensurate religious obligation to our neighbors south of us.

Yet more than half of the western world has not yet been evangelized. More than half of it is dominated by a corrupt form of spiritual despotism more oppressive than the heavy hand of the Spanish monarchy ever was. From Mexico to Cape Horn, with here and there a patch of aboriginal paganism, stretches Romanism, denying God's Word to the people, exacting all sorts of ecclesiastical tribute and clerical taxation from them, and giving them nothing in return—not even the good example of a priesthood exemplifying a decent morality.

To within the latter half of the last century Protestantism, with its open Bible, was rigorously excluded from these countries. Now, with the possible exception of Ecuador, the whole field is open before us.

The Monroe doctrine suggests the truth that all America—North and South—must eventually be monarchical or republican in its form of government. The field is not wide enough for both forms to live together in peace. It is far more true that in the final outcome it must be all Romish, or all be evangelical in the form of its religion. To which does the future of America belong? Will the breaking down of political barriers which have long hindered free intercourse between Latin America and Anglo-Saxon America rouse Romanism to renewed effort to possess the western world, or will it open the way for a victorious Protestantism to preach the gospel from Alaska to Terra del Fuego?

Whatever may be the outcome of the struggle now just begun, Cuba, the Pearl of the Antilles, is going to be a strategic point of vast advantage in the contest. Lying between the two continents, stretching from a point no farther than ninety miles from Florida to a cape seven hundred miles farther southward, it makes a natural bridge for the forces to pass and repass across from continent to continent. Or, to change the figure, it is a natural fortress from which the forces can advance in either direction. Moreover, with the cutting of the isthmian canal, which is inevitable, and which can not be postponed much longer, the strategic value of this island, politically, commercially, and religiously, will be immeasurably enhanced.

If Protestantism occupies the western world and holds it for Christ, Protestantism must speedily occupy and hold Cuba. And if Protestantism holds Cuba, Methodism must have much to do with the work, and the part Methodism is to bear in this far-reaching crisis has been left to Southern Methodism.

The expansion of these simple statements will make plain the tremendous weight of responsibility which rests upon us in this hour. We must do a great work in Cuba, and do it quickly, or we must incur a great and conspicuous disgrace. We must do our part there well, or disappoint the expectations of the Christian world of Protestantism.

But Havana is the key to Cuba. There dwell above 250,000 of the 1,600,000 people on the island. With the neighboring towns of Guanabacoa, Regla, Casa Blanca, and Marianao, all in sight of the city of Havana, it may be said that one-fifth of the people of Cuba live there. It is both the political capital and the commercial metropolis. It is nearest our shores—only ninety miles from Key West. It is easily reached, and, therefore, it can be speedily evangelized if we will do our work earnestly.

We must occupy Havana. We have bought one property there admirably located for both church and school purposes, and need only a few thousand dollars to put the buildings now on it in perfect shape for these uses. It occupies a little less than one-fourth of a block in the best residence part of the city. It cost only $14,000, and of this amount $1,000 was secured in the city of Havana. We ought to put $10,000 worth of improvements on it without delay. That would give us an excellent church-building, and commodious quarters for our school, which has overflowed its present rented home.

Surely the church will give me the $4,000 yet to be secured to finish paying for the property, and enough more to put it in proper condition. This is asking but little for so great a work.

Then we shall have only made a beginning in this great city of Havana, but it will be a good beginning. It will mean large and speedy success.

Later we must occupy at least four other points in the city. We can then do easily what will be required if we now meet the present demands promptly and fully, as we ought.

Our country is prosperous. God has given us great wealth to meet this great crisis. Let us not disappoint the purpose of his providence in us.—Go Forward.

REV. J. A. MOORE, ET AL.

BY REV. J. M DEAVENPORT.

In the ADVOCATE, of Oct. 10, Rev. J. A Moore, in an article headed, "A Counter Plea for Unanimity," introduces issues irrelevant to my paper, and discusses them. The considerations he so ingeniously carries to the "Fairdly," while embodied in my article, are in no conceivable sense the basis of my paper. By what law of inference he so concludes, I am at a loss to know.

My first plea for unanimity in the article he attacks is, that there is no article of faith in the Discipline of the M. E. Church, South, setting forth clearly the real state of the heathen. (See issue of Sept. 19.) This statement he does not meet, but evades by introducing excerpts from the writings of two standard authorities—Wesley and Watson.

In the quotation given Mr. Wesley says that he or no man living is warranted by the Word of God in damning the heathen. Mr. Wesley does not say that he is warranted by the Word of God in saving them without Christ. On this statement he lands Mr. Wesley on the extreme position he occupies on this subject. As to the passage from Mr. Watson, he simply says, "There is no ground to hope for the salvation of great numbers of heathen."

Whatever may have been the views of Mr. Wesley and the authorities on this subject, suffice it to say they formulated no such doctrine as that the heathen are saved without Christ, and incorporated it in the Articles of Faith of the Methodist Church. Something weightier and more conclusive than the very indefinite passages cited will have to be gleaned from the voluminous authorities on Methodism before Mr. Wesley or his contemporaries can be adjudged champions.

My second plea for unanimity in the article reviewed by Rev. J. A. Moore is: "That these intimations that crop out of the religious writings of to-day, and soon drop from the pulpit, that God has other ways of saving than through the gospel, find fertile soil, and are hurtful to the cause of foreign missions."

It was alleged against a great infidel that he would rob the human race of their only hope of salvation—the Bible—and give them nothing in its stead. So, ninety-nine out of every hundred Methodist preachers—Bro. Moore's estimate—who believe the Bible to be the only hope of their salvation, see no urgent need of sending it to the heathen, God having, they say, some other way of saving them, without intimating or specifying in any sense what his other ways are, thus leaving them virtually nothing in its place.

Bro. Moore says, "Those in the pew are too intelligent to believe that the larger part of the human race live and die without a possibility of salvation."

They are, I reaffirm, too intelligent to become overly enthusiastic on foreign missions, when "it is hurled from the pulpit that the heathen are in no real danger of being lost without the gospel, God having some other way of saving them." Those of any degree of intelligence contend, and with force of argument, "If the need is not urgent and imperative, why demand our money and our lives?"

Be it understood that the sentiment arraigned here goes far beyond "possible salvation," and positively asserts that God has other ways of saving. This unwarranted leniency towards those without Christ is somewhat akin to that form of "advanced thought" and higher criticism that strikes at the very foundation of Christianity by denying the infallibility of the Scriptures.

Bro. K. M. Harrison, in reviewing my paper, took occasion also to say—and I will remind him of it here—that Paul, when addressing the Greeks, was emphatically a preacher of God as revealed in Christ. Are we to infer by this that the Buddhist priests are preachers of God as revealed in Buddha, etc? And is this the foundation for believing that Socrates and thousands of other heathens are saved? Socrates was, I admit, a marvelous production for the age in which he lived and the light he had, and may rise up in the judgment and condemn this generation. Confucius also, centuries before Christ, gave the Chinese the negative form of the Golden Rule, and formulated a code of ethics surpassed only by those of Jesus Christ; but where is the evidence he was saved? He said nothing of an Infinite Spirit, and but little of a future life. The very fact that Christ shed his blood upon Calvary, independent of any volition on the part of man, Methodism holds saved no man. The detached Scriptures given by Bro. Harrison, and the position he assumes, is not a hair's-breadth removed from Universalism.

Again, Bro. Moore says I contend for unanimity on the plea "that missionary sermons and addresses should be effective in forming missionary conscience in the church." It is conceded, I believe, that the pulpit is the most potent factor of the age and in the world in moulding sentiment. If the sermons and addresses are not to form missionary conscience, pray tell me how it is to be done. Do we preach on missions for the same reason "the old cow crossed the road"—just to preach on missions? I confess that when I attempt to preach on the subject I have but one object in view—to lay the need of the heathen on the conscience, and the responsibility of their salvation at the door of the church. The church recognized the force of missionary sermons in making conscience when it set aside a certain Sabbath in each year in which a missionary sermon shall be preached in every congregation. In appeals for missionary money Bro. Moore, nor no one of the ninety-nine Methodist preachers who holds as he does, ever cheap the doctrine set forth in his paper. They know better; the people are too intelligent; it would paralyze the collection. Strict adherence to such doctrine as his article breathes forth never has or will fan into flame missionary enthusiasm. The mortar I "daub" with, be it ever so "untempered," is the mortar he uses when he wants his collections to materialize. If anyone is throwing "cold water" on the missionary enthusiasm with which the twentieth century opens, I submit that it is the promulgators of such doctrine as that "God has other ways of saving than through Christ." I claim to be in perfect keeping with the great Head of the church, who says, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," "He that believeth," etc., and the illustrious founder of Methodism, whose motto was, "The world is my parish."

The editor of the ADVOCATE, in a recent editorial, ably maintained that the "human voice" was an indispensable factor in saving the world. He conceded, of course, that the message the voice heralded was the "gospel of glad tidings to all people" through the one mediator between man and God—Christ Jesus.

On a plea of a lack of perspicuity, or unconscionableness of statement, Bro. Moore claims not to have seen the main issue of my paper, and in three paragraphs, void of argument or the semblance of proof, flatters himself that he has disposed of what he facetiously terms the "hundredth man." He adduces no argument, but asserts what ninety-nine out of every hundred Methodist preachers "hold" upon a point circumscribed by no article of faith, upon which the church, on the contrary, allows unrestrained liberty of thought and conscience. Grant that ninety-nine out of every hundred "hold" as he does, on what ground do they hold it? He may "hold," and nine hundred and ninety-nine others with him, that the central planet in that solar system around which all other systems revolve is heaven. But on what ground does he hold it? The fact that ninety-nine out of every hundred Methodist preachers "hold" his theory, the possibility of being saved without Christ is no proof. That number multiplied many times held out against Caleb and Joshua concerning the land of Canaan. When Pasteur discovered the germ-theory of disease the whole medical world held out against him. Caleb, Joshua, and Pasteur were right.

Evidence is said to be the greatest thing in law; so proof has some weight in theology. All theological tenets are supposed to have a scriptural basis. The wise Master-builder also says, when it comes to laying foundations, "Prove all things." He does not say, prove them by a majority of fallible witnesses, but by the Word of God; and instead of gloating over the imagined security of his position, it would have played Bro. Moore in hand to have given some proof.

Again, I reaffirm we can not afford to play with words or deal in meaningless terms. The cause of missions has nothing to lose, but everything to gain, by leaving the responsibility of the heathen's salvation where the Master placed it—at the door of the church. Giving them what we know to be "the way" is a wiser and safer policy than speculating about "some other way" of which they or we know absolutely nothing certain. I have no serious objection to the term, "possible salvation," except that it is meaningless. It hangs the salvation of the heathen on a hair, and places a bulwark in the way of missionary enterprise. The terms, "actual salvation" and "possible salvation," are like the Antinomian's "salvation" and "joy of salvation." The hair-splitting point he made was, that they have the "joy," but never the "salvation."

"Possible salvation" is tantamount to "salvation" without "joy," or any means of knowing it. They say—the ninety-nine—that the heathen are saved without Christ, but they don't know it, and the heathen doesn't know it. Such tissue-paper reasoning is about as tangible as the gossamer web of Bro. Moore's fine-spun theory on this subject. However, if his position is Methodist doctrine, as he claims, it needs to be somewhat "tempered," and then ought to assume form, by being embodied in the church's creed as an article of her faith. This would bring about a consensus of opinion, and the unanimity for which I plead.

Chester, Miss.

It is distrust of God to be troubled about what is to come, impatience against God to be troubled about what is present, and anger at God to be troubled for what is past.—Bishop Patrick.

How much trouble he avoids who does not look to see what his neighbor says, or does, or thinks, but only to what he does himself, that it may be just and pure!—Aurelius.

What Our Editors Say.

THE "BOY PREACHER."

The Central Methodist has been delivering its righteous soul on the subject of the irrepressible "boy preacher," whose migratory instincts have pointed to "pastures green" in the "Blue Grass State." The Central Methodist speaks in no uncertain language, and we second the motion in every case. The most grotesque misfit in the world, to our minds, is a boy or girl in the pulpit, into which, we have been taught, God calls only those who are mature in years, mind and heart. It is our opinion that God can find his preachers among men without going into the ranks of boyhood. The ministry is a field in which special strength of mind, body, and soul is needed. Then why should God call into this field immature boys who would not be harbored for a moment in the field of medicine, law, and other professions? There are many ways of cheapening the gospel and degrading the ministry, and the encouragement of the "boy preacher" is one of them. May we in North Carolina enjoy for many years his absence.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

COLLECTIONS IN FULL.

We should like to hear the preachers throughout our Conferences raise the battle cry, Every collection in full this year! Just how to secure this result, just how to attack the fortifications of indifference and stinginess, and raise every collection, is a question that must be settled at last by each preacher after he has made a study of his local surroundings. Every collection in full! Think of it. There would be next September such another cry of rejoicing and enthusiasm over our success that the dead almost would be aroused. The success this last year of so many charges in paying in full, or of largely increasing their collections, should be an inspiration to all to make the effort. You will be amply repaid for all it costs in the way of time and effort. Let us repeat it, All collections in full this year.—Central Methodist.

RESTRAIN THE LAWLESS.

The time is at hand in our country when more attention must be paid to the enactment and enforcement of laws that shall restrain the vicious and the immoral. Liberty often becomes a license for wrong. The shameful disregard of law at the present time and the failure to execute law brings a blush to the cheek of every right-thinking person. We are sowing to the wind, and we will reap the whirlwind. We are engaged in the process of hatching a nest of vipers who in the years to come will sting to death our most cherished institutions. It is time for plain words. It is time for deeds. It is time when good citizens of every class should band together and by voice and vote assert and demand such laws and the execution thereof as shall bring about needed reforms. —The Baltimore and Richmond Advocate.

THE MORE EXCELLENT WAY.

At the late St. Louis Conference two men, worn out in the ministry, were put on the superannuate list. They needed money to buy bread till the next session, when they would begin to receive their meagre allowance. So the preachers went down into their thin purses for the $265. The people who had received the labor of these needy veterans were far away and gave nothing. The Alabama Conference always adds 10 per cent. to the collection for the old preachers on the invalid list so as to have money for those sure to be retired each Conference. It seems sensible, just, and kind.—Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate.

WELL STATED.

The essentials are few—humility, earnestness, honesty, truthfulness, prayer and real love to God and man; but the individual peculiarities are many, and ought to be tolerated. As our children are not alike in many things, yet love one another, so God's children may be unlike in their ideas and ways of doing things, and yet be his children. Let us have charity and love one another. Our Heavenly Father accepts and loves us continuously so long as we love him and honestly try to do right, and that rule must guide us in our treatment of others.—Florida Christian Advocate.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

We used to study carefully the church registers of our charges. One revealed the fact that a pastor who had held no meeting of days had received into the church far more than many predecessors who had protracted services—and some of them made good members, too. The point is not to disparage the meeting, but to put emphasis on soul-saving "from house to house"—the plan used by our friend.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE LIQUOR CURSE.

The liquor traffic is so pernicious, so repugnant to every sense of right, so harmful to the home, the church, and so antagonistic to all that is pure and good, that the only proper attitude toward it is constant hostility. It can not be legalized without sin.—The Methodist.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

BAPTISM OF THE MULTITUDES AT JORDAN.

The "mode" by which John baptized the multitudes at Jordan was the same by which he baptized Christ. He first baptized "beyond Jordan," but as the crowd increased, he repaired to the Jordan, not only because the Scriptures enjoined that ceremonial purification should be with "running water," but for the same reason that we have camp meetings where there is plenty of water for the accommodation of man and beast. These two reasons account for John's presence at the Jordan—not for immersion.

There is not the slightest intimation in the Greek that the people were in the water. It has already been seen that Jesus was not in the water, and the expression, "in Jordan," or "in the river of Jordan," is a reference simply to place, and not mode. It could have been translated "at Jordan," or "on Jordan," without any violence to the Greek. The preposition is so translated elsewhere in the Bible.

Let the reader refer to Joshua (chapter iii), and he will find that the phrase, "in Jordan," is used several times, and means, as he is there told, at the water's "brink."

Against the probability of John's immersing the multitudes is not only urged the physical impossibility and insalubriousness, but the velocity of the stream. It is the coldest and swiftest stream in the world, flowing from regions of perpetual snow, with an average decline of fifteen feet to the mile. (That of the Mississippi river is only four inches.) Where John baptized Christ the torrent roars with dangerous rapidity, with a fall of at least ten feet to the mile.

"Rabbi Joseph Swartz, for sixteen years a resident of the Holy Land, says: 'The Jordan . . . is so rapid a stream that even the best swimmer can not bathe in it without endangering his life.' In the neighborhood of Jerico (there is where John baptized) the bathers are compelled to tie themselves together with ropes to prevent their being swept away by the rapidity of the current.'" (Ditzler.)

To keep John standing waist-deep six months in the Jordan is the climax of stupidity; yet it must be urged to maintain a tottering theory.

That John applied the water to the people, and not the people to the water, is proved by the very construction of the Greek in the instrumental dative.

Matt. iii, 15, "I indeed bapt zo you with water." The Greek is, "en hudati"—with water.

Mark i, 8, even leaves off the "en," and simply says "hudati," proving beyond "possibility of cavil that the water was handled and applied to the people."

If John had immersed the multitudes, "he would have said, 'Baptizo eis to hudor,'" whereas he only said, "en hudati," or more simply, "hudati," leaving off the prepositions which imply entrance.

The immersion theory, then, is thoroughly "incompatible with the grammatical construction of the New Testament," while John's language simply requires affusion. That he baptized by affusion is proved from the constant association of his baptism with that of the Holy Spirit. "I indeed baptize you with water; . . . He shall baptize with the Holy Ghost." The Greek construction of both baptisms is the same, showing that the mode of one is the mode of the other. If John dipped the people into water, Christ dipped them into the Holy Ghost. But in every instance in the Bible where allusion is made to the baptism of the Holy Ghost, it is by pouring or affusion.

The passage in Acts xi, 16, settles forever how both John and Christ baptized. "And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them as on us at the beginning (at Pentcost). Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost."

The pouring out of the Holy Ghost not only called to Peter's remembrance how John applied the water to the people, but how the Lord said they would be baptized with the Holy Ghost, viz.: by pouring. If Peter had used the word "dipped" in the above passage, immersionists everywhere would jump up and knock their heels together in triumph. But the shouting belongs with the Pedo-Baptists.

"Circuit Rider" would like very much to review every individual instance and isolated passage in the New Testament referring to baptism, but after submitting one more on "Objections to Immersion," and a couple on the "Standards of Methodism," he must part company with the reader until another time, assuring him, however, that "immersion as an ordinance of God's church is unknown to the Bible."

ADDENDA.

The (Baptist) Chronicle has recently acknowledged its mistakes, but destroys its good confessions by other blunders. It says: "The noted 'Circuit Rider' . . . makes an attempt to reply to our recent notice of his statement concerning classic Greek. He throws aside the quotations from Plutarch, Lucian, and Strabo, on the ground that these did not live during the period mentioned. We had in mind the classic Greek writers, and through oversight added these to those of that period."

"Circuit Rider" is much obliged for the confessions of the "oversight." However, it attempts to patch up its errors with additional quotations from Aristotle, Sophocles, Plato, Aristophanes, etc., proving that "Circuit Rider" is still wrong when he says scholars have shown that "baptizo" did not mean dip or immerse prior to Polybius (B. C. 203).

Attention again is respectfully called that The Chronicle's illustrations again fail to illustrate, for the simple reason that its quotations from the above writers (though a butchery) illustrate the use of "bapto" and not "baptizo." Can The Chronicle disprove a statement with quotations illustrating the use of another word not (then) under discussion? It attempts to do this, and lays itself open again to the serious charge of fudging.

Pedo Baptists grant that "bapto" after many years came to be used in the sense of dip, but its primary meaning is stain, or dye by affusion. The quotations already made in these columns prove this. It was also seen that "baptizo" is used in the Scriptures in connection with ceremonial cleansing, which was by sprinkling.

Now, notice what The Chronicle says: "We call on this brother to give a single passage where 'bapto' and 'baptizo' is translated by sprinkle or pour. He can get $1 000 by furnishing such a passage."

Before a jury of intelligent, unprejudiced citizens The Chronicle could be made to hand over the above amount; but if a Baptist is to be both judge and jury, "Circuit Rider" is not uneasy of having the responsibility of handling such a pile. He (a Baptist) would not be convinced "though one rose from the dead." He would claim to get out of payment on the plea that he said "sprinkle or pour," and not an equivalent, such as effusion or affusion. If he admitted an equivalent, his own kith would call for the remittance.

Hear Dr. Carson, "Hippocrates used 'bapto' to denote dyeing by dropping the dyeing liquid on the thing dyed."

A passage from Hippocrates has already been quoted in these columns upon which Dr. Carson's statement is founded, viz.: "When it drop (epitaxai) upon garments they are (baptetai) stained."

Space forbids the mentioning but a "single" passage from the Scriptures, though others can be given—enough, however, to claim part of The Chronicle's bank account.

Dan. iv, 33, 'Nebuchadnezzar . . . was wet (ebaphe) with the dew of heaven."

The Greek word translated "wet" is "bapto." Was Nebuchadnezzar immersed with the dew, or baptized by the dew descending upon him? What would a jury decide? "Wet" is a synonym of moisten, sprinkle, etc., admitted by such English lexicographers as Webster, Fallows, etc. The Chronicle thus, by its "prancing" and reckless daring, has legally and morally rendered itself in debt to "A Circuit Rider" to the amount of one thousand dollars. Will it make him the remittance in care of CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, or will it be necessary to place the matter in the hands of a lawyer?

AN URGENT PLEA.

BY DR. W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

I wish to ask and urge our people to help these young men who are coming into our itinerant ministry. Why should not the church provide in some way for the sufficient education of her young preachers? It is not enough to say, Here are the schools and free tuition and cheap board. It is almost cruel to tell the young man seeking to get ready for the field in which he is going to do the work to which God has called him, to tell him that here are the schools, open and free, and that if he is any account, he can get an education.

It is thoroughly true that many of them have little or no means at all with which to pay their way at the cheapest school. They are not prepared to teach in a public school, to take a clerkship, or any position but one whose wages barely yield a daily living. They are without the experience and training that will enable them to do better. The result is, that most of them have to shift about as best they can, getting their schooling in scraps between seasons of labor. This is many times better than nothing, but it is not education; it will not accomplish what the young preacher needs. But he will work along this way, getting bits of assistance here and there, until three or four years pass by, bringing to him some valuable experience, an easier use of language, and more self-possession before an audience. But he is a novice, and not an instructor; yet, now he takes a circuit on the rim with the hope of saving enough out of its little pay, and the subsidy from the Conference, to enable him to go to college next year, or after years. And so, working along this way, beginning at eighteen or twenty, or older, he is twenty-eight, or more, before he is prepared to take his place in the Conference. Or possibly he has allowed himself to think that he could not spare so much time at school, and has taken the unwise advice of others to "join Conference."

Four years ago a young man, just grown, was licensed to preach. He was the stay of his mother's support, worked in the field for his daily bread, and got the little he found in the country public school. The call was upon him, but he could not preach without equipment. He sought better schools, but had no means to pay his way, and was unfit for any work that would bring good wages. With humble, fixed purpose he hired himself at ten dollars a month to work on a farm. His little earnings were consumed by the physical needs of himself and mother. Next year he made his crop and went to Millsaps College. But lack of means cut his stay short, and this year he has labored on one of those circuits that can "muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn." It will be another year before he can return to college.

Another is pursuing a like course, now in the Sophomore class at Millsaps College, supplementing his inadequate capital with borrowed funds. Still another, in the itinerant ranks, is eager to go to that school, if he can arrange his finances.

Oh, that there were a fund to meet the needs of these young men; that there were sympathetic hearts and liberal hands to supply their lack of means. It ought to be so.

While I write, the Nashville Advocate brings Dr. Hoss' stirring English letter. I quote this: "I suppose that most of the readers of the Advocate are aware that when a young man is accepted for the Wesleyan ministry, he is sent to one or the other of the four theological colleges, and a grant is made to assist him in his studies. It is not necessary that he should already have a classical education in order to be admitted. If he knows neither Latin nor Greek, he is put into the hands of a tutor, who grounds him in these languages, after the manner of the Baptist Seminary at Louisville. The very ablest men of the body are usually detailed as teachers and professors. At Handsworth the theological tutor is the present president of the Conference—Dr. W. T. Davison. Whether the plan is wholly satisfactory, I did not get an opportunity to inquire. One thing is certain: It has given to the Wesleyan Church one of the best-trained bodies of ministers in England. We might well study it in America, with a view to copying some of its best features."

One feature we need to adopt is some systematic way of meeting the expense of these prospective itinerants while they are in school; then require of them a reasonable scholastic preparation before they are put to permanent pastoral work. When shall this come to pass? I would it could be now. Meantime, let us help these man who are struggling in the face of difficulties to get ready to carry the Bread of Life to the people. I can give the names of these young men to anyone who will help them to pay their way in school. Why should there not be twenty in our college from the North Mississippi Conference?

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NEWS.

BY PROF. B. E. YOUNG.

Professor Muckenfuss has appointed his assistants in science, Mr. W. A. Williams being assistant in biology, and Mr. Leonard Hart having charge of the chemical laboratory.

Messrs. Allen Thompson and Clayton Potter, members of our Senior class, have done Jackson a good turn by arranging a lyceum course of lectures, to run during the coming Winter. These young men are very progressive, and have been active during their college course in various student enterprises. The present plan contemplates reaching not only our student body, but also any citizens of Jackson who wish to subscribe to the course. The foremost people of the city have come forward, and the Lyceum will be an entire success. The first lecturer was J. William Macy, of New York, a celebrated wit and comic singer. The programme for the year includes some of the most prominent writers and speakers of this country.

The B. S. students of our Senior class were the first to reap advantages from the telescope of the James Observatory, making their first observation Thursday evening, at 6 o'clock. On several evenings Professor Moore, director of the observatory, has thrown the building open to the inspection of the public, and many friends of the college have taken advantage of the privilege. The builders left everything in fine running order, and, with Dr. Moore's painstaking attention, the equipment seems sure to give satisfaction. In point of efficiency, the observatory and machinery can not be excelled; in point of size, we understand that our telescope is the equal of any in the South. Especially notable are the modern electrical fittings. To Mr. Dan James, the donor, Millsaps College owes a great debt of gratitude.

The faculty has called in Mr. Percy Lee Clifton, one of our best-known alumni, to assist them with the unusual amount of work this session. Mr. Clifton will naturally feel at home on the old campus, though he sees few familiar faces among the students. He graduated in the class of '98, taking his law degree in '99. Mr. Clifton was known as a fine student during his undergraduate career, and was appointed to a teaching fellowship in his post-graduate year. We believe that he will be very successful in his work with us.

The Sophomore chemistry class of this year is the largest in the history of the college, numbering over fifty members. The class in Freshman English has fifty-nine members. The classes in modern languages are also unusually large.

The officers of the Collegian are hard at work upon the first edition of their magazine, and hope to bring it out before Nov. 1. Perhaps eighty per cent. of the student body have subscribed, thus giving it a good circulation, so that, with hard work on the part of the business managers, it should have a successful year, financially. Millsaps is justly proud of its handsome and vigorous journal.

Friday morning the religious exercises of the college were conducted by Rev. W. M. McIntosh, president of Grenada Female College. He made an address to the students, of which the Clarion Ledger says: "It was an address filled with good, sound advice; yet sparkling with wit and humor, and it may safely be said one of the most enjoyed addresses ever delivered at the college."

The Freshman class has elected the following officers for the year: J. R. Hughes, president; E. G. Williamson, vice-president; R. G. Pittman, secretary; M. R. Graves, treasurer.

Rev. J. R. Countiss, who has been a very prominent and devoted member of the Y. M. C. A. during his college course, has organized and taken charge of the Bible outline study in the association. A large class for this work, meeting every Sunday afternoon, has been gathered. Its meetings are usually addressed by some member of the faculty. This is only one feature of the good work that the association is doing in our school.

The library is again this year under the charge of Mrs. Blanche Howell, of Canton, who discharged the duties of librarian so efficiently last year. Mrs. Howell won the affections of both students and faculty by her attentive kindliness, and we are delighted to see her back again. With her in charge, the library is in good hands.

THE ORPHANAGE.

DEAR DOCTOR: The orphanage work at Water Valley moves on well. There are now seventy-one children in the Home. The health is excellent. Not a sick child the days I was there. All seemed contented, and all able to eat, and many of them at work doing children's work. About forty-five are kept in school, and Bro. Alexander, the teacher, keeps them in place and busy. They do not lose much time. The girls are little ladies at their work, and the boys little men at theirs. They will be heard from in the world and in the church some day. We expect the Lord of the harvest to call some of them as preachers, and all of them as workers. In the Sunday-school and Epworth League and in the Home they are being trained for this. To see these little fellows tucked each in his little bed would move any heart to help provide for them. They are not to blame for being destitute and alone in the world. In many instances their parents were doing as well as they knew how. In other cases it is providential that they are left for the church to mold into beautiful life. Let the people come to their help, and thus demonstrate our religion, the teaching of our Master, who said, "The poor ye have always with you."

Pains in the Back

Are symptoms of a weak, torpid or stagnant condition of the kidneys or liver, and are a warning it is extremely hazardous to neglect, so important is a healthy action of these organs.

They are commonly attended by loss of energy, lack of courage, and sometimes by gloomy foreboding and despondency.

"I had pains in my back, could not sleep and when I got up in the morning felt worse than the night before. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and now I can sleep and get up feeling rested and able to do my work. I attribute my cure entirely to Hood's Sarsaparilla." MRS. J. N. PERRY, care H. S. LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

LANESVILLE, LA.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I have just finished up my round of protracted meetings for the Lanesville circuit.

Our first meeting began the third Sunday in July at Brushwood. The meeting continued eight days, and resulted in the church being greatly revived, and five were added to the church. A most favorable sign or evidence that the meeting had made a good impression on the community was that immediately after the meeting closed a Sunday-school and prayer meeting were organized. The writer did all the preaching, and the good Lord helped us most wonderfully in the dispensation of his Word.

Our second meeting began the fourth Sunday in August at Pine Grove. On account of being pressed for time, we did not continue this meeting but four days. We did not have the interest manifested at this point that we had hoped for and expected to have. However, we believe that some good was accomplished. We had two accessions to the church as a result of the meeting. Rev. B. T. Crews, of Minden, was with us, and preached several strong gospel sermons.

Our third meeting began the first Sunday in September at Mount Zion, Saturday before being the time for our third Quarterly Conference. Our beloved presiding elder, Rev. A. J. Notestine, was present, and preached and presided to the delight and satisfaction of all who were present, but, on account of other engagements, he was forced to leave us Saturday evening. We continued the meeting until the following Friday, which resulted in the church being most gloriously blessed, and three were added to the church. We had no ministerial help, but the Holy Spirit was present in great power.

Our fourth meeting began the second Sunday in September at Lanesville, and continued eight days. We had a most excellent meeting at this place; the people say the best that they have had for years. Six were added to the church as a result of the meeting. We were assisted in this meeting by Rev. W. L. Hamil, of the Ringgold circuit, who labored earnestly and faithfully to win souls to Christ. During these meetings numbers of persons testified and claimed that they had been blessed.

I think that I can say truthfully that the Lanesville charge has advanced considerably this year. The good Lord has been so good to us this year. While we have had some affliction in our family, we have not had any serious sickness. The people have been good and kind to us in looking after our temporal wants while we were ministering to them in holy things. We have received into the church during the year twenty-two persons, and have dismissed by letter and otherwise twenty-six. We are moving on splendidly, financially, and feel almost sure that our reports will be in full by the time the Annual Conference meets in December.

H. J. BOLTZ.

FROM SLIDELL.

DEAR BROTHER: I will give you a few notes from Slidell, as we have just closed one of the best meetings here that this place ever had. There were quite a number of conversions, and sixteen additions to the church. Bro. Morrill did most all the preaching.

Slidell has a hard name among the preachers, but, as its pastor, I want to speak a word in its behalf. Considering the facts that we are only a few miles from New Orleans, and the great number of hunters that come up from that place most every Sunday morning, and that we have six saloons (these saloons are mostly kept up by Mississippi towns), and several other things that could be mentioned, this is as good as any town of its size could be under the above facts.

Now, as to what this place needs:

First. A preacher that is not afraid to work, and one that will keep at work; and I hope our Bishop will send a man here next year who will keep the ball rolling.

Since I came here in March there have been nearly forty accessions to the church. We have weekly prayer meetings at three appointments on this charge, and they are well attended.

Yours in Jesus, PASTOR.

FLOYD, LA.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: We have just passed through a very gracious revival at Oak Grove, Floyd charge. We ran the meeting for eight days. We began with the efficient service of our beloved presiding elder, and was joined by Brother Harrell, of Bonita, on Monday afternoon. We have nothing but commendation and the highest praise for the efficient and faithful service of this man of God. We began Saturday evening, and each succeeding service was marked by greater crowds and increased interest, and Sunday morning, the eighth day, was the high day of the meeting. The house was packed, and the service impressive and powerful. Many professed faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and we received twelve into the church; baptized six adults and four infants, and raised a collection. We have had fifteen accessions to the church up to date, and baptized seven adults and ten babies. We are indebted to Bros. A. S. J. Neill and T. B. Ranau for efficient and faithful service at Floyd and Midway, respectively.

God bless your great work.

S. S BOGAN.

ROSE PINE.

DEAR DOCTOR: We closed a good meeting at DeRidder, La., Tuesday night, the twenty-second of October. There were seven or eight conversions, two sanctifications, and seven accessions. The cause of God was greatly helped. Brother J. S. Sanders did all the preaching.

Yours in Christ,

N. F. HOFFPAUIR.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

TOCCOPOLA CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: I send you a brief report of revivals in the Toccopola circuit. We have had three good meetings; one notably good. This one we hold at Salem, beginning on the fourth Sunday in August, and closing on the following Friday night. In this meeting we had twenty one accessions to the church on profession of faith; backsliders were reclaimed, and the church greatly revived. There are, perhaps, more difficulties to contend with in this charge than can be found in most of the circuits of our Conference. About the center of the circuit is located one of the strongest Primitive Baptist Churches in the State, and near it lives one of the ablest preachers of that denomination. Two Holiness Camp Meetings are held annually in the circuit, and one in five miles of it. These meetings are held by evangelists from a distance; nearly strong men—men of the calibre of Morrison or Pickett. Sanctification according to the second-blessing theory is preached almost to the exclusion of other things. The pastor, if not in harmony with them on the holiness question, is attacked, and his influence injured, and with some destroyed. New men hold these meetings every year, making the movement more difficult to contend with. These meetings largely absorb the liberality of the people, and leave them with little sympathy for the collections ordered by the Conference. The Campbellites have also made strong efforts to get possession.

Our Conference organ is greatly needed in the homes of our people. But our people will not take it at its present price. The Pentecostal Herald goes, I reckon, regularly into fifty homes in the circuit, while our excellent paper goes into four. This difference, I think, is largely attributable to difference of cost.

I have given some of the difficulties of this charge. The fear of making my letter too long keeps me from giving others. It is important that the facts above stated should be given to the public—that is, if a preacher's reputation is important.

I see that in the editorial columns of the ADVOCATE pastors are to a large extent held responsible for a want of liberality on the part of the people in the support of missions.

J. M. HUGGIN.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

AMERICUS CHARGE.

MR. EDITOR: We report four revival meetings on Americus circuit in the month of September.

The first was held at Cross Roads, where we continued four days, embracing the first Sunday. The preaching was equally divided between Bro. L. R. Roberts, of Escatawpa, and the pastor. The church was greatly revived; many bright conversions, 6 adult baptisms, 9 infant baptisms, 27 accessions—all by profession.

The second meeting was at Pleasant Hill. Such a pentecostal wave I have seldom experienced. We indeed "sat together in heavenly places." Two accessions; about all we could expect, for nearly everybody in that community belongs to some church. A revival in the church, of the church, for the church, is what was needed, and we had it. We were here assisted by Bro. Roberts also.

The third meeting was at Ward's Chapel. Here we were greatly blessed, but we were somewhat disappointed in our expectations, for the meeting was "rained out." Two accessions on profession, one infant baptism, and one adult baptism.

The fourth meeting was at Lucedale, where we began Saturday night before the fourth Sunday, and closed the fifth Sunday at about one o'clock P. M. All the preaching was done by the pastor except four sermons preached by Bro. L. R. Roberts. The stores were closed, and business, generally, was suspended during preaching hours; people went to church, and eagerly listened to the preaching of the Word. Sinners were convicted, mourners converted, backsliders reclaimed, and Christians were made to greatly rejoice. Six were added to our church—all by profession—three of whom were baptized, two by immersion. Praise God, from whom all blessings flow. THOS J O'NEIL, P. C.

To be prayerless is to be powerless. No matter what other qualifications men may have for the work, unless they have the power of God, they will never succeed in accomplishing the service of God.—Southern Churchman.

Well Preserved

Women often astonish new acquaintances, who are introduced to a large family of strong boys and healthy girls, who call this young looking woman mother. It is popularly supposed that maternity is the foe of beauty, and the worn and faded face of many a mother seems to warrant the belief. But it is hard to believe that nature should compel a woman to sacrifice the rightful dower of her beauty in order to carry out a natural function of her being. And nature does not. The pains and sufferings incident to motherhood are, to a large extent, unnatural.

This is proved by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which prevents and cures nausea, tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite, induces refreshing sleep, and makes the baby's advent practically painless.

Mrs. Orrin Stiles, of Downing, Dunn Co., Wis., writes: "I have been intending to write to you ever since my baby was born in regard to what your 'Favorite Prescription' has done for me. I cannot praise it enough, for I have not been as well for five years as I am now. In July last I had a baby boy, weight 11 lbs., and I was only sick a short time, and since I got up have not had one sick day. I have not had any uterine trouble since I got up. I was not only surprised myself but all my friends here are surprised to see me so well."

"Favorite Prescription" has the testimony of thousands of women to its complete cure of womanly diseases. Do not accept an unknown and unproved substitute in its place.

A CLUB OFFER.

On another page will be found our offer to club with THE COMMONER, Mr. Bryan's paper. It is one of the sprightliest and best-edited papers in the country. Mr. Bryan, late candidate for the presidency, has thousands of admirers in Louisiana and Mississippi who will be glad to read his paper.

We will send the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and The Commoner for one year for TWO DOLLARS AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS; cash with the order. Read the advertisement. Send orders to

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

Christians are generally agreed on the essentials of the gospel. Their contentions amount to little more than strife "about words to no profit." Whenever we witness anything of the kind we are reminded of two neighbors who, after having worked together pleasantly a whole season, divided the corn without trouble, but fell out and fought like Turks over the shucks.

When a preacher seeking a call with a better salary in view, and gives as one recommendation the fact that he "does not exchange pulpits with men of other denominations," we forthwith class him with the brother who, a few weeks since, resigned his pulpit because he felt called to exterminate the Campbellites, and did not intend to stop until he had accomplished the work.

St. Luke says, "There was a certain disciple at Damascus named Ananias." This Ananias, called a disciple only, baptized and received Saul of Tarsus into the church. The same writer says, "There was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha." We have as much right to infer that Tabitha (or Dorcas) was an ordained bishop at Joppa as to infer that Ananias was an ordained bishop at Damascus. As to the relation of the two to the church, we have as much information of one as the other. Perhaps Tabitha was only a licensed and consecrated deaconess at Joppa.

The fact that "water baptism" is being discussed in this ADVOCATE by "A Circuit Rider" seems to give a few of our immersionist brethren great concern. We do not see why it should. If they occupy an impregnable position, as they assert, there is no reason at all for them to be troubled. "Circuit Rider" can not hurt them. If we occupied their stand, and felt as sure of our ground as they do, we would be quite as unconcerned as the ox was when the gnat lodged on his horn. "Circuit Rider" has the floor. No amount of prodding will drive this editor into the discussion.

REPORT OF PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The annual review of the affairs of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE shows an excellent condition of the paper. Since the last annual meeting a new publisher and editor has been installed. In view of this fact, and also remembering that the present editor and publisher has been in charge only ten months, the present successful result of the new management is a cause for congratulation to all concerned.

The paper is out of debt, and there has been a net increase in the number of subscribers, notwithstanding the loss of some on the delinquent list and some withdrawals. This, with the prospect of a good Fall and Winter business, will give us a decided gain by the first of next year.

Dr. Boswell, our editor and publisher, has given his whole time and ability to the work. He has been steadily at his post, meeting all the demands of his position, and furnishing first-class matter to the patrons of the paper. We believe that his rearrangement and the distribution of matter has enhanced the attractiveness of the paper, and that he has exhibited superior ability in the editorial and business management of its affairs. We are glad to report a growing satisfaction upon the part of our constituency.

The mechanical work is the best our present facilities can produce. Under the circumstances the publisher has done remarkably well. An enlarged subscription list will enable us to produce a better job. It is not too much to urge upon the brethren of the patronizing Conferences the necessity of pushing the claims of their official organ. We ought to double our subscription list by the time of our next annual meeting. A general and simultaneous canvass can secure this result.

We most heartily commend Dr. Boswell to the earnest co-operation of all our people, and rejoice in his present success, and pray that the future may witness a large increase in the usefulness of the ADVOCATE.

F. N. PARKER,
Secretary pro tem.

DEACONESSES IN THE CHURCH.

There is a movement in favor of establishing the order of deaconess in our church. Our Homes, the organ of the Woman's Home Mission Society, inquires: What will our church do? Somebody is expected to answer. We shall not undertake to speak for the church in an oracular way. Some among us have fully made up their minds on the subject, and, doubtless, their plans are ready. They impatiently await the coming of the General Conference. Strong efforts will be made to force the matter, which, if successful, will either necessitate another organization, or the enlargement of the powers of existing ones, with a corresponding increase in the number of connectional officers at a largely increased expense to the church. We have already as many burdens as we ought to carry.

We have a surmise—call it a guess, if you please. It is something like this: All the home mission work of the church is to be directed from a common center, Nashville — possibly under the joint management of the Woman's Home Mission Society and a General Secretary elected by the General Conference, with the order of deaconess as an attachment. The order may not go by that name, but it will be distinct in name and character, and as close an imitation of the deaconess of the M. E. Church as possible, and that order in our sister church is as close an imitation of Roman Catholic female orders, Sisters of Charity, as is possible for Protestants to make. Personally, we are willing for all such orders to remain just where they are.

And we feel free to say that the forcing process has already begun. It seems that the First Church, Memphis, for a year past has had a young woman employed to do mission work. She calls herself "a deaconess in the First Methodist Church, Memphis," and tells us that she "graduated at the Chicago Training-school." By the meeting of the General Conference, next May, she "will have completed the term of probation necessary for license and consecration in the Northern Church." Being a Southern Methodist, she prefers working as a deaconess in our church, and being consecrated by our own Bishops. Now, here is an enthusiastic lady who is on probation, looking forward to our General Conference to establish the order of deaconess, and hopes to be licensed (licensed to do what?) and consecrated (by the imposition of hands?) by the Bishops of her "own church." If this is not done, then what? Why, she is going where she can be licensed and consecrated—that is, to the "Northern Church." That this is the way the pro tem. editor of Our Homes understands this statement is clear from the paragraph appended to the letter of the "deaconess of First Church, Memphis." Hear the editor:

"This is not the only Southern Methodist woman known to this writer who feels called of God to the work of a deaconess, and who is waiting the action of the next General Conference to find out whether or not she will be allowed to spend her life for the church in which she was reared, or must seek some other communion more concerned than ours to avail itself of her labor of love. What will our church do?"

And may we ask: Is the concern of Southern Methodists for the poor of our cities to be measured and determined by their action on the question of deaconesses? And will Southern Methodist girls leave us and go elsewhere, if they are not allowed to exercise the function of licensed and consecrated deaconesses? We neither believe the one nor the other. This particular one, trained in Chicago, may go. Not many will follow her example. We think our sisters are better grounded in the faith. They are not so set on being licensed and consecrated.

That our people are not as fully alive to the importance of city mission work as they ought to be, we may admit; but that the only way to arouse them and do the necessary work is through unmarried women called deaconesses, "licensed and consecrated," is not a debatable question. Nobody will take the affirmative. And it is a great mistake to suppose that our church will not allow our women to spend their lives for the church in which they were reared. The church is perfectly willing for them to do this, and our Home Mission Society, under the direction of our godly women, is fully competent to enlarge the scope of its work, and employ as many young women as the society is able to sustain. The large city churches will come to their relief. And if a uniform style of bonnet and dress is necessary, as "the deaconess of First Church, Memphis," seems to think, a committee of women of good judgment can come to New Orleans and select a pattern from a dozen, or more, worn by the Sisters of the Roman Catholic Church in this city.

We hope our brethren and sisters will not be carried off their base by the enthusiasm of those—many or few—who are contemplating this departure in our Southland. Let us think on the subject awhile longer. More anon.

READING FOR OUR LEAGUERS.

We were much surprised in looking over one of our church papers to read in the Epworth League Department a lengthy article on "The Profitable Reading of Fiction," which not only commended the general use of novels, but which also gave the titles of one hundred novels, together with the names of authors, regarded by the writer as "the hundred novels which, for various reasons," be regarded as the most profitable that he "had met with after considerable experience as a reader of fiction." What a vast amount of chaff he must have scratched about in before obtaining these precious grains of wheat!

The writer leads us to believe that he has read all these volumes critically. He declares that "all are books of noble sincerity and high moral helpfulness." If he is a preacher or a busy layman, we wonder that he found time to read so much literature of a miscellaneous character. But, perhaps, he makes fiction-reading a specialty.

The reading of a few select works of fiction may, in some instances, prove beneficial, though such reading is by no means necessary. But the reading of a hundred novels, on all sorts of subjects—some of them confessedly of a delicate nature — is obliged to prove harmful to any young man or woman. How a preacher can maintain his spirituality, and make suitable preparation for the pulpit, after having filtered through his mind and heart the contents of one or two novels per week, we do not understand. His sermons, of necessity, are colored, not to say tainted, by such reading. And the idea of parading the titles of one hundred novels in the Epworth League Department of a church paper, and advising our young Leaguers to read them, it seems to us, is exceedingly injudicious.

Our church, through the Epworth League, has been trying hard for years to elevate the spiritual tone of our young men and women, and to develop them into useful Christians. At the same time it has sought to instruct them in lines of profitable knowledge—church history, doctrines, benevolence, etc.—and here comes a lover and devourer of light and polite literature, and tells them to read a few novels, and, to induce them, if not to work up an interest, he names one hundred books, some of which have taking titles. We can not imagine how a spiritually minded man, who desires the young people to grow in grace, and in the knowlege of our Lord Jesus Christ, can advise to a course of reading, as Epworth Leaguers, that, whatever else may be said of it, can not enlarge their spirituality.

Our Epworth Leagues are not designed as clubs for the study of fiction. Novels, good, bad, or indifferent, should have no place in an Epworth reading-room. If Leaguers read novels, let them do so on their own responsibility, not as Leaguers, as though such reading constituted a part of the religious course. If the League is to depend for existence on the reading of a mass of miscellaneous matter—one hundred novels, more or less—or if our young people are to be led and trained by omnivorous devourers of fiction, the sooner the League disbands the better.

DOOR OF HOPE.

Door of Hope is the name applied to an institution for the rescue and care of unfortunate young women. In every city and large town there is urgent need for such an institution. Hundreds of fallen girls might be saved if the good women of our churches and benevolent societies would give time and attention to such work, and provide a refuge for those who desire to return to the path of righteousness. We have been an eye-witness to the efforts put forth by godly men and women in this direction, and know that the work is not in vain. That it is delicate work, and difficult, is true, but it is not more delicate than our Savior engaged in, and surely, if he set the example, we can afford to follow. We will fail to make good our boast as missionaries if we decline to engage in or encourage such necessary home mission work.

We are glad to know that the leaders of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Orleans have resolved to undertake rescue work, and to establish a Door of Hope "in one of the slum districts" of the city. We have no doubt that they will be encouraged and assisted by all our Protestant pastors, but their success will be limited, unless they have the sympathy and support of the good women in and out of the churches, and of the men as well. The enterprise commends itself to the good-will of all the people, and we earnestly exhort our Methodist men and women to give the move their cordial support. How much good can be done, how many poor hearts may be made happy, none can tell. "The day will declare it."

And may we venture to hope that the work will not be confined to the slum districts? The so-called higher classes who occupy houses outside the slums ought to be looked after and labored with. It is much harder to reach them than others, but if a few can be reached and saved, and made co-workers, it will be far easier to reach and save those who live in the poor and more degraded sections of the city. Let us all bid God-speed to this important work.

TEMPEST IN A TEAPOT.

The Outlook, of New York, characterizes the indignation of the South over the act of President Roosevelt in dining Booker T. Washington at the White House as a "tempest in a teapot." The Central Christian Advocate chimes in with the sentiment, and adds, "The little tempest does not represent the best, the real South," which goes to show that Brother Spencer does not know what he is talking about, else he has information on the subject not in possession of this editor. Many criticisms have been intemperate, but that the President did make a mistake, "the best, the real South," believes.

CHANGING CHURCHES.

We can understand how a preacher belonging to one denomination of Christians, when invited by a minister of a sister church to occupy his pulpit, can prepare a sermon for the occasion that will give no offense; but how such a man can occupy his place for many years, and have it said that "it does not make much difference in what church (denomination) his sermons are preached," is something we can not understand. The Chicago Baptist Standard is sure, though, that, as this was said of a Methodist preacher, his Methodist brethren can explain it. The Standard must be of the opinion that Methodist preachers are slack-twisted in their convictions, and are ready at any time to leave the Methodist fold, and go somewhere else at the first good call.

The brother alluded to might, with good conscience, and without any sacrifice or change of religious views, go to the People's Church — an independent and liberal congregation of Chicago—but we venture to affirm that he would have hesitated before accepting a call from a Baptist or Presbyterian Church. Going out of a church into one that is independent and virtually creedless is quite a different thing from going into one that has gospel back-bone enough to require a man to believe something before setting him forward as a teacher.

We have known several hundred preachers in the course of life, and we never heard but one man say that he could "preach as well in one church as another." We were shocked to hear him say it, and were not surprised when, a few weeks later, he went to a church, of which a popular drummer once said, "didn't meddle much with religion or politics." A preacher must wear his clerical robes loosely indeed who can thus change, and have no struggle of mind or conscience. We beg to assure our Chicago confrere that not many Methodist preachers of that sort can be found.

A SERIOUS LOSS.

A press dispatch, of Nov. 2, from Booneville, Miss., reports half of the business portion of the town destroyed by fire. On Monday a dispatch was sent us by the pastor of our church, Rev. J. M. Bradley, informing us of the loss of our excellent house of worship. The house was partially insured. The brethren at Booneville will proceed to rebuild as soon as practicable.

PERSONAL.

The brethren in Mississippi will be sorry to learn of the transfer of Rev. F. M. Keen, who goes to one of the Arkansas Conferences. We wish him abundant success in his new field.

Bishop Galloway lectured at Jackson, La., on the morning of the fourth, on "The Expansion of the Gospel." The Bishop is an eye-witness of the great work, and delighted his hearers with a description of what he had seen.

Bishop Fitzgerald held the Tennessee Conference, one of the largest in the Connection, and got through the work without any difficulty. We confidently expect him to be on hand to hold the Louisiana Conference next month. He will receive a cordial greeting.

Pastor J. W. B., Brookside, Ala., who advertises typewriters, is one of our own preachers, and is every way worthy. If our brethren desire to invest in a typewriter, they would do well to correspond with him. Our purchase of a "Peerless" is every way satisfactory, and the price was reasonable.

We had the pleasure, on Wednesday last, of meeting Dr. Hoss, editor of the Christian Advocate. He was on his way to San Antonio, Texas, the seat of the West Texas Conference. His time in the city was very limited, and his visit all the more appreciated on that account. He is in excellent health.

We had the pleasure of meeting Rev. R. L. Webb and wife in the city on Tuesday, as they were passing through on their way to California. Brother Webb has been transferred from the Mississippi to the Pacific Conference, and stationed at Henleyville, Cal. We wish our brother and sister a pleasant journey, and may they be abundantly blessed in their new home.

Mrs. Mary H., wife of R. H. Scudder, of Pasadena, Cal., and daughter of Rev. J. W. Cunningham and wife, of St. Louis, Mo., died, after less than three hours illness, Oct. 10, aged fifty-one years. Rev. R. W. Bailey, late of the Mississippi Conference, was once pastor to the family, and found a home in Scudder Mansion. We extend our sympathies to Brother and Sister Cunningham in their bereavement.

Mr. Baker A. Wier, son of Dr. and Mrs. T. C. Wier, whose illness we mentioned a couple of weeks since, passed to his heavenly home from Fort Smith, Ark., Oct. 24, 1901. He was a noble and intelligent young man, and a devout and trusting Christian. It is a comfort to his sorrowing parents to know that he died in the full assurance of faith. A memoir, prepared by his pastor, Rev. O. E Goddard, will be published in this ADVOCATE soon. May the good Lord sustain the bereaved ones.

The North Mississippi Conference.

This body convenes in Winona, Miss., on Dec. 4, 1901. The sessions will be held in the comfortable and commodious Methodist Church, and the people of Winona will do their best in entertaining same. My people feel the great honor and profit of an Annual Conference. May I call upon the membership, clerical and lay:

(1) To pray and plan for a great spiritual Conference. It is possible for preachers and people to backslide at Conference. To avoid this, we want to magnify the preaching of the gospel. I believe it the better way for the Boards to have their anniversaries in the body of the Conference, and give the afternoon and evening hour to the preaching of the Word. I hope that the Boards will not appoint an evening hour for their anniversaries. The spirituality of the occasion will, furthermore, be advanced by the devotions of the preachers in the homes of the people. A mother asks me to send her "two spiritual preachers," who can help her boys. I hope that every preacher will pray in the homes of the people, and talk experience. I shall urge the people to prepare the way for such in their homes. Conferences "of old" were characterized by conversions and Pentecosts, and have taken their place in history according to their spiritual power. May the approaching one stand at the head of the list! The chief end can be further enhanced by a warmer, deeper fraternity among the preachers. Of course, every preacher loves every other preacher; yet we are human, have been critical, and sometimes unguarded. If one preacher has been tempted into estrangement (even comparative) from any of his brethren, let them meet at Conference, talk it over, forgive one another; then the love-feast will be a great occasion. Brethren, let us not criticise each other, nor envy, nor judge, nor think evil of our brethren.

(2) May I call upon the preachers to help us in our purpose to give the most satisfactory entertainment? (a) By writing me if their wives expect to attend, and to write me promptly if, after they have been assigned homes, they find they can not attend. (b) By writing their hosts, after assignment of homes, just when they will arrive—i. e., what train and what railroad. (c) By avoiding arrival on night trains on the L. C. R. R., as they reach here between midnight and day, and it will greatly inconvenience hosts to receive guests at such hours. Let every member, if possible, be here by Tuesday evening's service hour. (d) By preserving cards of assignment (when they are sent out), and bringing them with them. They will be "letters of introduction" to the homes.

When you pray, remember the Conference, and let us make it a memorable gathering of the hosts.

J. C. PARK, Pastor.

Winona Miss.

From Shreveport, La.

Eight of the twenty Quarterly Conferences on our fourth round have been held. If the remaining twelve make as good reports as the eight have, this district will show creditable advance along all lines, when our faithful corps of co-laborers in this difficult field shall make returns at New Iberia. The last hold was for the Coushatta circuit, the pastor making a perfect report. The amount paid for ministerial support was something over the assessment, and the Conference collections were all in full. A goodly increase in membership was reported. Rev. H. W. Bowman, who came to us from East Texas three years ago, has been transferred to the Indian Mission Conference, and stationed at Wagoner, Indian Territory. He has done first-class work while in Louisiana, and leaves the Coushatta circuit in splendid shape. The parsonage at Coushatta is one of the most complete in North Louisiana, and is surely an ideal home for a preacher. Rev. Wm. G. Evans, who is architect as well as preacher, planned it, and the people of the circuit zealously and liberally seconded Bro. Bowman in the building of it. In Rev. H. W. Bowman our Conference loses an able preacher and diligent pastor, who is sure soon to become a front-rank man in the Conference to which he has gone.

I wish to stress the warm appeals made through the ADVOCATE by Bros. Keener and Armstrong in behalf of the collection for Conference claimants. Last year there was raised for this claim by the charges of the Conference, $3,086.52 on the assessment of $4,400. The assessment is always the minimum amount needed, and hence our veterans must suffer whenever the full assessment is not raised. This collection is popular with our people, and it is to be hoped that our pastors may be able in every instance to report it as paid in full.

A Home Cure for Cancer.

Thousands of dollars have been spent and years of labor exerted, to discover the cause and perfect a cure for that terrible disease, Cancer. The cause is only interesting from a scientific standpoint, and from the fact that it might lead to discovery of a cure. The cure is a vital problem. Success has attended the efforts so far of but one concern, the Dr. D. M. Bye Co.; these eminent specialists have perfected a Combination of Oils which have wonderful effects on diseased tissue, leaving unharmed the sound. The Oils are mild and safe, and can be used at home in most cases. Don't trifle with death; write at once for free books giving particulars. Address Dr. D. M. Bye Co., Lock Box 462, Dallas, Tex.

Agents of the Texas and Pacific Railway Co. in Louisiana have been instructed to sell tickets to Ft. Worth, Texas, Nov. 11, 12, and 13, 1901, with final limit to leave Ft. Worth, Nov. 25, 1901, at rates of one first-class fare plus $2 for the round trip. Tickets to be executed for return on payment of fifty-cent fee to joint agent at Ft. Worth. This reduction is announced on account National Meeting Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Nov. 15 to 21, 1901.

Notice.

The treasurer of the Mississippi Conference Board of Church Extension is fully prepared to receipt for all moneys sent him. The preachers who send money orders will please draw same on Vicksburg, and not on Phoenix.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Many accounts for subscriptions and advertisements are due the ADVOCATE. It is important that these accounts be settled as soon as possible. We hope every brother who knows himself to be indebted to the paper will not delay a day. Some of these accounts are long past due. The money is needed. Brethren, one and all, please respond.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

Baton Rouge Juniors.

Our Juniors of the First Church are manifesting greater interest from week to week. The attendance at the Sunday afternoon prayer service is increasing, there being now an average weekly attendance of thirty-six. The children—many of them—are saving their dimes to give to missions. Since our last League Conference, in May, our Juniors have raised twenty-one dollars in their work, the greater part of which—about eighteen dollars—is for the education of our little missionary girl, Minnie Mayo, out in China. The forty dollars pledged for her support were raised in full last year. We still have a half year to secure the remainder.

Miss Grace Williams, in a recent number of the Era, suggested the plan of dividing the League into tribes (the twelve tribes), and giving each tribe some special work of kindness to do for a certain time. Then let that band exchange work with another tribe, etc., until each has had every duty of the twelve. Our Juniors are doing this, and are so enthusiastic over it. We heartily recommend Miss Williams' plan to all the Juniors of Louisiana.

The little that we do is for Jesus, and we trust that no Leaguer among us works that he may receive the praise of companions. M.

It is now definitely arranged that the General Secretaries of the various young people's societies of North America will meet in Boston, in January next, for the purpose of creating an International Lesson or Topic Committee similar to the International Sunday-school Lesson Committee. The editor of the Era is the general chairman of the committee for calling this meeting. Representatives of all the young people's societies on the continent will be invited to the meeting. It is expected to lead to a closer affiliation of the young people of the several churches.—Epworth Era.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect it.

To Prove What the Great Kidney Remedy, Swamp-Root, Will Do for YOU, Every Reader of "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

Therefore, when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for many kinds of diseases, and if permitted to continue much suffering with fatal results are sure to follow. Kidney trouble irritates the nerves, makes you dizzy, restless, sleepless and irritable. Makes you pass water often during the day and obliges you to get up many times during the night. Unhealthy kidneys cause rheumatism, gravel, catarrh of the bladder, pain or dull ache in the back, joints and muscles; makes your head ache and back ache causes indigestion, stomach and liver trouble, you get a sallow, yellow complexion, makes you feel as though you had heart trouble; you may have plenty of ambition, but no strength; get weak and waste away.

The cure for these troubles is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root the world famous kidney remedy. In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature for Swamp Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling, or if small particles float about in it your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

Swamp Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy for kidney, liver and bladder troubles.

Home Circle.

The Owl and the Prairie-Dog.

The children were tired. They had worked so hard fixing up their new playhouse out near the barn, and now that it was finished, even to the dainty lace curtains which Beth had hung in the tiny windows, they were tired, and, of course, they asked for a story, as all tired children do.

"I don't know any stories," grumbled Uncle Ben, intent upon the evening paper.

"Why, Uncle Ben," said Helen. "I didn't think you'd pre—preverbicate! I really didn't!"

Bob's big, round eyes stared solemnly at Uncle Ben, as if to enforce the accusation.

"Well, come round in half an hour, and I'll see what I can do for you," said Uncle Ben, relenting a little.

The children disappeared, and in exactly twenty nine and one-half minutes their expectant faces peeped through the half-open door.

"Come in," said Uncle Ben. "I'm all ready for you."

"Is it something you have read in the paper?" queried Helen.

"O, no; it's something which occurred when I was out West."

"O, goody; it's a true one!" cried Bob.

"Yes, it's a true story," said Uncle Ben. "When I was a young man I spent a couple of years in Kansas, and nothing which I saw there interested me more than the little prairie dogs."

"O, I've seen them in the park!" interrupted Beth. "Aren't they the cunningest little things?"

"Yes," said Uncle Ben. "It is great fun to see a whole settlement of them sitting on their hind legs just beside their doors, barking as if their very lives depended upon it. I'm sure I don't know why they are called dogs, for they neither look, act nor bark like our dog friends. They really belong to the squirrel instead of the dog family. Those which I saw were about a foot long, with tails four or five inches in length. They burrow in the ground to make their homes, and the earth which is thrown up to the surface makes little hillocks beside their doors.

"One day I was riding across the plain, when I came upon a whole settlement of prairie-dogs. Not one of them was in sight; but on account of the hillocks, I knew at a glance that it was a prairie dog settlement.

"I determined to drown out one of the little creatures and capture him. There was a small stream near by, so I rode on for a short distance across the settlement, and dismounted on the bank of the stream. I wore a large Panama hat, and I filled this with water and hastened to the nearest burrow.

"What do you suppose I found beside the door, standing there as stiff and straight as any sentinel? An owl! A solemn, blinking owl! He stared at me with great, expressionless eyes, and when I came too near he circled above my head, uttering wild, piteous cries.

"My dog Jack was with me, and together we succeeded in capturing the prairie-dog. Poor Jack was attacked several times by the owl, who seemed determined to pick him to pieces, to punish him for his share in the proceeding.

"I wished to take the prairie-dog home alive, so I put him in a sack which I carried, mounted my horse, and went on. But Mr. Owl was not yet satisfied. He followed us for a long distance, renewing his attack upon Jack, who doubtless wished he had the wings of Pegasus, that he might meet his enemy on common ground.

"The bird finally gave up the battle, and Jack and I hurried home with our prisoner. I made the little fellow a home in the backyard, but he escaped, and I never saw him again."

"The owl was a good friend, wasn't he?" said Bob.

"I thought so at first," answered Uncle Ben; "but I have since found out that the owl often steals a home in the prairie-dog's burrow, driving the little fellow away, if possible. So you see, Mr. Owl was not so unselfish after all, for he was fighting for what he considered his own home."

"That's too bad," said Helen. "I'd rather believe that they were friends."

"Many people do believe that," said Uncle Ben; "but it is really a fable; for the owl and snake are about the worst enemies a prairie dog has. Now run away, youngsters, and to-morrow, if you are good, we'll go out to the park and ask the prairie-dogs about it."

After saying good-night to Uncle Ben, the children stole out into the yard to make sure that burglars had not broken into their beautiful playhouse, and then, reassured, they went to sleep, happy in Uncle Ben's promise for the morrow.—Emeline Goodrow, in Western Christian Advocate.

Seeing Her Boy Off

Down in Texas, several years ago, a middle-aged man was convicted in court of stealing, and sent to the penitentiary for a long term. He was duly sentenced, and the sheriff fixed a day upon which he should be taken to the State prison.

The day arrived, and the official, with a string of convicts handcuffed together, was at the station waiting for the train. While the crowd sat in the depot a little old woman in black, with a face [illegible] great furrows, appeared at the door. She looked at the string of prisoners intently, [illegible] of recognition came [illegible]. She stepped up to [illegible] of unfortunates and laid her hand on the arm of a big, coarse fellow with a heavy red moustache.

The man turned and looked at the little woman. "Mother!" he exclaimed. That was all. Big tears came into his eyes. They did not stay there, but crowded one another out to chase down the rough face, red now with shame. They ran into the big moustache and off the end of it. Then he recovered himself. The little woman was not crying—people get sometimes beyond that.

"What — are — you — doing — here?" the big man sobbed.

"I came, my son," said the little woman with furrows in her face, "to see you off."

"To see me off?" The man was dazed.

"Yes, Henry, when you was such a little boy that you had never been out of the home yard alone, I went to the gate with you the first day you ever went to the store by yourself. I watched you the three blocks of the distance until your chubby feet carried you into the little country store your father kept. Then when you were six, and started for school, I went to the gate with you again, and told you how to act in the school room. You went away on a visit when you were ten, and I went to the depot with you and your uncle then, and I kissed you good-bye before the cars started.'

Now the tears are flowing from the big man's eyes.

"Yes," the little woman sighed a bit. "Then you got to be sixteen, and wanted to go to St. Louis. It was hard to part with you, but we did it—your father and I—and I went to the little depot with you and kissed you. You remember, don't you?'

The other prisoners were interested now, and the sheriff took in every word.

"Then you were married, Henry. I went to see you bound by law and God to that sweet, dear Mary, who is now——"

"Don't—don't!" almost shrieked the big man.

"Yes," the little woman went on, unheeding, "and now you are going away again, and I must kiss you. The train is coming, Henry; kiss your old mother."

The sheriff had not moved. Ordinarily he would have told the man to move on. But he waited now. The big man bowed and tried to hide his manacled hands.

"Kiss me, Henry," the old lady repeated. The head moved lower, and the big red monstache almost covered the little face with the furrows on it.

Then the gang started to the train. As the cars began to move the little woman stood on the platform. She caught a glimpse of her big son through the car window. She waved a little black-bordered handkerchief at him. "Good bye, Henry," she called out feebly, and then, through force of habit formed when she sent her little son to school, she murmured. "Be—be a good boy."

One of that gang of prisoners told afterward that the little scene in the depot was a greater punishment to each man than his respective term of imprisonment.—Brethren Evangelist.

Christian Kindness among the Poor.

F. T. Bullen, the famous English author of "The Cruise of the Cachalot," and "With Christ at Sea," tells this story of the kindness of the poor:

"A neighbor of mine, a railway signalman, was a Christian man, living on twenty-five shillings a week, with a wife and seven children to bring up. His wife was a Christian woman, although sometimes you would have thought, to hear her talk, she was a queer kind of a Christian. But she was a Christian.

"I have known—I know this personally—I have known her at the close of a long, hard day's work for her husband and children—for she used to take in a little washing to eke out his scanty salary—I have known her, although hardly able to stand on her legs when the washing that she had to do for money was finished and put away, and the husband and children were gone to bed, she would go out—yes, at 10 o'clock at night—and wash a poor neighbor's linen, that was lying ill in bed, and crawl back almost on her hands and knees at two o'clock in the morning.

"That kind of thing goes on continually amongst our poor people. If it did not, we could not go on at all ourselves; I can assure you it would be impossible."—Exchange.

Henry, fresh from Pecatonica, came to the city and accepted a position as office-boy for a firm in the Board of Trade building.

Henry succeeded in performing his office duties to the satisfaction of everybody, but he could not learn to use the telephone. An unaccountable nervousness took possession of him whenever he found himself alone with the instrument and called upon to converse with it.

This nervousness was understood by the other boys, who generally relieved him of the terror of responding when a call came. But one day he was alone in the office.

There came a ring at the telephone.

"Henry," called out the manager from an inner room, "answer that telephone call."

"I—I can't, sir," gasped Henry. "My face is dirty!"—Selected.

"How do you get such beautiful sheep?" was asked of a farmer. "I take care of the lambs," was the reply. There is a word for pastors in that reply. "If I were to repeat my ministry,' said an aged pastor, "I would give my chief attention to the young." Says Dr. Rainsford: "We must put our strength into work among the children. We can not do much with the people over twenty-five years old. The only way to do it is to build the children into a church." See to it that the first years of their careers are wisely directed; that truth is taught for truth's sake.—The Evangelist.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

Mrs. CLARA WILKINS was born in St. Landry parish, near Opelousas, in 1836. She had a very amiable disposition, which made her a favorite among her relatives; and her unselfish and sacrificing life gave her universal praise and commendation in the community where she spent a beautiful Christian life. My acquaintance with her began in 1878, while I was pastor of the Opelousas charge. In 1881 and 1882 I was preacher-in-charge of the Washington circuit, in the bounds of which she resided. I often visited the family, worshiped with them, and shared the Christian hospitality of the home, and no member of the family contributed more to make my visit a benediction than did my friend and sister, Clara Wilkins. There was a native simplicity and unaffected friendship in her manner. All the formalities of conventionalism broke down; all restraint that often embarrassed intercourse and disarmed every suspicion of insincerity practiced so commonly in society. These traits of character and characteristics of life gave fascination to her person and bewitchery to her association. Sister Clara's devotion to her mother was truly remarkable. She never tired in looking after her interest and administering to her comfort. She was much like her mother in kindness of disposition and gentleness of manner. She was self-sacrificing toward those who constituted the immediate household, which circumstance made her the central figure in the family group. Her obliging manner won for her commendation and admiration among all of her acquaintances. The younger members of the family delighted to do her service, and delectated in her approbation. She was never vigorous in health, strong in body, or robust in constitution; yet she lived to a good old age, which fact is attributable to her evenness of temper and prudent care of her person. In the latter part of her life confinement to her room was compelled by pulmonary consumption, but when the hour of dissolution arrived preparation for her departure was complete and thorough. Death had no sting, because of her ripeness for her change and readiness for her transit to the city of gold. Her niece, in a letter announcing her demise (in whose home she died), gives an account of her last hours, which we copy. "When the doctor said she was dying, she wanted to know what he said. I told her. She said, 'Lord, thy will be done;' then she talked to all of us, thanking each one for their kindness to her, and made us promise to meet her in heaven. She prayed aloud for herself, her friends, and all the suffering and sorrowful on earth." Sister Clara is gone, but, thank God! we sorrow not as those who have no hope. We will meet you, dear friend, where there is no more death, and where sorrow and signing shall flee away, and that forever. 'Till then, farewell, dear friend.

MARCUS C. MANLY.

Mrs. HANNA CATHARINE ARCHER was born in Marion county, Ala., June 5, 1844. She was married to David F. Archer in her native county, Dec. 22, 1875. A few years later they moved to Mississippi, residing for awhile in the northern part of the State, and for a few years in Lauderdale county, Miss., removing to Poplarville, Miss., in 1889, where they continued to make their home until the death of Sister Archer, which sad event occurred Oct. 12, 1901. Sister Archer was a daughter of Rev. J. M. Gann, who, for a number of years, was a prominent and most useful member of the Mississippi Conference. Under the training of this godly father and her saintly mother she early developed into a beautiful and consistent Christian character, joining the M. E. Church, South, in girlhood, of which she continued an active, consistent and useful member till her death. Her life of thirty-five years with Bro. Archer was a most agreeable and happy one. As Christians, they were mutually helpful to each other. Sister Archer's life was an exceptionally sunshiny one; always cheerful and happy, looking on the bright side, with a word of encouragement for all; uncomplaining, uncondemning, unfaultfinding. Her circle of friends was only limited by those who knew her. Old and young, all classes and all colors, were alike her friends. She was the friend of all. The young people were at home with her, and loved her, and over them she exerted a most wholesome influence. To those who were around her as she went down to "the valley of the shadow of death" she gave assurance of bright prospects beyond the river, passing away without fear. The only regret expressed was that of leaving her life companion in loneliness and sorrow. The vast and solemn concourse that attended her funeral, overflowing the large church, and the multitude, including many colored people, who, with sorrowful hearts and tear-filled eyes, gathered around the grave for the last solemn rites, with the evergreens and flowers that covered the grave, attested the community's appreciation of a life of happy disposition and unifying friendship. Sister Archer has gone, but the memory of a most sunshiny life and true Christian character abides.

H. S. RAYNER.

Never did sorrow reign more supreme when the death angel took from Mr and Mrs. W. C. Morrow their beloved and only child, JOHN WILL; born March 2, 1897; died Sept. 14, 1901. The fact that "Death loves a shining mark" was clearly demonstrated in the loss of our precious John Will. His life was of short duration, but, oh! so beautiful. He was a little Christian member of the Richland Sunday-school; responded to roll-call with a verse. His greatest pleasure was attending church and Sunday-school. He will be greatly missed by Class No. 3. All was done by loving parents, relatives and friends to drive back death; but the angels could not do without his presence. He was needed in that great beyond; too pure, innocent and beautiful for this world. He was a devoted son; so thoughtful of his papa's and mama's comfort. The love and devotion in which he was held was proven by the beautiful floral tributes. He left a circle of friends and relatives to mourn his loss; a heart-broken father and mother, to whom none but God alone can give comfort. John Will was the life and sunshine of their home; now it is so dark and lonely without him. Dear parents, remember the Savior's promise, "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you."

TELL.

HENRY GABLE was born in Abbeville district, S. C., October, 1817; joined the M. E. Church when nineteen years of age, and died Sept. 30, 1901, at his residence near Paradise Church, Burnt Mills circuit, of which he was a consistent and joyful member until he fell asleep in Jesus. He was a spiritually-minded man—one who loved God and his people. His home was ever opened to the preacher, and the weary itinerant has found rest many times under his roof. He had been failing in health for some time, but able to be up until a day or two before he died. He attended the revival at his church just one month before his death. The last day that he was present he talked of his departure, and said: "We have met—or some of us have—at old Paradise for the last time. When we meet again it will be around the paradise of God." And so it was; he met us no more. His end was peace. Thanks be unto God.

Catarrh Can Not Be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they can not reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it, you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surface. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

Many, by endeavoring to fly from temptations, have fallen precipitately into them, for it is not by flight, but by patience and humility, that we become superior to all our enemies. He who only declines the outward occasion, and strives not to eradicate the inward principle, is as far from rest that the temptation will recur sooner, and with greater violence, and he will feel the conflict still more severe. It is by gradual advances, rather than impatient efforts, that victory is obtained; rather by patient suffering that looks up to God for support, than by impatient solicitude and rigorous austerity.—Thomas a Kempis.

FOR OVER FIFTY YEARS

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

There is nothing—no, nothing—beautiful and good that dies and is forgotten. An infant, a prattling child, dying in its cradle, will live again in the better thoughts of those who loved it and play its part, though its body be burned to ashes or drowned in the deepest sea. There is not an angel added to the hosts of heaven but does its blessed work on earth in those who loved it here. Dead! Oh, if the good deeds of human creatures could be traced to their source, how beautiful would even death appear for how much charity, mercy and purified affection would be seen to have their growth in dusty graves!—Charles Dickens.

The man who thinks out what he wants to do, and then works, and works hard, will win, and no others do, or ever have, or can. God will not have it so.—Elbert Hubbard.

Seek Relief!

The great proportion of women who suffer never make a serious effort to benefit themselves. The most of them go on paying no attention to their little menstrual disorders, believing they will eventually wear off. They grow worse and worse every day. At the period of menstruation a woman is peculiarly susceptible to cold and other external influences and it is also the most favorable time for the development of hidden disease germs which may be lurking in the system. Any physician knows that disordered menstruation, falling of the womb and leucorrhœa are blighting lives in almost every home. No woman should neglect herself a moment after she sees indications of female diseases. Almost instant relief can be secured by the use of

WINE OF CARDUI

It will relieve you right in your own home. Will you accept the testimony of Mrs. Beigler and thousands of other women and really seek relief today? All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui.

100 Chicago Street, Fort Wayne, Ind., March 27, 1900.

Your Wine of Cardui has done a world of good for me. I have used five bottles of the Wine and one package of Thedford's Black-Draught. And since I have started to use it I will not be without it in the house. It helped my sister in Toledo, who did not menstruate as she ought. She was sixteen years of age and nothing else helped her. I was in a very bad state myself before I used your medicines, but I found relief in three days. And now I feel like a new woman and do all my housework and washing, which I could not do before I took Wine of Cardui. I would be very glad to write any poor woman and tell her how I suffered before I used Wine of Cardui.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

It is reported that the President will reorganize his Cabinet.

The rural free delivery service is to be extended and improved.

Half the business section of Booneville, Miss., was destroyed by fire.

Another gusher, the eighty-fourth in number, was "brought in" at Beaumont, Tex.

King Edward's physicians have limited his use of tobacco on account of the serious condition of his throat.

Gen. Botha's latest movements in South Africa have upset British calculations and bewildered English military experts.

A German naval captain says German interests in Central America can only be maintained by a fleet strong enough to say "Hands off" to Americans.

The municipal campaign closed in New York. Both sides are claiming victory. The betting odds turned in favor of Shepard, the Tammany candidate.

Intense dissatisfaction is felt in Great Britain by reason of recent British reverses in South Africa. The press is accusing British officers of laziness and cowardice.

The government of Nicaragua has terminated the treaty by which the United States was empowered to construct an interoceanic canal across the territory of Nicaragua.

Mr. Wu, the Chinese minister to the United States, stated that he had received no official notification of his recall to China. He intimated that he would return to that country.

The committee in charge of the National Confederate reunion, to be held in Dallas next year, has finally decided upon April 29 and 30 and May 1 as the dates for the reunion.

Rev. J. J. Crowley, the Catholic priest who was recently excommunicated at Chicago, has sued the Rev. Francis J. Barry, chancellor of the Catholic archdiocese, for $50,000.

The losses of the Boers in the attack made last week by Gen. Botha are reported by the British to be 300. Col. Benson, the British commander, was killed. Gen. Botha personally led the attack.

Millions of pounds sterling, which for generations have been locked in the Bank of England awaiting the rightful claimants, have fallen into the lap of a Canadian shoemaker, David Jennings of Montreal.

Miss Henrietta Tice, a Chicago socialist, is trying to raise $200,000 among the anarchists and socialists in order to have Leon Czolgosz's body buried in Chicago, and to erect a mausoleum over his grave. She will have to find the body first.

A river and harbor bill, carrying at least $20,000,000 of immediate appropriations, is confidently promised by Chairman Burton, who has charge of such matters in the House. There is prospect also of an increased budget for the erection of public buildings.

The financial outlook in France is far from encouraging. The deficit in the revenue in the nine months just ended of the present year is, in round numbers, $18,000,000 below the estimates and $27,400,000 below the receipts of the corresponding nine months of 1900.

The present plan of the administration with regard to the army in the Philippines is to maintain a force there of 30,000 men. The present strength is about 43,000, but before June the term of enlistment of 20,000 of these will expire, leaving a force that Gen. Chaffe reports to be inadequate.

From hints received at the treasury department the liquor men are preparing to make an attack upon Congress and demand a reduction of the whiskey tax from $1.10 per gallon to 70 cents. They are backing up their demand with the old contention that 70 cents a gallon will produce more revenue than a higher rate.

Epworth Organs are extra good organs

THEY cost more to make than the common kind. But our direct-from-factory selling saves the middle dealer's expense. By saving in the selling, we put more in the making. Customer gets benefit of better organ, or the lower price—or both. The more people know how good the Epworth is—and how we deal—the more our business grows. The Commoner.

(Mr. Bryan's Paper)

The Commoner has attained within six months from date of the first issue a circulation of 100,000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the discussion of political, economic, and social problems. To the columns of The Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts; and his review of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

The Commoner's regular subscription price is $1 per year. We have arranged with Mr. Bryan whereby we can furnish his paper and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE together for one year for $2.25. The regular subscription price of the two papers when subscribed for separately is $3 net. When remittance is made by personal check, ten cents extra will be charged.

ATTENTION, PREACHERS.

Now is the time for you to do some good work for the ADVOCATE.

The ADVOCATE greatly needs your help.

We need a new dress of type, that we may make the paper attractive.

Our machinery needs repairs, and there are quite a lot of other things that are necessary to bring the paper up to the proper standard.

It can not be done without your individual help.

Now, will you not make one hard effort, before Conference, to aid this worthy cause?

We believe the following will help you:

For Two Dollars we will send to all new subscribers the ADVOCATE from now until Jan. 1, 1903.

Thus, by sending us the names now, they will receive the paper nearly fifteen months for two dollars. This is worth considering.

If subscribers have not the cash on hand, you can send any time between now and your first Annual Conference.

To all old subscribers who will pay their subscription in full to date, and send us two dollars additional, we will send the paper from now until Jan. 1, 1903. The label tells when subscriptions expire.

The paper will also be sent from now until January, 1903, at our regular club rate: $1.50 in clubs of ten, cash with the order.

Now, brethren, please give this your personal attention, and by sending us one or two new subscribers, we will have as well printed a paper as anybody.

Next week we will mail you some sample copies to help you in the work.

Please help us. We want to make a good report at Conference.

Fraternally yours,
JNO. W. BOSWELL.

Glances at the World.

The event of greatest importance last week was the result of the election in New York. A mayor and all the higher officers were to be elected. The matter has been much discussed for a year, and during the six months just past there has been great interest. Good citizens have been greatly alarmed over the bad condition of things, which, instead of growing better, seem to be growing worse. There was absolutely no hope of improvement under present officers, or those of like character. The city executives—the principal ones, with the exception of the comptroller—are regarded as mere figure-heads, the real ruler being a man who spends, perhaps, half his time in England looking after his race-horses. To hold an election on strict party lines, it was conceded on all hands that the present administration could not be overthrown. The only hope was in a fusion candidate acceptable to all anti-Tammany forces, which included many thousand Democrats as well as Republicans and other parties. The fusionists centered on Hon. Seth Low, president of Columbia University; and Tammany, at the dictation of Richard Croker, nominated Mr. Edward Shepard, a man who, for years past, has been an outspoken and violent anti-Tammany man. This was thought to be a wise move, and many feared that the good character of Mr. Shepard would carry him through triumphantly. Nothing personal could be urged against Mr. Shepard. But the wily scheme of Mr. Croker to deceive the public would not work. He was foiled. Mr. Low was elected by a large majority, and the whole fusion ticket, with one or two exceptions. New York will be congratulated by the whole country in thus freeing the city from the domination of a man who unblushingly confessed before a State investigating committee that he was "in politics for the benefit of his pocket-book." All corruption in New York will not be stamped out—far from it—but for four years, at least, the city will have a clean administration.

The death of Li Hung Chang, which occurred in Pekin on the morning of the seventh, removes the most distinguished and progressive statesman of the great Chinese Empire. He was an old man, and for many years past has largely controlled the destinies of China. He was quite equal in diplomacy to any man of his time. His countrymen, however, would not always listen to his advice. Had they done so, the Boxer troubles probably would not have occurred. But when the allied powers got the better of the government, and put a quietus on the Boxers, his services were found to be indispensable. The troubles of China are not at an end, for Russia, if all reports be true, has some sort of a design on the empire. To cope with this difficulty, and others, a man of great strength and breadth of mind is needed, and the man is not in sight. It is feared that with the passing away of this man the Boxers may again give trouble, and to prevent any immediate outbreak, the troops in Pekin have been so disposed of as to keep down trouble. Li Hung Chang was among the richest men in the world, and civilized according to the ideas of the Chinese, but he was pagan in religion, if, indeed, he had any religious convictions at all. While dying his friends had about the yard all the necessary Chinese facilities for carrying his soul to heaven, such as life-size papers of horses, and chairs with coolie bearers. He was buried in the coffin that he has carried with him in all his travels for many years past. It was always a part of his baggage. He brought it with him when he visited the United States. His purpose was not to be buried on foreign soil, or in a foreign coffin.

If what we read in some of our exchanges be true, the morals of the people in some sections of our land are deplorable. Take for example what a Jackson, Miss., correspondent of the Daily Picayune has to say in regard to the illegal sale of whisky under the name of "blind-tiger." "Why does the blind-tiger flourish in many communities in the State? It is simply because the people in such communities want him to flourish, or, at least, will do nothing to prevent his prosperity. They are in favor of the sale of liquors, or, at least, they indulge in the purchase of them, and consider it no part of their business to inform on the seller. Some of them commit, according to law officers, perjury of the rankest sort, and yet for such perjury they are not indicted. There seems to be a sort of bond of interest between the blind-tiger and his patrons, and the grand juries and the district attorneys and the courts, in many places in the State, are utterly helpless to vindicate the laws. . . . The laws against the selling or giving away of liquors on election days are openly violated, it is said, by those who ought to know. In fact, liquor is said to be one of the main electioneering cards in primaries. And it is just as much against the law to use liquor at primaries as it is to use it at an election. It is astonishing to hear of the extent to which liquor is said to be used in elections. This is a sad commentary on a State which, by a vote of the people, has outlawed the legal sale of intoxicants in some sixty-five of her seventy-five counties."

THEISM—A CRITICISM.

BY REV. ELTON WILSON.

With eager delight I perused a recent volume from our Publishing House, by Dr. Tigert, bearing the above title. This is the first work by a Southern writer covering this difficult field of thought. Doubtless, the author was aware of the limited audience to whom his subject would appeal, for this fundamental field of thought can not be treated in popular style. It necessitates in its treatment keen philosophical analysis and a high degree of metaphysical acumen. The popular mind identifies metaphysics with the incomprehensible systems of exploded mythology. Every man is a born metaphysician. Dr. Whewell was right when he said, "We often hear persons declare they have no esteem for metaphysics, and intend to shun all metaphysical reasoning; and this is usually the prelude to some very bad metaphysical reasoning." Mathematics, theology, ethics, and the kindred group of sciences, belong to the domain of pure reason or metaphysics. The pulpit is no place for metaphysics; the most brilliant and popular preachers are usually wretched metaphysicians. But no man can be a great theologian who has not metaphysical analysis and insight.

Dr. Tigert has handled his subject with all the insight and acumen of a natural-born metaphysician, and the consummate skill of a trained dialectician. He is evidently a philosophical disciple of Prof. Bowne, the greatest among the American disciples of the eminent German philosopher, Lotze. He goes one step further, and proposes to demonstrate the existence of God. This was the method adopted by Locke and the contemporaneous school of philosophers.

The arguments of the book are concise, strong, interesting, and comprehensive in their scope. The author lays no claim to originality as to the subject-matter. The arrangement of material is splendid. It is to be regretted that the author diverted the theistic discussion into the channels of epistemology, and failed to present fully the evidence from the moral constitution of man and the philosophy of experimental religion, though it is clear that the ultimate problem of theism rests upon a sound theory of knowledge. Dr. Tigert has here drawn extensively upon Prof. Bowne and Prof. Ladd—the former of Boston University, the latter of Yale College. They are the only two distinctive writers upon this fundamental science among Americans.

The book is full to overflowing. With suggestive power it brings the mind in sight of the vast world of intelligence that is marked and written upon the trestle-board of the universe. To him who has the mind to see it brings him in sight of the great world-problem that some God-sent man of the future will solve for all time. The author caught a vision of the problem, because he has philosophic vision. But to him who has it not it will appear to be a senseless jargon of metaphysics. It is refreshing to lay hold upon a book like this amid the superficiality of this bread-and-butter age; the commercial age, characterized by the reign of dollars. The world of sense is enthroned in modern life. It is the infantile period of national life that heralds the coming of the literary era. From the tons of literature issued from the American press in the last decade there are not six volumes that will live five centuries.

The preacher who reads Dr. Tigert's book will not be troubled with vacuity of thought, nor an undisciplined train of ideas. The book will appeal to all thinking minds. But to those who believe that metaphysics is of the devil there can be no appeal. The mind who, like Jacob of old, wrestles with the angels of truth in the dark valley of mystery will gain the victory and attain the light in the presence of God.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

As Conference is near at hand, there are a few matters of importance and general interest which we beg to call attention, hoping that they will be duly considered and promptly attended to.

First. In reference to the publication of the Minutes. Arrangements are being made by which we can have double the number of copies heretofore published, and the work earlier done, provided the full amount assessed for this purpose is reported to the Joint Board of Finance at an early day of the session. Failure to do this on the part of only a few may cause delay in publication, and defeat the plan for a largely increased supply of copies. The amount assessed to each charge is very small, which each preacher, we feel assured, can in some way raise and promptly report.

Second. We respectfully direct the attention of pastors and superintendents to the following clause in the report of the Sunday-school Board. "To better emphasize the teachers' work and duties, it is recommended by this Board that at the close of each Conference year the newly nominated superintendent, in consultation with the pastor, select a corps of teachers whose term of service be positively limited to the succeeding Conference year, and subject to removal or suspension at any time for inefficiency or sickness. Let the teacher understand that he does not own the class, but is the appointed overseer for a single year of that class, provided he does his work well, just as the superintendent is overseer of the school. The pole star in the selection and continuation of a teacher should be the good of the school, regardless of his (or her) wishes or pleasures."

Third. Blank sheets have been mailed to every pastor for reports to be made to the Sunday-school Board as therein directed. If anyone has failed to receive this blank, let him notify me, that it may be sent. The Board last year, in reference to this important matter, had to report thus: "Out of 143 pastors, only 75 have responded. This failure of the pastors to fill out and return these blanks is the ground of a just complaint. The information is needed. The hurried and imperfect manner in which many that reach us are filled out show want of attention to the important matter of statistics." It is hoped that there will be no need of such a complaint this year.

Fourth. Let pastors and superintendents take heed to the following admonition of the Board of Missions: "We are informed that some of the preachers have put the Sunday-school collections with the general collections without giving the schools proper credit. We advise the brethren to be careful, and report the Sunday-school collections separate from all others, as they are for missions only."

Fifth. Let preachers and others attending Conference have in mind the replenishing of their libraries, the procuring of books for Christmas and for Winter reading and for Sunday-schools and Epworth Leagues. To this end be sure to examine the stock on hand at the colporter's stand, and write me in advance for what you know that you will want. This applies to the Mississippi Conference also.

Brother Gladney writes from Pickens, "Salary paid, collections in full, and I am ready for Conference."

Brother Garner has just closed a successful meeting at Knoxville, with eight accessions on profession of faith to the church. He was assisted by Brother W. J. O'Bryant, who is an excellent helper in a revival meeting.

The meeting in Winona closed with good results. A goodly number were added to the church by certificate and a few on profession.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Winona, Miss., Nov. 5, 1901.

THE EDITOR ENDORSED.

I live in a city bordering on a river, beyond which is a Northern State. The M. E. Church and the Southern Methodist Church are nearly equal in numbers in our city. The congregation to which I belong has many members who came by letter from the M. E. Church in the North. They seem to be well satisfied with the Church, South. I have never heard from one of them a desire expressed for a union of the two great bodies of Methodism in the United States. I can see no good to come from such union, and, therefore, heartily endorse your excellent editorial on organic union (Oct. 31).

Not long since I met a Northern Methodist preacher, in middle life, from a city on the Ohio river, opposite Kentucky. In the interview he made a statement, which he was surprised to hear me contradict. He said, "The committee which organized the M. E. Church, South, was self-appointed." I briefly recited facts in the General Conference of 1844; told him of the plan of separation then adopted, of the election of delegates by Southern Conferences to the Louisville Convention, which organized the Church, South; told him of suits for a division of Book Concern property values, and of the verdicts of the highest courts in favor of the Church, South. He did not call in question the truth of the surprising facts he had heard. I was surprised to find that a man of his age and his intelligence in other respects was so little informed as to the origin of the M. E. Church, South. Possibly he may be a fair representative of other preachers of this period north of the line of division defined in 1844.

AN OLD TIMER.

PALMER CAMP MEETING.

Palmer Camp Meeting commenced on Friday night before the fourth Sunday in September, and continued ten days. I feel safe in saying that we had a glorious camp meeting. We had our own Mississippi Conference preachers to assist us in the meeting. My, my; how those men of God did preach and work for the salvation of immortal souls! And God graciously blessed their labors in the conversion of thirty precious souls, and twenty united with the church. We had no hobbies or hobby men with us, but intelligent men called of God, inspired and sent to preach the unsearchable riches of the gospel of the Son of God. No clap-trap methods were brought into action to get people saved, but a pure gospel was preached. The Holy Spirit accompanying the message, carrying it home to the sinner's heart, forcing conviction, repentance following, and then pardon and regeneration and the witness of the Spirit all followed in rapid succession until thirty bright young men and women and boys and girls were converted. I am sure if the cranks that roam these woods will let our people alone, these thirty young people will be worth much to our church. I am sorry to say that we have a gang of fanatics (or spiritual anarchists will describe them better), and they roam at large among the ignorant, claiming to heal the sick by anointing with oil and the laying on of hands. And to my certain knowledge they have failed to cure a single case of sickness, but we do know that some people have died here in the immediate presence of these anarchist doctors.

Pardon me, Mr. Editor, and I will go back to the camp meeting again. We had Brothers W. W. Simmons, C. F. Emery, J. H. Foreman, J. S. Parker, W. H. Van Hook, J. J. Golden, Willie Williams, W. W. Cammack, W. L. Hightower, H. W. Vandenburg, and B. S. Rayner. All of these brethren rendered splendid service.

We wish to mention Bro. Cammack's work among the children. "Mack" is a success among the little ones. I shall not forget his description of himself in his first effort to be a man. "Mack's" selling his first cotton, buying a long-tail coat, and a fiddle, and boots, and a gun with no hammers, and his holding the gun while his brother hit the cap with a shop-hammer to make it shoot, will be remembered among the children for a long time.

Bro. Emery's sermon on "Memory" will ever be cherished by us who had the good fortune to hear it; and Bro. Rayner's sermon the last Sunday on missions was simply grand, and resulted in a collection of eighty dollars.

What we say for Cammack, Emery and Rayner we can say for the other brethren who so kindly assisted us in the meeting.

May God bless Tayard, Smith, and other members, and all the tenters that contributed to the success of the meeting!

MADISON STATION, MISS.

It was my pleasure to spend five days of last week with Bro. Moore in a meeting at Madison Station. The meeting resulted in much good. Bro. Moore is an earnest, untiring worker for our Lord. He and his people have erected quite a nice parsonage. We admire Bro. Moore's plan of having everything good and strong and roomy. The hall of the parsonage is unusually spacious. It is likely that every preacher's wife will be pleased with it, especially those who may chance to live in it. Sister Moore seems perfectly at home in it already. The shutters, locks, etc., are good and strong.

It does me good to see a parsonage built on an unstinted order. If one member of the church can build a nice residence for himself, why not all the members of a charge build a better one for the man of God? I am glad that parsonages are being built for comfort, durability, and good looks, too. Many of the parsonages heretofore have been a discredit to our church and to the communities in which they have been erected, but, thanks to our Lord, they are being replaced by more creditable ones. Let the improvement be more perfect still. It does me great good to know, too, that our parsonages are being furnished; but let the furniture be of the most durable kind as well as for good looks. And please let us have no more wooden bedsteads. Let us have our parsonages furnished with iron bedsteads; not with light, cheap things that will not stand pulling and rolling about, but let them be strong, good, and nice. Let them be the kind, too, for mosquito bars, if necessary. Such bedsteads will last until they wear out. Let us have them at once.

JOHN GAMP.

Among the new books of the season one finds of more than usual interest that wonderfully beautiful idyl of the picturesque Cumberland Mountains, "John Gamp; or, Coves and Cliffs of the Cumberlands," by Miss Elizabeth Wilkins Parnell, of Mississippi. The true spirit of the mountains, that abides so constantly at Monteagle the beautiful, breathes throughout its pages. To one familiar with that ideal Summer resort, the book is indeed a rare treat, dealing, as it does, with people and places dear to the hearts of all who spend the happy Summer months there. To the lover of pure and lofty literature the book appeals strongly, so artistically has the charming love story been told that runs like a thread of gold all through its pages.

As a delineator of the Southern mountaineer character, his habits, haunts, and dialect, this charming Mississippi writer possesses in a marked degree that wonderful power which won for Charles Egbert Craddock perpetual fame, and later for Johan Fox, Jr., laurels equally as enduring.

The book, with more than seventy engravings, makes a charming volume, and will be a valuable addition to the library of everyone. As a gift book it has few equals the present season. Price, $1.50. Order of the Publishing House, Nashville, or of Whiting and Gray, Jackson, Miss.

W. A. JORDAN.

A university, it is reported, is to be established in Oklahoma City, Okla., on condition that it be accepted and managed jointly by the M. E. and M. E. Church, South. It is further said that the two Conferences, representing the two churches in the Territory, have accepted the proposition so generously tendered them by the citizens of Oklahoma. The proposition embraces the gift of 140 acres of land with $100,000.

We know not of what we are capable till the trial comes; till it comes, perhaps, in a form which makes the strong man quail, and turns the gentle woman into a heroine.—Mrs. Johnson.

What Our Editors Say.

BAPTIST "LANDMARKS."

Our Baptist friends, some of them at least, seem to be in mortal dread of Bishops. The "old landmarkers" as they call themselves, seem to be benightmared with the awful spectre whenever they see their Missionary Secretaries. The secretary, they think, is the avant courier of episcopacy. Well, as to following old landmarks, where shall we find them, and what are they? A little bit of Baptist history may help us. W. P. Harrison, D. D., former editor of our Methodist Review, gave much attention to church history in all its branches. In his "High Churchman Disarmed," he says: "For several years prior to 1776 the Baptists of Virginia discussed the expediency of adopting an episcopal form of government. The discussion was thorough and the conclusion arrived at in 1776 by the General Association of Virginia Baptists. By a unanimous vote they declared that episcopacy had been established in the church by Christ, the Head, and that the office of Bishop was now in use in Christ's church. Having determined this question, they proceeded to establish the office and fill it by appointment. The Rev. Samuel Harris was elected the first Bishop, and all that part of Virginia lying south of the James river was declared to be his diocese. In the Autumn of the same year, the association was called together, and they proceeded to elect two more Bishops —John Waller and Elijah Craig. The diocese of these coadjutor Bishops was all the State lying north of the James river." We will give more of this history if needed. We are in confusion about "the old landmarks" in the Baptist Church. Harrison has confused us as to the "landmarks" in church government, and Whitsett as to the "landmarks" in regard to the earlier practices of the Baptists in their mode of baptism. It strikes us that after our Baptist friends have resolved to follow the "old landmarks" they will still have some trouble. The blazes on the old surveys are not yet overgrown and obliterated, and it seems also they are somewhat confusing.—Arkansas Methodist.

THE SUREST WAY.

The surest way for a Methodist minister to secure a better appointment is to make better the one he has. In an experience of ten years as presiding elder the writer could never find enough of the right kind of men to properly man the work, but there was never any lack of men who seemed to feel equal to any assigment. We do not decry an ambition to rise in the ministry. Young men should plan and prepare for enlarged fields of usefulness. But they should look for advance, not through official favoritism, but as the natural sequence of marked success. When they can not be spared where they are they will be wanted elsewhere. The young minister who is steadily becoming a better student, a better pastor, a better preacher, is certain of recognition, and unless he has some marked personal weakness or is badly mated it is impossible that he be "kept down."—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

A CHRISTIAN, BUT NOT A GENTLEMAN.

We heard it said once of a certain man: "He is a Christian, but he is not a gentleman." The antithesis shocked us, and we felt disposed to raise an interrogation, if not to enter a positive denial. How can a man be a Christian who is not a gentleman? Does not the greater necessarily include the less? So it would seem. Yet there may be something to be said on the other side. Human nature is the raw material on which our holy religion works. Often it is very raw. "That is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural." The Spirit sometimes lays hold of an instinctively coarse and selfish man, and stirs him tremendously in the region of the conscience, so that he abandons his recognized sins and leads a measurably decent and correct life. But it does not all at once deliver him from all his wrong habits of thought and conduct. This full deliverance, if we may trust St. Paul, is the fruit of much experience. Especially is it true that a thoughtful regard for other people, which is the last and highest badge of perfect gentlemanliness, comes to an imperious and self-assertive soul only at the end of a discipline which involves a thousand disappointments and a thousand sorrows. A Christian gentleman is a Christian who has reached the altitudes of character.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

THE PREACHERS' FAULT.

We are destroying the spirit of song by our choirs and organs. Our congregations are forgetting how to sing. It need not be so, it ought not to be so, and it would not be so if our preachers would direct and control our choirs and permit only such music as they in their deepest consciousness know will contribute to spiritual worship.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

OBJECTIONS TO IMMERSION.

The following are the chief objections which have been urged against immersion, even as it is now practiced, none of which will apply to affusion:

1. It is unscriptural. In the Bible "baptize" is used to convey the general idea of ceremonial cleansing by sprinkling. All such phrases, then, as "buried in water," "dripping garments," "liquid grave," etc., are the purest balderdash. There is not the slightest intimation of immersion in the Bible.

2. It is a heathen rite, born of superstition, and laid the foundation of all those errors which overspread the Christian world known as the "dark ages." All its early appendages, such as exorcism, eating milk and honey, etc., prove it.

3. It unfits for devotion by perverting the thoughts of the lookers-on, as well as the candidates themselves. As the water is entered the candidate not only shivers, but there is the greatest fear of coming in contact with snakes, frogs, turtles, etc.

4. It is often indecent. Ladies, no doubt, struggle with their modesty. All of the auxiliaries, arrangements and conveniences of modern immersionists, such as putting the clothes on, lead and rocks for sinkers, adjoining rooms, screens to guard the ladies from the gaze of the audience, and the suits of clothes made and advertised to guard against indecencies, are but confessions from immersionists themselves that the mode is immodest.

In country places, where the mode takes place in filthy ponds and muddy creeks, there are no such conveniences to guard against the spectators. As the clothes stick to the body of the candidate thinly dressed, or as the candidate fails to provide the necessary lead as sinkers, remarks unholy are frequently made by the unsympathetic rabble. Christians themselves are made to blush. The God who said, "Let all things be done decently," did he command immersion?

Dr. Broadus, himself a Baptist, in his pamphlet on "Christian Baptism," admits that "there may be personal exposure," but he attributes it to "bad arrangements, awkwardness, or accident" and he exhorts that "we must take care to avoid it." So we will. Abolish the mode, and there will neither be exposure, awkwardness, nor accident.

Baptism is an emblem of purification, but immersion leads to impurity. God requires the "sprinkling of clean water," but immersion takes place often in filthy ponds and stagnant pools. It is the candid opinion of "Circuit Rider" that where such water is used, it were better to go unbaptized.

5. Immersion is impracticable in many climates and localities, and on sick-beds it is impossible. Doctor Broadus answers, "when impracticable, it is not our duty." This is an unlooked-for admission, but coming from a great and good man, we are not surprised.

The Lord certainly knew earth's geography, and the circumstances attending every man, when he said, baptize "all nations." Yet Dr. B. said there can be circumstances and localities where it can be omitted. No, no, Doctor; the Lord said preach the gospel to and baptize everybody, even "in Northern Canada, Greenland, and various regions where it would take enough oil to support half a colony for months to make fire enough to melt ice enough to immerse one person." If baptism is to be excluded from such latitudes, the gospel also; but as the command is, baptize every creature, and as there is no scriptural authority for leaving it off, the mode can not possibly be immersion.

6. Immersion is detrimental to health. It has destroyed life. Yet baptism is an ordinance for all the world. Would God establish a mode "so utterly unphysiological as immersion"? An Associated Press dispatch recently announced a death from such exposure, and they have happened from the beginning of the innovation.

Dr. Godbey, in his book on baptism, refers to no less than five which came under his own observation. He mentions the places. Even where there have been no deaths, protracted spells of sickness have resulted both to the subject and the administrator. The Lord does not promise a miracle, or to suspend the laws of health, where immersion is practiced.

Other objections could be mentioned, but these are sufficient.

Just one question now which has never been answered. Immersionists hold that baptism is a "dipping." Very well! But who ever saw anybody dipped? The preacher led the subject into the water waist deep, and then plunged the hand and shoulders. "Who baptized the lower part from the waist down?" The candidate himself baptized his feet and legs; the preacher only half baptized the man. "But," says the objector, "baptism means to wet all over." That does not help; who wet the feet and legs? "Does not the lower part need dipping as well as the upper?" "Why such partiality?" How would it do to "transpose" the candidate—stand him on his head, and dip his feet and legs? But it is difficult to conceive "how one would go about it. As Baptists are good at inventions, let them try their hands and heads on this."

Once more: As the true meaning of "immerslon" is to sink, without the idea of taking out, by what authority do Baptists and others raise the candidate out of the water? So we have still another meaning of "baptizo," according to their practice—"emersion" as well as "immersion." "Circuit Rider" has searched the English language in vain to find some one word describing what Baptists do when they baptize (?) a candidate. The only thing to do is to coin one. It makes the longest word in English: "Imemergoushudorheadetshouldersion"—i. e., to sink into and take the head and shoulders out of the water after the subject has himself wet the lower half.

Truth itself will not profit us so long as she is but held in the hand and taken upon trust from other minds; not wooed and won and wedded by our own.—Locke.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

LOYAL ARMY PLAN.

Next Sunday morning, Oct. 24, just before the sermon, quarterly certificates of merit are to be delivered to the thirty two of the teachers and scholars of our Sunday-school who received during the quarter ending Sept. 30, thirty, or more, marks according to the Loyal Sunday-school Army plan of marking. Each member of the school is marked each Sabbath upon the three points—attendance, lesson, contribution. The pupil who contributes only a cent gets as big a mark in that column as the one who contributes ten cents. In the lesson column a well-studied (not necessarily perfect) lesson gets a full mark; a poorly-studied lesson gets a half mark. In the attendance column tardiness gets only half a mark. There is for each class a little grading book made for the purpose, in which the teacher marks himself and each scholar upon these three points every Sabbath. The books cost fifty cents per dozen. It is possible for each one to get thirty nine marks each quarter, but if only thirty are obtained, they entitle to a quarterly certificate. Four consecutive quarterly certificates entitle to an Annual Certificate of Merit. The delivery of the annual certificates is to be with some eclat. Three annual certificates entitle to a silver badge that costs forty cents; five annual certificates entitle to a gold badge.

The pastor and superintendent decided about the first of February that they wished to adopt this plan, but it was not introduced until the first Sabbath of April, for two reasons: (1) It is best to begin with a new quarter. (2) It is better to agitate the question thoroughly, and for all the teachers and officers of the school to understand enough of the plan to make them desire it before it is begun. The writer's experience in having one or two superintendents to adopt the plan in order to please the pastor when their own hearts were not thoroughly given to it, was not satisfactory. No plan will work successfully, unless the officers and teacher believe in it.

In an ideal condition of society this recognition of merit by delivering certificates and badges would not be necessary; the approval of our Heavenly Father would be enough. But, as we are (and God made us), we desire the approval of man. Even the best of men, though preferring the honor of God above all things, yet desire that their merit be recognized by their fellows.

Taking everything into consideration, this plan seems to us the best. As stated above, thirty two receive certificates for the quarter just closed. About the same number received them the preceding quarter, and the prospect is that as many as twenty will get the annual certificate. Since the use of the plan began the attendance has improved, the collection has doubled, and more of the teachers and pupils give the lesson a thorough study.

In the Centerville school each teacher speaks publicly each Sabbath the summary of the report for his class, the secretary copying these summaries, and then getting his totals ready during the singing of a song. The secretary's book that goes with the plan costs thirty-five cents. There is also a superintendent's pocket record book, and the Centerville superintendent has kept his posted so that by a glance at this book he can tell how any member of the school stands as to attendance, lesson, contribution. After six months of trial no one of our teachers or officers has any idea of dropping it.

SOME "DONT'S" IN SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

Don't put off the study of the lesson until Sunday morning; you might over-sleep yourself.

Don't go to the Sunday-school without your Bible. (Eph. vi, 17.)

Don't forget to pray for your scholars, and that, too, by name. (James v, 16.)

Don't rely solely upon the Quarterly, but use your Bible. (Matt. vii, 7.)

Don't be a laggard. God requires prompt service. (Jno. ix, 4.)

Don't fail to redeem the time; this may be the last opportunity you will ever have to speak for Christ. (II. Cor. vi, 2.)

Don't run off and leave your class without providing a substitute; you would not do so in your temporal affairs.

Don't forget that the aim of all Sunday-school teaching is to present Christ to the pupil; let Him speak through every lesson.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A REMARKABLE REVIVAL.

On the eighth of October we began an earnest battle against sin at Pelahatchie. For years strong, earnest efforts have been made to save Pelahatchie and Morton, but all efforts had failed. Pelahatchie was said to be the hardest town between Meridian and Vicksburg. Wickedness of all kinds prevailed, and our people thought it useless to make the effort. We resolved in the early part of the year to have both towns for God; so we began at once to pray, plan and work to that end. Sometimes we felt that we stood alone with no help but God; still we never felt discouraged. In the early part of the year Bro. Mellen suggested that earnest prayer be offered for the baptism of the Holy Spirit for 1,000 conversions and all collections. Several pastors entered into a covenant to fast each Friday and spend an hour in prayer to this end. These gracious, sweeping revivals is a direct answer to fasting and prayer. It could never have been achieved without it. "This kind can come forth by nothing, but by fasting and prayer" (Mark ix, 29.) This pastor has spent hour after hour many nights pleading for the salvation of his people, often calling them by name. In a few instances nearly all night was spent in earnest prayer.

Bro. Chambers came to me in June, and preached for a week with great power. I never heard better sermons. Many hearts were touched, and resolved to live better and get nearer to God. One of our best ladies was converted, and has since been an earnest worker. In our meeting she was one of our most efficient helpers, with several others who had hold upon God. These were important factors in the achievement of our great victory. Dr. Leavell preceded us a week in his church with most earnest and powerful preaching. So he has a share in the victory. A band of earnest friends in Meridian were earnestly talking to God daily for our success. But the greatest factor was the band of faithful pastors who had fasted and prayed each week during the year for the baptism of power.

We had announced that we would begin Tuesday night, the eighth of October. Our best men thought it useless, and would certainly result in failure. "It's a very busy season," "We can not pay the helper;" and two of my best friends said, "It will rob you of a part of your own salary." But in the face of this and prevalent deadness, and against the wishes of most of my people, I resolved to open the battle, for I had the assurance that victory was mine. I was just as sure of it before I began as I was when the victory was won. I notified my helper, Rev. W. D. Bass, to come Tuesday, and we would begin at 7:30. At first it appeared that I would find no place to entertain him; finally Bro. P. B. Summers, whose wife was delicate and without a servant, said, "Take him to my house; we will do the best we can for him." We had the same experience at Morton, and finally Bro. Goddes agreed to take him. The preacher was sick in bed when he received my letter. He lifted his heart to God, and said: "Lord, you know Pelahatchie, and you know me. 'Thy will be done.' If I am the man to help that pastor take Pelahatchie, relieve me in time to get ready to take the train." Relief came; he arose, packed his valise, and was on time to meet the first hour's service. Though the weather was unfavorable, the congregation was good, and we had a profitable service. On Sunday night, after preaching on the power of faith at Morton, I was wonderfully drawn out in prayer for Pelahatchie, and while in the agony of prayer I saw Pelahatchie doomed if not saved. On Wednesday morning, at 9 o'clock, the stores were closed, and nearly all the business men were at church. The battle was on, and waged from service to service, each army seeming more and more determined, till finally the enemy broke ranks. One of the business men deserted and came over to the Lord's side. For ten days the battle raged. Our attacks were the more determined. The enemy yielded; men, women and children come to the altars in great numbers, seeking and finding Christ. On Tuesday night we closed, having won a great victory and the town for Christ. Forty-seven joined our church, sixteen of them strong, brave men. Some eight or ten will join the Baptist Church. I do not think one hundred will overestimate those who were converted. Blind-tigers and gambling-dens were broken up and driven out, and almost the entire town capitulated to the Son of God. The contribution for the helper reminded me of the great voluntary contribution at New Orleans. It came so readily and willingly—$141.35 was the amount.

This has been a glorious and successful year under the greatest difficulties and disadvantages. We have added to our church about 125 persons, mostly on profession of faith, and, doubtless, have had more than 200 conversions. Our collections will all be in full and over, and Pelahatchie and Morton will be ready to support a pastor next year.

"By faith the walls of Jericho fell down after being encompassed for seven days." By faith Pelahatchie and Morton were taken for Christ after many seasons of fasting and earnest prayer.

W. D. DOMINICK.

CARTHAGE CIRCUIT.

Perhaps there is not a circuit in the Mississippi Conference any larger than the Carthage. It is forty miles long, and embraces the greater part of Leake and Neshoba counties north of Pearl river. There is great need of the right kind of preaching here. Rev. M. L. White and myself have been trying to supply that need by preaching twice each Sunday.

The protracted meetings began on the first Sunday in August at Conway, where we had a fine meeting, and many expressed themselves as having been blessed. The community was drawn closer together than it had been for some time. Rev. G. W. Shearer assisted us there, and at all other points. We then had a very good meeting at Rocky Pt., but were hindered by an almost continual rain.

Next we went to Singleton, where we had a meeting in earnest. Little children would testify for Christ, and sinners would remain at the altar after the congregation was dismissed. Our Baptist friends were surprised that we could keep them there so long, and they could not get them to kneel. The Spirit was there in great convicting and converting power. There were 8 accessions.

Then we went to Bethel, a little church which Bro. White organized last year. It is managed by young people, who are working in earnest for their Master. Bro. White certainly has a firm hold on those people; when he tells them to do anything, they do it. Here little children, mothers, and gray-headed sires all sought salvation. I never saw people more in earnest nor the power of God any more manifest. Among the 28 who joined were two Catholics in whose countenances one could see the image of Christ recently implanted.

All this time we had been among our own people, but the time has come when we must go to where, until this year, there are grown people who had never heard a Methodist preach, and looked upon him as a dangerous animal. Some through curiosity, some to obtain a bone, some as a watch-dog, and others to hear the truth, turned out to hear us preach. Never in the history of Alice was that community so much stirred. Rev. M. L. White, who did most of the preaching, never preached with more power. He preached the doctrines of Methodism, and very prominent among them was that man could keep the commandments and that the flesh could not sin without the spirit. People were surprised that he could tell them something they had never heard. They would gather one and two hours before preaching time and talk over what they had heard. How they yearned for the truth! Here men and women with grandchildren sought Christ, and some found him. What an awful sight to see women with babies in their arms and seeking pardon, with not a mother in Israel to talk to them. The meeting continued ten days. Had 16 accessions and organized a church. A movement is on foot to build a nice church there. If properly managed, that community belongs to us. They now believe in a full salvation which saves from sin.

An Ancient Foe

To health and happiness is Scrofula—as ugly as ever since time immemorial.

It causes bunches in the neck, disfigures the skin, inflames the mucous membrane, wastes the muscles, weakens the bones, reduces the power of resistance to disease and the capacity for recovery, and develops into consumption.

"A bunch appeared on the left side of my neck. It caused great pain, was lanced, and became a running sore. I went into a general decline. I was persuaded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and when I had taken six bottles my neck was healed, and I have never had any trouble of the kind since." MRS. K. T. SNYDER, Troy, Ohio.

Next we went to Remus, and had a very good meeting in a Baptist stronghold. One accession. Three young men attended twice drunk; we turned them over to the court. They are now penitent (legally) to the amount of $42.40, with a sentence of 30 days' imprisonment.

Our next meeting was rained out. We held two other meetings. At one we had 5 accessions, at the other (Jessie) 8. Bro. White intends organizing there soon, having already appointed a building committee. We have had 66 accessions this Summer and many conversions. To God be all the praise.

A FOURTH QUARTERLY CONFERENCE, WITH "MORE TO FOLLOW."

On the Summit circuit, Mississippi Conference, our fourth quarterly meeting was first on the last round. This brought it on nearly three months before Annual Conference. It was held at Norfield, a comparatively new society, where a church was built under the pastorate of Brother H. P. Lewis, whose name hereabout is a blessed household word. Church finances always turn out well at Norfield. Our lady superintendent of the Sunday-school there is also a capital steward, without the honor attaching to that office. But she seeks for the glory and honor of immortality. She is the only living child of our late lamented Rev. William G. Millsaps. She knows what is in the heart and life of a Methodist preacher, and acts accordingly. She well sustains the family reputation, and honors her present name of Mrs. C. S. Butterfield. The best Sunday-school I know anywhere is under her guidance.

At this Conference, our new presiding elder, Rev. B. F. Jones, presided over the body for the fourth time. We are now able to take his measure better than would have been possible early in the year. To call him our "beloved" would seem too much a platitude. He is far more than this usually implies. Earnest, sympathetic, helpful, his visits are always reasons of refreshing. Full time is given, and no part of his important work is neglected. The very soul of courtesy, he yet does not fail to probe the festering spot. In a word, he appreciates that a presiding elder is a brother-minister, but charged with seeing others do duty faithfully.

Notwithstanding the loss of one good church and society from the work, as it was last year, the first Quarterly Conference, held also at Norfield in January, assessed the preacher fifty dollars more than before. Yet we found at this early fourth session more than eighty per cent. of the assessment for support of ministry in hand, with promise of the balance coming up before Annual Conference. This good showing was largely due to the efficiency and liberality of the Bogue Chitto (including Cold Springs) stewards. One of these had already paid in much above his share; the others combined to make up everything due from that society for all claims of the year, and drew a check on the spot for the amount still behind. They will not be disappointed in expectation of the members coming up with their share. Such conduct on the part of stewards is stimulating in a high degree to the faith and faithfulness of the membership. It deserves commendation and imitation.

The church property was reported in good order and partly insured, with considerable addition in value during the year. A new society at Cold Springs was provided for and endorsed. We are hoping, praying, and working for gracious revivals before our Annual Conference.

MIDDLETON, MISS.

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: I wish to state through the ADVOCATE that we are still battling for the Lord on this, the Middleton charge; and I am happy to say the work is still improving, and the people seem to be very grateful for past recent results realized mostly during our protracted meetings—six in number, so far; and we expect to hold more during this Fall. We have had eighteen accessions to date, and the prospects are good for more if we are able to carry out our plans for future work. The devil has tried our faith and patience several times since we came to Middleton, but the Lord has been with us, and we still have victory with us. Bless his holy name!

During our meeting at State Line—one of our appointments—it seemed as if Satan was going to defeat us, but we stayed with the Lord, and he carried us safely through, and such victory over sin, the flesh, and the devil, I had never witnessed before.

We are praising God for all past blessings, and asking and working for and expecting more in the future.

We are greatly opposed and hindered in the work in this section by what is known here as Come-out-ism—something I never knew of before I came here; but the Lord is giving us victory even over all, and a great many who had withdrawn and quit the church have been made to see their mistake, and are going back to the church.

With best wishes to the ADVOCATE, the editor, and all, I ask to be remembered always as a faithful representative of Christ the Lord, endeavoring to hold up the true standard of Christianity under the colors of the faithful, true and tried host known as Methodists.

Fraternally,
J. B. BLACKBURN.

ELLISVILLE, MISS.

DEAR DR BOSWELL: My fourth Quarterly Conference was held Sunday and Monday, Oct. 6 and 7. We had a most pleasant meeting. The Sunday-school and general spiritual condition fairly good. We have made some progress during the year. Finances well up. We have in hand about 90 per cent. of our Conference collections, Bishops paid, and about $350 paid on insurance and church debts. This has been a trying year with us in Ellisville Methodist Church—trying to pay debts. Your paper is good and growing. I think a visit from the editor would help us all, and the paper, too.

Yours fraternally,
R. D. NORSWORTHY, P. C.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

BROOKSVILLE CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: The fourth Quarterly Conference for the Brooksville circuit has just been held. The finances are in a healthy condition. A full report on all the claims will be made at the Annual Conference. There have been twelve or fifteen conversions during the year; one church has been refurnished; about $50 raised for the District Parsonage; $32 and two or three boxes for the Orphanage. These are loyal, generous people. The day on which the Conference was held was ideal. The sky was a perfect dome of blue, fields and forests were decked in brown and gold, the quail was in the field and the lark in the meadow; air, sky and forest all spoke eloquently of that balmiest of all seasons, the Indian Summer. Indian Summer in the prairies will compare most favorably with Dr. Hoss' finest seasons among the Holston hills. And the New Bethel people measured up to the highest expectations of generous hospitality. Such a dinner as they did spread! The presiding elder was thoroughly at himself both at the table and in the pulpit. He preached with unusual freedom, and dispensed a pure, wholesome gospel. May his bow abide in strength for many years to come. We are now on the home run, having only five weeks to finish the year's work. We shall endeavor to leave nothing undone which ought to be done by that time.

E. S. LEWIS

BATESVILLE AND WESLEY.

Our year's work will soon be closed, which, in many respects, has been pleasant and encouraging. We have two prayer meetings well attended, two Sunday-schools with increasing interest all the while; had Children's Day at each of our Sunday-schools. We have had nineteen additions, and lost eight by death and certificate. We have two Women's Missionary Societies—one Home one Foreign—both doing well. In our last protracted meeting we were assisted by Rev. O. L. Savage, who did us faithful work. May the Lord reward him! As the roof was torn off of our church at this place by the storm last Fall, it has necessitated a new roof, new finish on walls, and furniture; also new carpet and new stoves, with an organ on the way; and now we are having a heavy pull on the collections ordered by the Conference. We hope to come out all right. Our regret is, so much worldly-mindedness and no more godliness. We are still trying to sow the gospel seed, hoping for their germination by and by.

D. W. BABB, Pastor.

WATER VALLEY—MAIN STREET

We are still holding the fort at Main Street. Everything is now looking towards Conference. Meanwhile we are gathering up the remainder of our collections, and getting our reports in shape.

We have had a year of hard, yet not unpleasant work. There have been many disappointments, and some of our loftiest air castles are tumbled ruins now, but there may be in the ruins building material for more substantial structures another year. Our building and loan stock has matured, and we have paid off all miscellaneous back debts. We are now in a position to put our shoulders against the remaining debt of $600, and push it off. More than one-third of this is already in sight, and we are planning to be clear of debt by next April or May, and then to paint our church in time for the District Conference.

Bro. Shipman will bring up a fine report from Wood Street. He and Bro. Thames have been in a great meeting at Minter City.

W. G. HARBIN.

BOLIVAR AND GLEN ALLEN.

DR. BOSWELL: Our fourth Quarterly Conference convened on Oct. 21. Our efficient presiding elder, Rev. J. E. Thomas, is in great favor with the people. Assessments are in full; $1,232 raised for churches and parsonage; $42 on Twentieth Century Fund, and quite a number of DECEPTION.

When the conjurer shows an empty hat, and at once begins to extract from it rabbits or cabbages, we know that we have been adroitly deceived, because we know we can't get out anything that isn't in it.

If people would only reason in that way about medicines they would be a great deal better off in health and pocket. A number of so called "blood making" and "flesh forming" "tonic" medicines are only stimulants in disguise. You can't get strength out of a stimulant because strength is not in it. All physical strength is derived from food digested and assimilated and in the form of blood nourishing the entire body. Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery does not make blood or make strength, no medicine can do that. But it does cure diseases of the stomach and its allied organs, and so causing the perfect digestion and assimilation of food, it enables the building of the body in sound and vigorous health.

"I can say to you one bottle of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' has cured me sound and well, after suffering two long years with stomach disease," writes W. H. Braswell, of McAdenville, Gaston Co., N. C. "My health is worth all the world to me. I will praise you as long as I live."

A CLUB OFFER.

On another page will be found our offer to club with THE COMMONER, Mr. Bryan's paper. It is one of the sprightliest and best-edited papers in the country. Mr. Bryan, late candidate for the presidency, has thousands of admirers in Louisiana and Mississippi who will be glad to read his paper.

We will send the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and The Commoner for one year for TWO DOLLARS AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS; cash with the order. Read the advertisement. Send orders to

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

The alacrity with which some gentlemen give seats to ladies in a crowded car when within a block or two of their getting-off place reminds us of the answer a plain old countryman gave when he was asked: "What sort of a man is Mr. M——?" "The cleverest man," said he, "you ever saw when he is at your house."

There is difference between Christian cheerfulness and that levity that characterizes a few who imagine they must be trifling in order to be agreeable. We may not be able to tell just where the dividing line is, but the well-balanced man will always know when he comes to it, and govern himself accordingly.

Service rendered by a good man, be it ever so small, is never in vain. Even the menial work of sweeping the floor of the church adds to the comfort of the congregation. It is more than a convenience to find a hitching-peg driven in a tree near the church, by one who can do but little else. The preacher and congregation are often shielded from the cold air by one who is thoughtful enough to keep the door closed. The Psalmist seems to have had these little services in mind when he said, "I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of the Lord than to dwell in the tents of wickedness."

One of the leading financiers of our country says he has "never been able to understand why the young men of to-day deem the theater an absolute essential in seeking diversion. . . . When the human race reaches its highest mental development there will probably be no theaters." Unfortunately, the majority of the human race will never reach a very high degree of mental development, and the theater will still live to afford them diversion. And more unfortunate still, very many of our best educated men and women encourage the less enlightened to seek pleasure in watching "make believe characters strut up and down a stage like children at a masquerade." It is not at all strange that the theater is so well patronized.

DOING GOOD.

St. Paul's idea of Christian beneficence is embraced in his exhortation to Timothy: "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy: that they do good, be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold of eternal life." These words, directed to a class, may, nevertheless, point out the duty of every man claiming to be a disciple of Christ, for every man is bound, by his relation to God and his fellow-man, to do good, of the ability which God good giveth, "to all men, especially to them who are of the household of faith."

Only those who are blessed with an abundance of this world's goods are able to give largely to any cause, and they seldom give according to ability, or in proportion to the truly benevolent among the poorer classes of people. This is in part explained by the fact that the richer a man becomes, the stronger becomes the hold of riches on his affections, and the less he is inclined to the duty of helping others as occasion may arise. This is one of the foundations of civilization. Disregard it, and universal barbarism would ensue; one class would live only to prey on another.

It is no reflection on the Almighty that one class is poor while another revels in abundance, for whether it is so ordained or not, we know that in many instances poverty is the direct result of vice and indolence, frequently of rashness and mismangement, none of which can be charged to God's administration. But it is to the glory of God that he has planted the humanitarian spirit in men, so that they may rise above all purely selfish considerations, and assist their fellow-beings when in trouble. It is to the credit of men that they do not quench their human instincts, and leave their brethren in distress.

The obligation to do good rests on something else than humanitarianism. God's will binds men to do good. If the disposition exists naturally, or is inspired by the sight of human suffering, it is intensified and enlarged by the desire to please God, which not only prompts to good works, but which also prompts men to seek opportunities to do good. This characteristic of a Christian is not natural; it is the outgrowth of grace implanted in the heart. We think it possible for the spirit of benevolence to exist in a heart unregenerated, and to show itself in acts of beneficence; but no man can fully comply with God's law in reference to doing good until he has reached that point that leads him to do good for Christ's sake as well as for the sake of humanity. Much that passes for good, and is good in itself, leaves Christ wholly out of sight, if, indeed, the work is performed as much to glorify self as to do good to a fellow-being.

From the foregoing it is easily seen that good works do not constitute the ground of one's acceptance with God. No man can work himself into divine favor. No amount of good works can change the moral nature so as to qualify it for heaven. This ought to be understood, but strange to say, it is not, and hundreds are trying vainly to institute a commercial transaction between themselves and God, by which they may purchase salvation. But God recognizes no such transactions. Jesus says, "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." St. Paul says we are saved "by grace through faith; not of works, lest any man should boast." "To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted unto him for righteousness."

But good works do serve purposes other than to benefit the suffering and needy. They help keep alive the Christian's faith. "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." St. James says: "Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works," and points to Abraham as an example of one whose faith was manifested by his works. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." It is equally impossible for a Christian to please God unless he is zealous of good works, no matter how much faith he may profess to have.

Good works also determine the measure of reward. "He shall reward every man according to his works." The good will be saved, the wicked lost. But the good themselves will not all share alike. To proceed upon the principle, in making the final awards, that all are equal, and ought to be rewarded equally, would be to do violence to the spirit of justice. And, of course, whatever may be said of salvation by grace, justice can not be overlooked. But we forbear discussion of this point.

Let us not forget that nothing good, however small, is overlooked, or will fail of reward. Jesus said if we do nothing more than give a disciple a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple, we "shall in no wise lose our reward." What will the Master say to one who has spent his whole life and his fortune in doing good to his fellow-man? When the rich, "of their abundance," were casting large gifts into the treasury, Jesus did not fail to see a poor widow cast in "two mites," and commended her above all, because, in her poverty, she "cast in all she had, even all her living." This should teach us to do good, the very best we are able, even though our ability measures up to no more than a penny.—The Lord will not forget.

Doing good is the expression of living faith in God—the evidence of love for our fellow-beings. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world."

GODLESS EDUCATION.

The education received by our children in the public schools of the country is called a "godless education" by certain zealots who think the education of the people ought to be committed entirely into their hands. All education not under their control is godless. The public-school system, without any qualification whatever, they regard as wholly wrong, and "a far worse crime than slavery or intemperance." The shooting of President McKinley is attributed by those who entertain these notions, to the so-called godless system of education. This notwithstanding the assassin was reared a Roman Catholic, and presumably received what education he had in Roman Catholic schools.

On the supposition that the assassin was educated in the public schools, it is unfair to charge the murder, or the murderous spirit that was in him, to the public school—to the system as a whole—or to any school in particular, for, however defective the public school may be in the matter of theology or sectarian teaching, it is not true that godlessness and irreligion enter into the public-school curriculum.

It is true that the assassin was reared a Roman Catholic; grounded in early life in the Roman Catholic faith. How would it do for us to charge the President's death to the Roman Catholic system? It would be utterly foolish. And yet it would not be any more foolish than to charge the President's death to the public-school system. To what miserable subterfuges can an intense sectarian bigot be driven when he seeks an argument against our public schools!

The secret of the matter is hatred of our public schools, not because they are godless, but through fear they will alienate children from the church. If Protestants had no more confidence in the self-preserving elements of their religion than this, we would have no public schools at all, and the children of our poor people, in town and country, would grow up without even the rudiments of an education. But Protestants know not only that our public-school system is not destructive of the faith of our children in religion and divine things, but that the principles of religion and morality underlie the whole system. If a set of infidels desire to test this, let them undertake it. They will soon find that neither an infidel nor an ungodly man has any place in a public-school room.

Another reason for opposition to the public school is found in the fact that the school revenue derived from the State by taxation is wholly applied to public education. If certain sectarian institutions could get a share as they desire—to help educate their children in the dogmas of their church—we would hear of but little opposition to our public-school system. But such a diversion of public funds can never be effected. The utter and perpetual severance of Church and State is "nominated in the bond," and the bond can not be broken.

If those who are so much opposed to our schools because they are godless would lend their aid, as good citizens should, and help to infuse more of the spirit of Christianity into them than there is, the schools would be better, for there would be more positive instruction in morals and religion. This could be done without any bias towards sectarian teaching. But this bias, with their own teachers in the chair, is the very thing these sectarians desire. As they are unable to secure this, they array themselves in opposition to the whole system.

SOUTHERN GALLANTRY.

Has Southern gallantry departed with the Old South? It so seems, else all the men who travel our highways, with here and there an exception, are from regions where women are taught to be independent and men to hold their own against all comers. In this Southern city of New Orleans, with as fine and well-regulated a system of rapid transit as can be found anywhere, the street cars are often crowded—frequently with more men than women. The entrance of a woman, no matter how lady-like in dress or manners, is no appeal to a gentleman (?) to yield his seat. He keeps it. Having paid his fare, he is entitled to it, and no conductor dares ask anyone to make room for a lady. That would be an interference with the rights of property. We have seen ladies stand, and hold on to the backs of seats, as best they could, and go blocks and blocks, not a man, white or black, young or old, ever offering to give them seats. Riding back and forth for ten months past, in all sorts of weather, and all sizes of crowds, we have seen but one negro man offer a lady his seat, and not more than half a dozen white men. We have seen young men and boys allow gray-haired women to stand, as though consideration for age or sex never entered into their early training.

We heard it said, not many years ago, that lack of consideration for ladies in public places in certain sections of our country could never prevail in the South; that our men are too well-bred. But we have caught the spirit, and are as much lacking in politeness towards the ladies as any set of men in the country; else gentlemen do not ride in street cars. Yet we see men in them who live in fine dwellings in the finest residence portions of the city. Surely there must be a few gentlemen among them.

Is there any reason for this deterioration? There must be. It has its origin in selfishness. Men have come to the conclusion that they have a right to enjoy what they pay for, and as the car seat is theirs by right of purchase, as well as pre-emption, they hold it. But, this is no truer to-day than it was in gone-by years. In those years—not very far back—gentlemen seemed to vie with each other in politeness—every one made effort to be first to give a lady his seat. It is no longer so.

Another reason, perhaps, is found in the fact that so many women have crowded into men's places, and are doing men's work, that the men allow them to take their chances in crowded cars just like others in business. The merchant who hires a woman to clerk in his store does not feel under obligation to pay court to her when he meets her on a street car. The male clerk and the female clerk are on a level in the same store, and both on their feet all the time, look upon each other as equals when they meet in a public place, and if the gentleman happens to get a seat on a street car in advance of her, he does not feel under obligation to yield it to her. And maybe she does not expect it. And so it goes.

Again, the women are largely to blame. Many of them, as is natural, expect gentlemen to rise and give them seats. They look daggers at the men if they fail, and, if one rises, and a lady takes his place, she is as cold as an iceberg, and so far from thanking him for his kindness, her conduct seems to say, "I have gotten my rights; thanks to nobody!" Even a man of gentlemanly instincts is inclined to resent such conduct, and he lets the next ill-mannered woman get a seat if she can. Some women never yield an inch to accommodate anybody. Not long since we saw a lady with a small child occupy a whole seat. The child got sleepy, and she took the little one in her lap, and then apparently tried to spread herself all over the seat. She maintained that attitude for a full mile, or more, and allowed ladies to stand all the while, one of whom she could have easily accommodated. So we concluded that the women are as selfish as the men.

To what extent the street-car companies are responsible for this decivilizing process, we do not know. Possibly if they provided larger facilities for the traveling public, or declined to overcrowd their coaches—thus giving every passenger what he pays for, a comfortable seat—they would not only help maintain the manhood and womanhood of the country, but would have the thanks of the traveling public besides.

But we grieve that our men have lost their gallantry. As to the women, we are afraid to say what we think.

Attachment to Christ is the only secret of detachment from the world.—Dr. A. J. Gordon.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

First. The Committee and Class of the Third Year will please meet in the Methodist Church, city of Winona, Tuesday morning, Dec. 3, at 9 o'clock.

Second. All the railroads which touch our territory have agreed to give the usual reduction of fare for the benefit of our Conference session. Purchase your ticket at full fare to Winona, secure a certificate to that effect from your local agent, have the secretary to sign it at Conference, and your return ticket will cost only one cent a mile.

Third. I have not yet been able to find the Journal of our Conference which contains a record of our Conference sessions from 1882 to 1898. I have written to Baltimore with the hope that it had been left in the room where the last session of the General Conference was held, but no trace of the missing Journal could be found. I again ask for any information which anyone may have concerning the Journal. Does anyone know its whereabouts?

PERSONAL.

The young preacher who advertised for a second-hand commentary had a full set of Clarke's great work presented to him by a kind lady. We are sorry we do not know the lady's name. This act of kindness is highly appreciated by the young preacher.

We acknowledge an invitation to the marriage of Miss Etta, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. C. McDonald, of the Mississippi Conference, to Mr. Eid Rhodes, Jr. The wedding will take place in the M. E. Church, South, Tryne, Miss., Nov. 20, at 7:30 A. M. May blessings be upon this union of hearts and hands!

Rev. W. M. McIntosh and Miss May Richardson were married in Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 18, 1886. They will celebrate the fifteenth anniversary of the happy day at home, Grenada, Miss., Nov. 18, 1901, from 8 to 11 P. M. We would be glad to accept the invitation to be present, but will not be able to do so. May they have many happy returns of the day!

In a note to the editor Rev. T. L. Mellen calls attention to a mistake in his report of money collected for domestic missions in the Vicksburg district. The report gave the district credit for $91, whereas it ought to have been $9. Bro. Mellen adds: "I wish it had been not only $91, but $191. I trust, however, that the Vicksburg district will report all collections in full."

The Woman's Home Mission Society of Magnolia, Miss., at a recent meeting adopted resolutions expressing regret at the removal of Rev. F. M. Keen to the Arkansas Conference, and commended him to the good people among whom his lot may be cast. The society also complimented Brother Keen with a handsome contribution as a token of friendship and appreciation.

Dr. S. A. Steel has recently spent several days in Mississippi, lecturing and preaching in Hattiesburg, Columbia, Poplarville, and Lumberton. He preached Sunday morning, the third, at Lumberton, and in the evening lectured on "The Pioneers of Methodism." Rev. B. S. Rayner says: "He delighted our people, and we feel that our church has been strengthened. We will hold the Doctor in grateful remembrance."

Somebody without the fear of God before his eyes entered the parsonage of Parker Memorial Church, and robbed the pastor, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, and other occupants of the dwelling. The exact amount of property taken we do not know, but the preacher's loss was about $28 in cash—all the money he had. Dr. Keener, the presiding elder, was also robbed in like manner only a short time before. As the editor is a newcomer in the same section of the city, he is expecting the light-fingered gentry to undertake a look through his house.

The Commoner.

(Mr. Bryan's Paper)

The Commoner has attained within six months from date of the first issue a circulation of 100,000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the discussion of political, economic, and social problems. To the columns of The Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts; and his review of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

The Commoner's regular subscription price is $1 per year. We have arranged with Mr. Bryan whereby we can furnish his paper and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE together for one year for $2.25. The regular subscription price of the two papers when subscribed for separately is $3 net. When remittance is made by personal check, ten cents extra will be charged.

Meridian District.

The first annual session of the Sunday-school Convention and fifth annual session of Epworth League Conference convened in South Side Church, Meridian, Tuesday evening, Oct. 22, and continued through the twenty-fifth.

The first service proved quite interesting, the main feature being an opening sermon and consecration service conducted by Dr. J. M. Weems.

Sunday-school work was taken up Wednesday morning, and continued through Thursday morning's session. Various features of this work were presented and discussed in a most profitable and interesting manner. Although all who were on the programme were not present, no subject was left without consideration; practical discussions being entered into, by which many useful methods and plans were brought out.

An exceedingly practical address was given by Dr. Weems, Wednesday evening, using as a subject, "Sunday-school: Its Work and Its Workers."

The work of the Epworth League was entered upon Wednesday afternoon, and continued through the session. The Devotional Department was first taken up, and papers and discussions given as to "Purpose of Devotional Department," "Methods of Conducting," "Preparation of Leader and Leaguers," Missions, etc.—all of which proved very beneficial to those seeking to know how to successfully carry on this great work.

Hon. C. C. Dunn delighted the Conference, Thursday evening, by giving a splendid lecture, using as a subject, "The Seasons of Life."

Friday morning's session was consumed in the discussion of charity and help work, Junior Department, and League revenue.

Value of literary meetings, Reading Circle, library, and other features of the Literary Department, were given consideration at the Friday afternoon session.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: James B. Holland, Meridian, president; Miss Allie Brogan, Marion, first vice-president; Ida Curtis, Poplar Spring, second vice-president; Miss Minnie Buntyn, Meridian, third vice-president; Miss Sallie Poythress, Meridian, secretary and treasurer.

An English Author Wrote:

"No shade, no shine, no fruit, no flowers, no leaves.—November!" Many Americans would add no freedom from catarrh, which is so aggravated during this month that it becomes constantly troublesome. There is abundant proof that catarrh is a constitutional disease. It is related to scrofula and consumption, being one of the wasting diseases. Hood's Sarsaparilla has shown that what is capable of eradicating scrofula, completely cures catarrh and taken in time prevents consumption. We can not see how any sufferer can put off taking this medicine, in view of the widely published record of its radical and permanent cures. It is undoubtedly America's Greatest Medicine for America's Greatest Disease—Catarrh.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

Epworth League of the Second M. E. Church, South, Baton Rouge, La.

On June 24, 1901, a meeting was called at the Second M E. Church, South, consisting principally of the young people of the church, to consider the advisability of organizing an Epworth League. The meeting was called to order by the pastor, Rev. M. F. Johnson. Miss May Smith, the State organizer, who had come to assist in the organization, spoke of the importance and result of League work. Those present were encouraged to take up the work.

A League was formed with eleven charter members. Miss Stella Murphey was elected president; the three vice-presidents, the secretary and treasurer were elected. All these have held their positions in the official roll until the last election, and have done well in building up the League work. The membership has increased to the number of thirty-five active members. The devotional meeting is held every Sunday evening, and we believe much good has been done through these services. Many of the young people who before were silent are willing to lead and take an active part in these meetings.

The Charity and Help Department have visited the sick, given material help to those in need, and have been a blessing in many ways.

The Literature Department took up the Reading Course last year, but have not secured the books for this year. Literary entertainments and socials have been given, and thus the young people in the church have been drawn together socially.

Miss Lucy Denham is now president of our League, with an efficient staff of officers to help her. We expect good work to be done this Winter in the blessed work in which our hearts are all united.

IS IT AN EPIDEMIC?

What Statistics Show an Alarming Increase in an Already Prevailing Disease---Are Any Exempt?

At no time in the history of disease has there been such an alarming increase in the number of cases of any particular malady as in that of kidney and bladder troubles now preying upon the people of this country.

To-day we see a relative, a friend or an acquaintance apparently well, and in a few days we may be grieved to learn of their serious illness or sudden death, caused by that fatal type of kidney trouble—Bright's disease.

Kidney trouble often becomes advanced into acute stages before the afflicted is aware of its presence; that is why we read of so many sudden deaths of prominent business and professional men, physicians and others. They have neglected to stop the leak in time

While scientists are puzzling their brains to find out the cause, each individual can, by a little precaution, avoid the chances of contracting dreaded and dangerous kidney trouble, or eradicate it completely from their system if already afflicted. Many precious lives might have been, and many more can yet be saved, by paying attention to the kidneys.

It is the mission of the "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" to benefit its readers at every opportunity, and therefore we advise all who have any symptoms of kidney or bladder trouble to write to-day to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a free sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the celebrated specific which is having such a great demand and remarkable success in the cure of the most distressing kidney and bladder troubles. With the sample bottle of Swamp-Root will also be sent free a pamphlet and treatise of valuable information.

"God is the Rudder That Steers This World."

When Carl was six and one-half years old he went on a visit to his grandparents. A pretty button was given him, on which was a picture of a ship, and around it was written, "Remember the Maine." Every little while, all day, he asked questions as to how the ship could go over the water, and how it knew which way to go, as he expressed it. Upon being told, he became very much interested about the rudder, and all the books in the house in which were larger pictures of ships had to be brought out for his inspection. After he had gone to sleep that night it was thought he would forget it by morning; but up he jumped before the fires were going, for it was Winter.

"Gramma," said he, "tell me a story, please, while the house is getting warm, and I'll climb into your bed and hear it."

"All right, dear. Of what were you thinking? What would you be most pleased to hear a story about?"

"I was wondering how old men are before they are drunkards. Were they drunkards when they were babies, or how is it?"

"Oh, no: they were pure and innocent then: but there are so many ways to deceive boys—candy drops with whisky in them, lemonade with the same, nice music to draw both men and boys into the saloon, and many other such things; and when they once get a taste for whisky they become drunkards in a short time."

"Now that I know how those bad men get boys into their saloons, they'll never get me. But I want to know where all those wicked men go after they die. Don't any of them ever go to heaven?"

"No, dear; not unless they stop drinking and become good men before they die."

"What, gramma; can't they never, never, n-e-v-e-r get into heaven after they die? Can't they get good after they die, and then go to heaven?"

"No, they must stop being wicked before they die. We are all afraid of those wicked people here, and it would not be heaven with them there. Would you want to live with those wicked men in heaven?"

"Oh, no! But how is heaven made so they can't get in there?"

"Why, dear; God prepared that place for good people, and bad people's sins have made so great a gulf that they can never get across into heaven. The Bible says, 'No drunkard can enter the kingdom of heaven.'"

For two or three minutes little Carl was very quiet, scarcely winked. She watched him, wondering what was going on in his mind. Then, with a child-like faith and trust, he said:

"God is the rudder that steers this world; isn't he, gramma?"

"Yes, my dear boy; but who did you ever hear say that?"

"Why—no one. Is that any thing bad?"

"No, it is very nice; it is grand to believe it is so. Promise me you will try and always remember 'God is the rudder that steers this world.'"

And Carl said: "I'll try."—Sel.

Making Her Dream True.

"I had such a beautiful dream last night, Edwin," said little Mary Mann. "I dreamed that I was a 'Little-Sister-of-the-Poor,' with a long black veil over my white cap, you know, and that I went about giving people bread and cake and things, like the 'Little Sisters-of-the-Poor' do."

"Humph!" grunted Edwin, "I don't call that such a beautiful dream, and besides, I don't believe there is much cake passed around by those black-veiled people."

"I'm going to give 'em cake, though," insisted Mary, "when I get to be big enough to wear a cap and veil, and a string of beads at my side: 'cause just bread would be so tiresome."

"What's the use of a cap and veil?" asked the boy, scornfully; "there are some tots creeping round the corner now, looking as hungry for cake as mice; you had better be practicing on them."

Edwin did not mean anything by this speech; he was only teasing this little dreamer of dreams; but Mary was taken at once by the idea; mother was down town, and it was no use to ask nurse Polly, she would be sure to refuse; she did not seem to have much opinion of "Little-Sisters-of-the-Poor." Mary made up her mind to begin to be one right away, without waiting for any cap or veil, and she knew where the fruit bowl and cake basket were, for she had seen her mother put them in the cup-board that had the wire doors.

When dinner time came there was a great stir in the family, for by the time the three little alley-children had been surprised with large shares of grapes and bananas and cake, and by the time Edwin and Mary had taken toll of the same, the bowl and basket looked like the lean kine of Pharaoh's dream.

Mother Mann said her little boy and girl must learn to be honest before they tried being generous, and the lesson she set them was not letting them have a grape, a banana or a piece of cake for a whole week! But while they were doing without these good things, she did not discourage the dreamer, who thought it would be so nice to wear a cap and veil.

"I think Edwin was right about the cap and veil not making much difference," she said, "and I know he was right about your beginning to practice now to be a "Little-Sister-of-the-Poor. I only wish he had given you better advice about where to begin. Where does the Bible say charity begins?"

"At home," answered both Sunday-school scholars promptly.

"Yes, with your own things. Haven't you something of your own to give?"

Our story leaves Mary and Edwin sitting over the nursery fire, in a deep study as to what they could give away. Let us hope they will spend all the days of their lives looking for something to give.—Southern Churchman.

A Good Sister.

The daughter of a famous French pastor, M Monroe, who is now a mother herself, began her life by being a good sister. She had an only brother, and he was a medical student. She realized a little of the temptations to which a medical student must be exposed, and she determined, in a simple, girlish way, that she would make her own womanhood the crystal shield to protect her brother from the snares to which he would be exposed. She, therefore, made it her business day by day to enter into all her brother's pursuits and to understand his interests. She was allowed a little private room in the house, and to this she used to ask him to come and talk over the events of the day. She even overcame the natural shyness of a girl, and she would get him to kneel down with her, and she would pour out her sweet, girlish heart in prayer that God would keep this beloved brother unspotted by the world. That brother has grown up, and is now himself a married man, and has his family about him, but he said once to his sister: "You little know all that you were to me when I was a young man. My temptations were so maddening that I used sometimes to think that I must yield to them, and do as other young men did all around me, but then a vision of you would rise up before me, and I said to myself, 'No, if I do this thing, I can never go and sit with her in her own little room; I can never look into her dear face again.'" Oh, what a beautiful work of a sister in a home.—Rev. R. F. Horton, in Christian Index.

A Quaker to a Saloon Keeper.

Several persons, among them a Quaker, were crossing the Alleghany mountains in a stage. A lively discussion arose on the subject of temperance and the liquor business, and those engaged in it were handled without gloves. One of the company remained silent. After enduring it as long as he could, he said:

"Gentlemen, I want you to understand that I am a liquor dealer. I keep a public house at ———; but I would have you to know that I have license, and keep a decent house. I don't keep loafers and loungers about my place, and when a man has enough he can get no more at my bar. I sell to decent people, and do a respectable business."

He thought he had put a quietus on the subject, and that no answer could be given. Not so. The Quaker said:

"Friend, that is the most damnable part of thy business. If thee would sell to drunkards and loafers, thee would help to kill off the race, and society would be rid of them. But thee takes the young, the poor, the innocent and unsuspecting, making drunkards and loafers of them. When their character and money are all gone, thee kicks them out, and turns them over to other shops to finish off; and thee ensnares others and sends them on the same road to ruin."—Exchange.

The Unselfish Brothers.

"There is a beautiful tradition connected with the site of the temple of Solomon. It is said to have been occupied in common by two brothers, one of whom had a family, the other had none. On this spot was sown a field of wheat. On the evening succeeding the harvest—the wheat having been gathered in separate shocks—the elder brother said to his wife:

"My younger brother is unable to bear the burden and heat of the day; I will arise, take of my shocks, and place them with his without his knowledge."

The younger brother, thinking over the results of the harvest, said within himself: "My elder brother has a family, and I have none. I will arise, take of my shocks, and place them with his."

On the following day they found, to their mutual astonishment, that their respective shocks were undiminished. The same thing happened for several nights, when each resolved in his own mind to stand guard and solve the mystery. They did so; and on the following night they met each other half-way between their respective shocks with arms full.

Upon ground so hallowed was built the magnificent temple of Solomon.—Morning Star.

Wilhelmina's Dolls Had the Measles.

An amusing story is told of Queen Wilhelmina when she was quite a little child.

Her Majesty was not allowed to share dinner with the elder members of the Royal household, but was permitted to make her appearance at dessert, and place herself beside some particular favorite.

One day she sat by a courtly old general, and after eating some fruit the little girl turned and gazed up at him. Presently she exclaimed: "I wonder you're not afraid to sit next to me."

Everybody in the room turned at the sound of her childish treble.

"On the contrary, I am but too pleased and honored to sit next to my future Queen," replied the general. "But why should I be afraid?"

Assuming a woebegone expression, the little girl replied: "Because all my dolls have the measles—they're all of them down with it."—Christian Intelligencer.

The Little Sprig of Content.

Edith is only a school-girl, but she has some of the wisdom that is better than any to be gotten from books. She does not spend her time fretting over things she does not have. She enjoys what she has.

"Don't you wish you were going to the seashore?" asked Margaret.

"I would like it," said Edith, "but I'm glad I'm going to grandpapa's. I always have a good time there."

"Wouldn't you like to have a new dress like Mary's?" said Jessie.

"Yes; but I like mine just as well," was the answer.

Edith has "the little sprig of content," which gives a rich flavor to everything.—Selected.

The stronger our faith the greater will be our happiness and safety, so that we can cheerfully do and suffer what God imposes upon us, and this because we know that he is merciful and full of love toward us.—Luther.

GERSTLE'S FEMALE PANACEA
CURES WOMEN

HABITUAL MISCARRIAGE

is not only the result very often of some form of uterine disease, but also is the cause of many other derangements of the womb, which bring endless pain and misery to a large percentage of married women. The experience of MRS. EMMA SHORTER, of Prospect, Tenn., is so like that of hundreds of others that her story told by herself must be of interest and value to all who have suffered as she did. She writes: "Owing to some serious organic derangement, I was subject to habitual miscarriage and its attendant flooding and danger to life and health. I also had whites a great deal and was in a miserable condition generally. I decided to try what the G. F. P. Treatment would do for me and will tell you how it resulted. I took only two bottles of the medicine, but it made me sleep well at night, gave me a good appetite, the whites are entirely cured, and instead of the dreaded miscarriage I have a fine, healthy baby boy who weighed ten pounds at his birth. G. F. P. costs only one dollar a bottle, yet its actual worth to diseased and suffering women cannot be estimated. It has proven invaluable to me and will to others if they will but realize it."

Write to the Ladies' Health Club, care L. Gerstle & Co., Chattanooga, Tenn., for free medical advice and instruction regarding the treatment of your trouble. Under this advice you can treat yourself in the privacy of your home.

You can get G. F. P. from your druggist or dealer at $1.00 a bottle.

accessions to the church membership. There is some improvement spiritually, everything moving on nicely, and we feel assured that the preacher's and presiding elder's salaries will be paid in full, although it was increased $90 from last year. Success to you.

AMORY, MISS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We have just closed our meeting at this place. It lasted just eight days. About 20 conversions; 20 joined our church—16 on profession of faith, and 4 by letter. Our church was much revived; whole membership strengthened and encouraged. Bro. J. A. Bowen, of Tupelo, was with us from Monday night until Saturday morning, and preached us twelve excellent sermons. Bro. Robt. P. Neblett was with us a few days and preached us two good sermons and much aided our singing. I preached five times myself. To God be all the glory.

K. M HARRISON, P. C.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

FLORIEN CIRCUIT.

DEAR BRETHREN: We have just closed two more revival meetings on my work. The first was held at Hornbeck, conducted by Rev. J. S. Sanders, evangelist. He preached with great power. God is greatly honoring his preaching. Bro. Sanders did us good work. Hornbeck has never witnessed such a meeting. The results are that quite a number were converted and many sanctified, also several accessions to the church, and more to follow. The meeting was a great success. It closed with a large congregation, and with shouts and praises to God.

The second meeting was held at Holly Grove, conducted principally by Rev. E. C. Cargill, a brother of the writer. Brother Cargill is a man full of the Holy Ghost. He did us a grand work. The Lord is certainly using him in the salvation of souls. The meeting was certainly a success. In many respects this country has never witnessed such a revival. There are so many people that seem to be confirmed. Bless God the people are cleaning up and getting right with God. The greatest work done was getting people of the different churches fully out on God's promises. There were some conversions and several sanctified. I praise God for the old-time power. I expect to carry up a good report to Conference.

Yours, trusting Jesus,
E. L. CARGILL, P. C.

LIVE OAK CHARGE.

We have six appointments—Live Oak, Red Oak, Friendship, Alford's Chapel, Palmetto and Denham Springs. The Lord has been with us. We have had a protracted meeting at each appointment. The fire is burning. We have had about fifty accessions. Thirty children baptized. Built a parsonage, one church, and have everything on foot to repair two of our churches, and plans laid to build a church at Denham Springs. Sold about seventy-five Bibles. Our collections will come all right. Lord forgive me for my sins of omission this year.

BAKER A. WIER was born Nov. 14, 1872, at Verona, Miss., and died at Ft. Smith, Ark., Oct. 24, 1901. He is the son of Dr. and Mrs. T. C. Wier, of the North Mississippi Conference. While a mere boy he joined the M. E. Church, South. He entered the A. and M. College, and graduated with distinction. Immediately after graduating he came to Ft. Smith, Ark., and entered upon business life. He has been identified with two of the leading mercantile establishments of this city. His culture, his integrity and his kindly disposition qualified him for success in business. The firms with which he has been connected are unanimous in their praise of him as a business man. About the middle of September he had three hemorrhages, and from that time till his death never set up. During his illness his devoted father and mother were at his side to minister lovingly to his every want. One who knew Baker best said of him: "His was a beautiful life; lovely in childhood, bright and cheery in boyhood and youth, and full of hope and promise in his young manhood. He was a dutiful son, and as his seven brothers and two sisters can testify, a loving brother. In business life full of industry and energy, making associates and friends of his employees." This writer visited him frequently during his illness, and he always assured me and his father that all was well between him and his Lord. His faith was beautiful and childlike. "We owe all to Jesus," "I always loved Jesus," "Still trusting in Christ," "Yes, indeed, God is our best friend." By these and other similar expressions he showed full assurance of faith, and ere his body was laid in the speechless and dreamless realms of the dead, his spirit had gone home to God. A vast concourse of weeping friends attended the funeral, which was conducted by Rev. H. D. Haswell.

O. E. GODDARD.

THOU ART NOT HERE.

The pride of my house, and the joy of my life;
A model for mothers, the loveliest wife;
How charming thy presence when sensibly near,
How lonely thy absence when thou art not here.

When the cares of the morning compell'd us to part,
Reluctant I'd leave this dear queen of my heart,
And thy gentle good-bye linger'd long on my ear;
Now that echo is silent, for thou art not here.

Return to my 'Bitha at evening was sweet;
The thought of thy presence would quicken my feet;
And thy radiant smiles gave a welcome sincere,
But those smiles now are wanting, for thou art not here.

No longer our vases with flowerets bloom;
Thy footsteps no longer are heard in our room;
Those loving expressions my sadness could cheer;
All, all are now wanting, for thou art not here.

Dear 'Bitha, I miss thee, but hardly can tell
The strange and the mingled emotions I feel;
For all that once seemed to me lovely and dear
Is dull and insipid, now thou art not here.

Thy loving companionship brightened the past,
The life that we lived was too happy to last,
And envious Fate, whom all mortals may fear,
Hath severed our being, and thou art not here.

My days and my nights I must venture alone,
No heart beating back to the throbs of my own;
My course in life's future alone I must steer,
And realize constantly thou art not here.

Our life was so truly, so perfectly one,
Is it wonder that now I feel ruined, undone?
Or shed o'er thy coffin full many a tear,
Lamenting most bitterly thou art not here?

Shall sorrow so dreadful forever endure?
Our parting be final, eternally sure?
And death now triumphant, with impudent sneer,
Forever be mocking with "thou art not here"?

No, Mercy and Hope bid me patiently wait,
While Faith points the way to the Beautiful Gate;
We'll meet, and in bliss never ending we'll share,
'Mid mansions in glory, for thou wilt be there.

W. H. CASSELL.

Catarrh Can Not Be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they can not reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it, you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

AUTOGRAVITY.

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: Referring to my advertisement relating to autogravity pumps and engines: From a standpoint it SEEMS, APPEARS, that autogravity pumps and engines exist "in the nature of things." After careful investigation by me, I discovered that I was specifically in error. What I thought to be an inequality proved to be a mere equation, I discovering many devices, self-motion by gravity proving to be mere equations or balances of nature's forces, of no practical use. It was as if one let fall a weight, say a piece of lead, and lifted it back; the downward force, Nature's gravity; the power carrying it back, artificial power.

But in one of my devices it seemed that a given number of foot pounds fell, automatically, raising half the number; a tub of water on a pipe, with a valve at the latter's bottom, sliding in a pipe, forcing the water up through another pipe. Then I raised half back. One half of the natural fall is lost. Where does it go?

Since writing the above, I have discovered the additional contrivance, shaped like a car axle with its two wheels, sliding in a pipe, that appears to me now to send water up twice as fast. There fall 2M-squared foot pounds; there is gained 1M squared foot pounds; there is lifted back zero. Vacuum sucks tubs water. Loat of nature's force, one half M-squared. Gained, one and one-half. An air vacuum (or a vacuum of empty space) is formed, receiving water. Anxiliary pipes; two tubs by ropes and pulleys, can "see-saw."

My mathematical formulæ stand the tests of figures. I have written the consummate equation in a synthetic and analyzed form. I made errors; I make discoveries. Mathematics confirm. My best judgment, it is true. Respectfully,

ROBERT ALLEN CRAIG A. B.

The near approach of the next session of Congress has given fresh zest to the sugar war which has already existed for some time between the domestic beet sugar growers and the sugar trust. Something extra rich in the Epworth tone

Did you ever notice what a difference there is in pianos?

In some the tone is very rich and pleasing—you enjoy listening to such. In others the tone is "thumpy" or unmusical—no enjoyment for either player or listener.

Some pianos sound all right at first and afterwards the tone loses its beauty. Did you ever stop to think why this is so?

Well, it depends on the sounding board, which after all is the most important part of a piano, from a musical standpoint.

The sounding board extends clear across the piano, behind the strings. Its use is to enlarge and qualify the tone and make it float out. When you press the key the hammer strikes the string, and the vibration of the string is conveyed to the sounding board by means of a bridge (like a violin bridge). If the sounding board is an extra fine one the tone will be extra sweet, pure and sympathetic. If a common, cheap or poor one the tone will be like it.

No matter how fine the exterior, or how low the price,—a piano with a common cheap sounding board is a bad bargain.

Epworth sounding boards are made by the old-fashioned, expensive German process—by hand—the work being done by old-time German experts.

This not only insures fine tone results when the piano is new; it insures the tone lasting, and that's important. We guarantee it absolutely, no matter what the climate or how the room is heated.

Our Epworth piano catalogue explains many other points. You will find it interesting if you are thinking of buying a piano. It also tells how to save from $75 to $100.

Your Christmas Expenses

You can be as generous as you like at Christmas, and all it will cost you will be a little systematic work between now and then.

Write to THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL and THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, Philadelphia, and find out all about it.

After Christmas you can work some more, and a trip to Europe or $500 is not too much to expect.

No luck about it. It depends upon you, and the work is easy.

ATTENTION, PREACHERS.

Now is the time for you to do some good work for the ADVOCATE.

The ADVOCATE greatly needs your help.

We need a new dress of type, that we may make the paper attractive.

Our machinery needs repairs, and there are quite a lot of other things that are necessary to bring the paper up to the proper standard.

It can not be done without your individual help.

Now, will you not make one hard effort, before Conference, to aid this worthy cause?

We believe the following will help you:

For Two Dollars we will send to all new subscribers the ADVOCATE from now until Jan. 1, 1903.

Thus, by sending us the names now, they will receive the paper nearly fifteen months for two dollars. This is worth considering.

If subscribers have not the cash on hand, you can send any time between now and your first Annual Conference.

To all old subscribers who will pay their subscription in full to date, and send us two dollars additional, we will send the paper from now until Jan. 1, 1903. The label tells when subscriptions expire.

The paper will also be sent from now until January, 1903, at our regular club rate: $1 50 in clubs of ten, cash with the order.

Now, brethren, please give this your personal attention, and by sending us one or two new subscribers, we will have as well printed a paper as anybody.

Next week we will mail you some sample copies to help you in the work.

Please help us. We want to make a good report at Conference.

Fraternally yours,
JNO. W. BOSWELL.

Glances at the World.

As to the cost of living, which is always a matter of vital interest, we copy from the Times-Democrat, of Nov. 18. The statement is based on a report in Dun's Review. "The lowest point was touched on July 1, 1897, when we were still suffering from the panic of 1893. The record given by Dun's covers no less than 350 staple commodities. In making up the table, allowance is made for the relative importance of each commodity in the cost of living. This is necessary in a calculation of this kind, as it would be wholly valueless if an article like salt played as prominent a part as flour or beef. The cost of living has increased 7 per cent. as compared with this time last year, and 35 per cent. as compared with 1897. Clothing is slightly cheaper than a year ago, but, almost without exception, the necessities are higher, especially breadstuffs, in consequence of the failure of the cereal crops. Comparing the cost of living to-day with what it was four years ago, the condition of the masses would seem to be not as good. Those who enjoy fixed incomes are certainly not as well off, as they get no more, yet their living costs them nearly one-third more; and as for fluctuating wages, the average of increase during this period has been only from 10 to 20 per cent. against a greater cost in living of 35 per cent. On the other hand, the situation is regarded favorably, because there are a larger number of persons employed to-day than then, and a workingman naturally takes this into consideration. Moreover, wages were tending downward then, and the number of persons employed was decreasing, whereas to-day the tendency is in the other direction. Even if the cost of living has increased faster than the increase in wages, the latter can hope to catch up with it in time. Thus, although there is practically little improvement among the great mass of the people, and the struggle for life is still an earnest one, they can view the situation with much more equanimity, since work is plentiful and wages are advancing."

Some months since the French Government enacted legislation which required the religious orders either to suspend operations or secure special license from the government. Many Catholics looked upon the measure as a species of hardship, not to say unauthorized meddling with the church. The Pope was not at all pleased with the legislation. Some of the monastic orders complied with the demand of the State, and are carrying on their work. Others declined, and have left the country. But there is now said to be another and unexpected outcome of the adverse legislation, viz.: the revival of what is called nationalism, or a desire for "home rule" in the church. As matters now stand, the Catholic Church in France is ruled by the Vatican. Many priests, including a few chief dignitaries, are of the opinion that the church "would wax stronger and more potent if removed from the direct rule of the Vatican." But how this is possible without being disloyal to the Pope we do not know, unless it is proposed to obey the Pope in spiritual matters, and only regulate their own internal affairs, which, of course, the Pope will not allow. The Vatican must rule the Vatican Church.

Everybody knows that nothing is left undone by liquor sellers to hold the patronage of regular drinkers, and to entice young men into their bar-rooms. We are quite prepared to believe almost any sort of a tale in regard to their methods of temptation and evasions of the law. But the statement just made public that saloons are fitted up for children is almost past belief. Yet it is given out that in Chicago there are twenty saloons in which playrooms, with toys and other accessories, are provided for children. In one section there are saloons "which cater especially to young girls in short dresses and children." In these saloons alcohol candies and liquors are served the little patrons. It seems to us that this is "making a mock at sin"—going further than Satan himself would go for the destruction of the human race. The whisky curse is properly called "the whisky devil." The tighter he gets his clutches on the throat of the American people, the more they seem determined to appease his appetite. When will we learn that "the whisky devil' is foe to both God and man?

LETTER FROM 'GILDEROY."

This seems to be the age of organization, of wheels within wheels. It is difficult to keep up. It confuses one to see the wheels run. We have the church, and the church has the Sunday-school, the teachers' meeting, the prayer meeting, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, the Parsonage and Home Mission Society, the Epworth League (Senior and Junior), the Juvenile Missionary Society, and now it is proposed to add an Order of Deaconesses. What next? It seems to me we are about to organize the organization to death. I like to attend all the meetings of all the societies in my church. I want to know what they do, and how they do it. They are getting almost too many for me now. It keeps me in a long trot to keep up with them, and it is a prodigious effort of memory to keep the announcements to be made straight. Churches, like individuals, follow the fashion. The Methodist Church must have something to match everything any other church has, and so it comes to be a race to see which or which will have the newest and latest thing. In some instances this rage for organization passes the stage of emulation and runs into downright rivalry, and so far into sin. If these things grow for the next forty years as they have for the past forty, the church will come to be an organization of organizations. It will not be even a committee of the whole. The legitimate work of the church as a whole will be farmed out to societies and committees. The individual and personal responsibility of the members will be transferred to some one, or more, of these societies. It is somewhat this way now in some places, in our own church and in other churches. If one attends his society, or societies, why, he has attended his church, and is released from any further obligation. "I belong to this or that society" is regarded as a sufficient excuse for neglecting every other duty. In some churches the choir is a separate and distinct, if not antagonistic organization, and the members of it are "tony at the wheel" there, and they pull nowhere else. If they sing on Sunday, there is no other obligation resting upon them in any other department. There be some good souls in every church who love God and his holy cause, and they are ready to pull anywhere and everywhere that proposes to glorify God and bless human souls. The number of such in any given church is never very large. They are select and elect according to the foreknowledge of God and through the sanctification of the Spirit. God bless such. They are the backbone and life of the church.

In some places there is a growing tendency to badges and millinery to distinguish the societies to which each party belongs. I get badly mixed on the colors, and yet I am not color-blind—not so far as I know. It may be that, owing to the multiplication of societies in the church, badges and millinery may be necessary to prevent confusion, but I must confess to a dislike for end a dread of millinery in religious matters. The natural tendency is to "broaden the phylacteries;" to make up in clothes what one lacks in piety. It seems to me the banner of the cross ought to be the single and sufficient ensign of the army of the Lord. I suppose an Order of Deaconesses will call for a style of dress to mark them wherever they go. I may get used to it in the end, but I shall not like it, to begin with. GILDEROY.

Nov. 12, 1901.

REV. PINCKNEY A. JOHNSTON.

BY REV. D. P. BRADFORD.

Rev. Pinckney A. Johnston, son of Gideon and Beulah Johnston, was born in Cayuga, Hinds county, Miss., July 24, 1839; joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1856; was brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, in August, 1858. While attending Centenary College, at Jackson, La., he, with several others, was licensed to preach in 1859. Rev. Barnabas Pipkin was then presiding elder of the district. During the Fall of that year, while on a visit to Jackson, I heard Bro. Johnston preach. At his side in the pulpit sat John T. Hilliard, who went out in the army in 1861, and was elected ceptain of a company (I think from Clinton, La.), and fell at his post at the battle of Shiloh.

Bro. Johnston was received on trial in the Mississippi Conference in 1861; was ordained deacon by Bishop J. O. Andrew in 1863; was ordained elder by Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh, Dec. 3, 1871. He entered the Confederate Army as a volunteer in April, 1862, and in August of the same year was appointed chaplain. This relation he sustained until the cessation of hostilities. His experiences of these three years were rarely ever mentioned, even to most intimate friends. Soon after his return home he was married to Miss Hettie Siebe. Of this union five children were born. In 1866 he did not take work from the Conference, but spent much of his time in protracted meetings, where he was always efficient help. In 1867 he was junior preacher on Cayuga circuit. He did not take work in 1868. In 1869 he served Yalobusha circuit; 1870 the Kosciusko circuit. That year the North Mississippi Conference was formed. He remained in this new Conference in 1871, serving Kosciusko and Bethel. In December of this year he came back to his old Conference. He was stationed at Hazlehurst in 1872, and in 1873, at his own request, he was appointed to Gallman mission. In 1874-75 he was on Providence circuit; in 1876 he was put on the superunmerary list; 1877 he served Georgetown circuit; 1878, Caseyville circuit. It was during this year that she who had been the cheer and sunshine of the parsonage home was called to the life beyond. In 1879 he served Rankin charge; 1880 he was field agent for Whitworth Female College. But in the itinerant work, either as pastor or presiding elder, did he find the field alone that was congenial to his life. Jan. 14, 1880, he was married to Miss Mary E. Kelly, who, in his after life of faithful work, followed by some years of suffering, has been to him all that a wife could be. She, with four of the children—all Christians, and useful members of the church to which he gave his life—survive to rejoice in the life of such a husband and father. In 1881-82-83-84 he served Madison circuit; 1885, the Flora circuit; 1886-87, the East Feliciana circuit; 1888-89-90-91, he was presiding elder of the Brandon district; 1892-93-94, he was on the Woodville district. The General Conference of 1894 transferred a part of the territory forming this district to the Louisiana Conference; so he went with his district peronego into this (Louisiana) Conference. In 1895 he was presiding elder on the Baton Rouge district; 1896-97, he was stationed at Homer, La. Realizing that the hitherto strong physical man was gradually yielding to the effects of palsy, which had crept upon him, he asked for a superannuated relation in December, 1897. After spending awhile at Hazlehurst he came to Meridian, where three of the children were living. His brethren of the Mississippi Conference, appreciating the fact that his strong life had been given to this Conference, asked that he be transferred to us, that we might minister to him in his afflictions. His prayers, with his benedictions, had been ours, and we claimed the privilege of having his name upon our honor roll. Since coming to Meridian he has been a regular attendant at East End Church until his health prevented. The pastors of our churches here have visited him regularly. He was confined to his bed most of the time during this year. At times he would exclaim, "I am in a rapture of joy." During the last few days of his life his visions were glorious. At one time he started to tell Sister Johnston what he had just seen, but, pausing a moment, he said, "No, I won't tell it; the people will not believe it." The last nine days of his life he refused to take any nourishment, saying it only added to his suffering. For three days before the end came he would not even take a swallow of water. Finally, about 4:30 P. M., Sept. 26, he went sweetly into the beyond. Bros. Guice, Weems and Alford were at his side. I had been with him almost constantly for three days. I never saw greater devotion, nor more untiring attention given to a husband and father. The next day after his death he was buried from our East End Church, in which service the local pastors, with the presiding elder and Bro. D. G. W. Ellis, took part. Then we laid him to rest in Magnolia Cemetery, in the northern part of the city. Thus has passed from our midst one of our most efficient workmen, a strong revival preacher, at one time a fine singer, and a man of unusual power in prayer. We esteem it an honor that Dr. C. G. Andrews and Rev. P. A. Johnston preached their last sermons from our East End pulpit.

ANOTHER CLASS OF ITINERANTS.

BY REV. A. J. NOTESTINE.

This has been upon my mind for some time, and I have decided to set down some of my thoughts for what they are worth.

Every Methodist preacher knows some worthy and competent man, or men, who would be glad to enter our itinerant ranks, and who would be received by the Conference without hesitation, were it not for the fact that such reception involved responsibility on the part of the Conference for their support after they were no longer effective. As our law now stands, when a man enters the ministry late in life, has a large family, or is threatened with an early decease, these are considered sufficient grounds for his rejection by an Annual Conference, no matter what may be his gifts and graces. Is there no remedy? Can no arrangement be made that would be just to both parties by which such men might be fully identified with the work that is as dear to them as it is to us?

To employ them as local supplies does not cover the case. 1. It does not give them an equal standing with itinerants in the grade of appointments. 2. It does not ensure them of an appointment. 3. It does not give them an equal voice with the members of the Conference who are doing the same work.

These are real benefits, and sufficient to induce many to join our Conferences and give themselves wholly to the ministry without the benefits named to Conference claimants, if our General Conference would make such provision.

If it is objected that the Conference could have no right to bind men to the rules under which the regular itinerants labor without assuming the obligations now recognized by it, the answer is, that the contract would be voluntary, and the above-named benefits would be considered sufficient compensation, and I do not see how such an arrangement would conflict with any principle of our connectionalism.

Arcadia, La.

REV. W. B. HINES.

A TRIBUTE.

I wish to offer this tribute to the memory of my friend and brother, Rev. W. B. Hines, who has passed from this world of toil and care to his better inheritance above. In 1857 we first became intimate, he being my presiding elder for eight years. During these years we were together much of the time in protracted effort for the upbuilding of the cause of the Master. He was well versed in the doctrines of his church, and he was a man of prayer. Much of his time when not engaged in active labors was spent in communion with God. This gave him power with God. In his prayers for penitents it seemed, since God had promised, the blessing must come, and many were brought into the kingdom while he prayed. He was a success in his pastoral visits, often finding penitents in their homes, and helping them to saving faith in Christ; but his voice is hushed, and I shall clasp his hand no more on earth, but in a brighter clime. I hope to meet him again.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

This body convenes in Winona, Miss., on Dec. 4, 1901. The sessions will be held in the comfortable and commodious Methodist Church, and the people of Winona will do their best in entertaining same. My people feel the great honor and profit of an Annual Conference. May I call upon the membership, clerical and lay:

(1) To pray and plan for a great spiritual Conference. It is possible for preachers and people to backslide at Conference. To avoid this, we want to magnify the preaching of the gospel. I believe it the better way for the Boards to have their anniversaries in the body of the Conference, and give the afternoon and evening hour to the preaching of the Word. I hope that the Boards will not appoint an evening hour for their anniversaries. The spirituality of the occasion will, furthermore, be advanced by the devotions of the preachers in the homes of the people. A mother asks me to send her "two spiritual preachers," who can help her boys. I hope that every preacher will pray in the homes of the people, and talk experience. I shall urge the people to prepare the way for such in their homes. Conferences "of old" were characterized by conversions and Pentecosts, and have taken their place in history according to their spiritual power. May the approaching one stand at the head of the list! The chief end can be further enchanced by a warmer, deeper fraternity among the preachers. Of course, every preacher loves every other preacher; yet we are human, have been critical, and sometimes ungnarded. If one preacher has been tempted into estrangement (even comparative) from any of his brethren, let them meet at Conference, talk it over, forgive one another; then the love-feast will be a great occasion. Brethren, let us not criticise each other, nor envy, nor judge, nor think evil of our brethren.

(2) May I call upon the preachers to help us in our purpose to give the most satisfactory entertainment? (a) By writing me if their wives expect to attend, and to write me promptly if, after they have been assigned homes, they find they can not attend. (b) By writing their hosts, after assignment of homes, just when they will arrive—i. e., what train and what railroad. (c) By avoiding arrival on night trains on the I. C. R. R., as they reach here between midnight and day, and it will greatly inconvenience hosts to receive guests at such hours. Let every member, if possible, be here by Tuesday evening's service hour. (d) By preserving cards of assignment (when they are sent out), and bringing them with them. They will be "letters of introduction" to the homes.

When you pray, remember the Conference, and let us make it a memorable gathering of the hosts.

J. C. PARK, Pastor.

DEFECTIVE STATISTICS.

In studying the Minutes of the Southwest Missouri Conference, which my friend, Bro. J. M. Boon, has just sent me, and the Minutes of our last Conference, I am moved to write a few lines, which I hope the preachers will read.

At the last session of the Southwest Missouri Conference a decrease of 354 in membership was reported. By adding the number received on profession of faith and those received in other ways, I found that 3,305 had been received in the bounds of that Conference this year. The number who had died and removed for other causes was 2,337, which ought to have given an increase of 968, and yet the statistical secretary reports a loss of 354 members. The Minutes of our Conference show that in 1899 we had 45,372 members, and in 1900 45,039—a decrease of 333; yet in 1900 we received 3,865 into the church. The statistical tables do not show the number of deaths or removals. But it is plain to me that there is much carelessness—or inaccuracy, at least—in making out the reports.

Now, I ask each pastor to exercise the greatest diligence in preparing his report this year. Do your utmost to get the figures of your predecessor as a basis, and make your report accurate. T. W. LEWIS.

THE NEXT GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The next General Conference of our church, to be held in Dallas, Texas, next May, will be one of the most important we have ever had. Matters of grave importance will come before that body. Some thoughtful men among us consider it a crisis in the history of our church. In view of this fact, we ought to be careful in the selection of delegates to that body. The Mississippi Conference will be entitled to six delegates—three clerical and three lay. Let us send the best men we have. No man should be voted for as a mere compliment, or for favoritism or partiality. Let every member of the Conference put on his thinking-cap, and select wise and good men for this responsible position. Let us have broad, prudent, safe men; men who are true to God and true to Methodism; men whom we can trust in the most delicate and difficult of places. In much prayer, and with an eye single to the glory of God, should we decide whom to vote for.

BE CANDID AND TRUE.

I would appeal especially to young preachers to always be candid, transparent, honorable, truthful, never saying or doing anything they would be ashamed for all to know. Sometimes the temptation is great and hard to resist, but let them resist it. People will come to them occasionally and say, "We desire you as our preacher next year. Brother —— is not popular with our people. Are you willing to serve us?" Refuse absolutely to have anything to do with such propositions. Never consent to displace another for your seeming advantage. What blunders preachers sometimes make by a little wire-pulling for place, or a little scheming for money! In the end they fail, and become sour and disagreeable, and die unwept except by a few. This is not all guess work. I have known such of all the classes mentioned. I have known them in the school-room, in the college, in the Legislature, in the Congress, on the judge's bench, and in other positions. People treat them respectfully, but have no confidence in their truthfulness or integrity. Be no trickster, no supplanter, but be honorable, high-toned, truthful. Be open and candid, so that all who know you will trust you absolutely. In this event life will be worth living, will be in the highest sense a success. People will consult you, seeking your counsel, and when you sleep in the grave, your influence will go on blessing mankind.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

A GROUNDLESS FICTION.

There is nothing more irritating than the spectacle of a young minister who takes it for granted that the mere fact of his being in a high and holy office, without any reference to the quality of his manhood, the extent of his attainments, and the value of his work, entitles him to special consideration of any sort. A worthless fellow in the ministry is just a worthless fellow, and the notion that he is anything more is a groundless fiction. There is the gravest imaginable incongruity between the dignity of his calling and the manner of his life. It is his duty, for example, to be a teacher. But how can he teach if he is an ignoramus? It is his duty to lead others into the paths of holiness. But how can he lead if he knows not the way? What quickening force can come out of him if his own soul is dry and withered? A stupid minister, an indolent minister, a pleasure-loving minister, a selfish minister, a minister not wholly surrendered to God, is pretty sure to be despised by everybody that knows him—and he has no right to complain.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

JOHN WESLEY.

John Wesley, the great preacher and revivalist, saved the English-speaking world from the scepticism of Voltaire and the madness of the French revolutionists. Much that Voltaire and Tom Paine wrote is now accepted and paraphrased by certain of the "critics" who continue to claim Christian faith after applying corrosive acids to many pages of the Holy Scriptures. Their sort did not produce the Wesleyan movement. It was not "baptized infidelity" which set that great revival going. It can not be continued by a faith less confident than Mr. Wesley's. Scepticism in the English pulpit produced the parched era which Mr. Wesley's preaching reclaimed from utter sterility. When the theories which produced such barrenness begin to receive favor in Methodist pulpits, we may look out for a time of drought. If we would preach with Mr. Wesley's power, we must believe with Mr. Wesley's confidence. "I believed, therefore have I spoken," said both the Psalmist and St. Paul. When men quit believing, it is time for them to quit talking.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

THE MAN BEHIND THE GUN.

A great deal has been said about "the men behind the guns." That truth applies with equal force to other positions in life. It is the man behind the sermon; the woman behind the song; the man behind the lesson; the woman behind the advice. Sermons and songs and lessons and advice mean as little as the twittering of sparrows without character back of all. The father may say, "Do as I say, and not as I do," but the boy will go on doing what he sees his father do. In the commercial world much depends upon the man behind the yardstick or the sample or the desk. Individuality shows itself in force even in the boy behind the blacking brush. It is not place, but power, that tells. One Congressman moves things; another draws a salary only. One preacher puts a church to action; another lets the same church die on his hands. One steward is worthy of the name; another is—stewed. The old world needs nothing half so much as manhood.—Midland Methodist.

THE MODE OF WATER BAPTISM.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

THE METHODIST STANDARDS.

In the Discipline of the M. E. Church, South, there is in the ritual the following paragraph: "Then shall the minister take each person to be baptized by the right hand, and placing him conveniently by the font according to his discretion, shall ask the name, and then shall sprinkle or pour water upon him (or if he shall desire it, shall immerse him in water), saying," etc.

The writer hopes the time will soon come when the General Conference will take out of our ritual the above clause in parenthesis, and make our ritual more consistent with the Scriptures and the accepted standards of the church, for, without a single exception, there is not an immersionist amongst them. The clause is not only "at war with itself, but with the standards" and the conscience of thousands of Methodist preachers. To leave it in the Discipline, and enforce it as "mandatory," would place the church in a terrible "predicament," when considered in the light of her standard writers. I have never regarded the clause other than "advisory," and I do not believe it was ever intended as compulsory. Had it been intended as mandatory and constitutional, it would have been given a more prominent place amidst our Discipline or Articles, and not hid away in back of Discipline in parenthetical clause. I am glad that its interpretation is left to each Annual Conference, and there are few, perhaps, that would locate a traveling preacher for refusing to immerse a candidate. To accept it as compulsory would, as the reader shall see, not only place the church in a ridiculous light, but would be emphasizing immersion more than sprinkling or pouring, which the church positively does not do.

If it should be asked how the clause in the ritual advising immersion, when the candidate desires it, comes to be there, the reply is, Our ritual is almost a "verbatim et literatim" copy of the ritual of the Episcopal Church, though in an abridged form. It was sent over by Mr. Wesley in its present form to the "Christmas Conference," together with the doctrinal statements. In his "Circular Letter" concerning the ritual to the "American Methodists" he only "advised" their following it, which was done. It is nowhere on record that the parenthetical clause in the ritual was ever adopted as a part of our doctrines. The ritual, as a whole, was simply followed as a matter of course, and to save giving "an immediate inference." The truth is, the parenthetical clause does not now, if ever it did, express the views either of our theologians or the ministry at large.

It is a matter of historical record that the early ministry in America prior to 1784 were without the authority to administer the sacrament. When their converts were baptized, they were baptized by Presbyterian and Episcopal clergymen by sprinkling. They refused positively to accept the Baptist doctrine of immersion with its concomitants. (See McTyeire's History, pages 320 and 321.)

Since the organization of Methodism in Europe and America, Wesley, Clarke, Watson, Ralston, Summers, et cetera, have thought and written, and they not only give sprinkling the preference, but they say plainly that immersion is not taught in the Bible.

Mr. Wesley, in his notes on Matt. iii, 6, not only says John baptized by sprinkling, but in his Journal (Vol. VI.), written many years afterwards, says: "And as there is no clear proof of dipping in the Scriptures, so there is very probable proof of the contrary. It is highly probable that the apostles themselves baptized great numbers, not by dipping, but by washing, sprinkling, or pouring."

From Mr. Wesley's note on Rom. vi, 4, he has often been set down by immersionists as favoring their view, but his more matured thought favored affusion without a peradventure. In fact, there never was a time when he did not regard sprinkling as scriptural, which he could not say of immersion.

Adam Clarke, another Methodist sage, says, "Immersion could never have comported either with decency or safety."

Mr. Watson, one of the standards of the church, and "the Samson of theological controversy in Methodist circles," calls immersion "an invention" after apostolic times, as having been "imposed" upon the church "stark naked."

Mr. Summers, whose book on baptism the church makes compulsory upon her undergraduates to study, calls immersion "a mangling of the Savior's ordinance." He says "the inspired records give testimony" that the mode "is by affusion, and not by immersion." He concludes that if immersion is "valid," it is "not by consequence" of the mode, "but in spite of it."

Even Pope's Higher Catechism speaks of immersion under the head of "patristic error," and concludes that "it is highly probable that the original practice was pouring or sprinkling."

The above writers not only apply such names to immersion as "indecent," "an invention," "destitute of all scriptural authority," "offensive to delicacy," "originating in will worship," "dangerous to health," "imposed upon the church stark naked," etc., but in the reading and examination of twenty other books and pamphlets written by Methodist preachers alone, their position has been found identical, and they are a unit in declaring that immersion is without scriptural authority. However, the ritual itself gives the precedence to affusion, and regards immersion with such little favor that the mode is placed in parenthesis. It was positively not in parenthesis in the Episcopal ritual, and the change made by Mr. Wesley is quite significant. If it were originally intended as binding, why did he hide it in a parenthesis? A parenthesis is a method by which writers use words which "interrupt the sense and natural connection," etc. It is also something which makes good sense by being "left out" altogether.

Certainly immersion "interrupts" both the "sense and natural" teaching of the Scriptures, as well as the "sense" of our standards, and if ever the writer is elected a delegate to the General Conference, he will make a speech favoring the displacement of the above parenthetical clause so at variance with the standards of the church and the conscience of thousands of his ministerial brethren. It is a thorn in the conscience of a large number, whether it is to be received as "advisory" or "mandatory."

(To be concluded.)

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NEWS.

Professor G. W. Hoddleston has been ill for the past few days, but is now able to resume his classes.

Professor A. M. Muckenfuss has moved into his new residence on West street, opposite the new Capitol.

Our table is brightened this week by the presence of the Collegian, the new October number reaching us at the close of the month. This popular magazine has been successfully issued for the past three years, and has taken high rank among college journals. The editors feel the responsibility as well as the honor which has been placed upon them in their selection, and this year they have gone enthusiastically to work to make the best magazine the college has ever put out. Judging by this new number, we think it likely they will succeed. The front is adorned with a handsome drawing, designed by a member of the staff, and the general typography is excellent. This number contains the speech of W. L. Duren on "The Political Isolation of the South," which recently took the medal in the Mississippi Oratorical Contest, and in the Southern Interstate Contest at Monteagle, Tenn. The number also contains a story by W. A. Williams, of the Senior class. Of notable excellence is the poem, "A Senior Greeting," by J. R. Countiss. The literary chat, locals and editorials are all well presented.

President W. B. Murrah, spent Sunday at Brooklyn, Miss., taking part in the dedication of a new church.

Wm. Walter Holmes, of the class of 1900, who has been attending Vanderbilt University for a year, and who is now in charge of West End Church, Meridian, visited the college this week. Bro. Holmes was successful in many ways at Vanderbilt, standing high in his classes, and winning the Young medal in oratory.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss.

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

PROF. HAMILL.

As the time for the meeting of our three Annual Conferences is near at hand, it may not be amiss to again urge upon the brethren the importance—yea, the necessity—of securing the services of Prof. Hamill for an Institute during the coming year. It would be well, if possible, to hold it during the Spring or early Summer months. And I trust the brethren will not think us presumptuous or over-zealous, because we assure them it comes from a heart full of love for the cause, and a burning desire to see our Sunday-school methods improved. One good pastor recently told us that his Sunday-school was accomplishing nothing, and from all over our two sister States comes to us the complaint of a lack of teachers and a woful lack of trained workers. Until we began the work of our Sunday-school column, and got in touch with the whole field, we were ignorant that the need was so great or the demand so pressing. If the Sunday-school is the nursery of the church, if from its ranks comes the largest and best membership of the church, and if in the Sunday-school is trained her future workers, it is all-important that the church should give the Sunday-school every possible advantage and the benefit of the best training talent. The church should surround the Sunday-school with conditions that would ensure the largest success and the most efficient work. Would to God we could impress these truths upon every member of our church.

For these reasons we urge every member of our three Conferences to study the needs of our Sunday-schools, so that they can act intelligently. It is the advice of some brethren, whose judgment we esteem, that it would be best to hold an Institute and Convention combined, because it would insure a larger attendance than could be gotten for either if they were held separately. If such should be the mature judgment of our Conferences and our Sunday school Boards, we would urge upon each of them to invite Prof. Hamill, and arrange with him for a programme and a date.

We are not wedded to any particular plan, but we are wedded to the idea of having Prof. Hamill with us early and often. He has come to our Southern Methodist Church for the particular purpose of training our Sunday-school teachers and improving our Sunday-school methods. Let Louisiana and Mississippi be among the first to avail themselves of his services.

THE TEACHERS' MEETING.

There is a tendency among many schools to ignore the teachers' meeting. Superintendents and teachers will give a hearty assent to the proposition that one ought to be held; but when it comes to the effort and self-sacrifice necessary to make the teachers' meeting a success, they are unwilling to pay the price. It does require effort. In these days of multiplied church machinery, in all our smaller churches the workers in one department are usually the workers in another. Sunday-school officers and teachers are usually busy people.

The teachers' meeting, however, is a very important piece of machinery. No Sunday-school can succeed and do good work without a design, a harmonious plan. The superintendent is the executive officer, and the teachers are his cabinet. Only by getting together regularly and discussing the needs of the school can the superintendent bring the teachers into thorough harmony with his plans, and insure their being carried out. At the teachers' meeting, also, the lesson for the following Sunday should be discussed, not studied; the main teaching-points and illustrations and the best methods of teaching them be brought out. The teachers' meeting is to the Sunday-school what the prayer meeting is to the church—a barometer indicating its life and spiritual condition.

Our Presbyterian brethren of the North have established a Normal Quarterly for Normal classes. Our own church has long had the same thing in our Magazine, and it is now going beyond what any other denomination has done by providing a course of study for teachers, and proposes to give a diploma upon its completion. Every officer and teacher should study carefully the Normal and training courses in the Magazine, and we trust that every one of them will take the course of study that is being prepared. We understand that it will be ready before the beginning of the next quarter.

Items from the Field.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Forest District Items.

BY REV. T. L. MELLEN.

DEAR DOCTOR BOSWELL: Six more Quarterly Conferences have been held on this fourth round, and only five remain to be held before the Annual Conference. The Decatur Quarterly Conference was the first held, and was by no means satisfactory. The assessment for the Bishops' Fund is the only item in full. The assessment for foreign missions is $60—only $14 paid; that for domestic missions, $25—only $5 paid; that for Conference claimants, $40—only $17.50 paid; church extension, $18—only $5 paid; education, $12—only $5 paid; American Bible Society, $7—paid, $5; total assessments (including $3.50 for expenses of delegates to the General Conference brought over from last year), $165.50; total payments up to the fourth Quarterly Conference, $57.10. There are more than four hundred members on this circuit. A little over 50 per cent. has been paid on the very small assessments for ministerial support.

As usual, it was good to be with our Choctaws and Bro. Donnell at Cammack Chapel. The Sunday-school has raised $2 for foreign missions. There have been 29 conversions and accessions this year.

The Neshoba Quarterly Conference was in marked contrast with that of Decatur, and was a decided improvement on the preceding Conferences for Neshoba. Bro. Saunders and Bro. Guice have the Conference collections well in hand, and what has not already been collected is assured and secured. There will be no deficits save on the allowances of the preachers, who deserve far more than the small amounts assessed the five hundred members for their support. The contract for building the Philadelphia Church had been let, and the work was soon to begin.

But the most pleasant surprise was in store at the Walnut Grove Quarterly Conference, where, for the first time in the history of that circuit, the assessments for foreign missions and Conference claimants were paid in full, and only $27 lacking to pay all assessments except the allowances for ministerial support; but assurances were given that Walnut Grove, Pine Grove and White Plains Churches would pay their assessments in full—and the last two do even better than that. Although the strongest church, financially, and next to Walnut Grove, numerically, was unrepresented, yet it was, no doubt, the most delightful Quarterly Conference ever held on that circuit. Bro. Crossley has been faithful and has a warm place in the hearts of his people, especially the young men.

Monday, Nov. 4, the fourth Conference for the Carthage circuit was held, and was a disappointing occasion. The attendance of the officials was very slim, especially of those resident in Carthage. One brother—a new convert, however—had ridden twenty-five miles with the assistant preacher to meet with us. He was cordially greeted. While the reports showed many conversions and accessions—for which I devoutly thank God—there were other and very disheartening features. The allowance for the preacher-in charge was sadly in arrears and the assistant preacher had received only $40.75 for his year's labor. On an assessment of $385, the Carthage Church was $128.20 in default; Liberty, with about 100 members, was still due $35 on an assessment of only $60; and Rocky Point, with a membership strong in numbers and in means, had paid only $22.25 on an assessment of $100. The Conference collections were far in arrear of the assessments. Conference claimants, $50—paid $18.10; foreign missions, $60—paid $31; domestic missions, $23—paid $5; church extension, $20—paid $5; education, $14—paid $2.50; American Bible Society, $8—paid $2; total assessment, $175; paid, $63.60; unpaid, $111.40. And there are about 500 members on this circuit, and $200, or more, can be paid annually to keep up a camp ground independent of the church, but the missionaries and Conference claimants may do without!

Tuesday, Nov. 5, was the time for the Harperville Quarterly Conference at Oak Grove School-house. Only a few officials were present. The reports showed this circuit to be in the same category with Carthage and Decatur. Assessed for Conference claimants, $36—paid $15.43; foreign missions, $46—paid $21; domestic missions, $16—paid $5; church extension, $15—paid $4; education, $10—paid $1; American Bible Society, $5—paid $1; total assessed, $128; paid, $47.43; unpaid, $80.57. And the membership numbers nearly 400, and includes merchants, doctors, and a number of very successful farmers. The payments on the allowances for ministerial support are slightly in excess of those at the same date last year. Dr. Miller and his stewards are hopeful of getting something more on all the collections; and so is Bro. White and the Carthage stewards.

And last I should not be utterly cast down over the conditions of Harperville and Carthage, there were awaiting my arrival a postal card from D. C. Langford, P. C., Trenton circuit, Nov. 1, saying: "I am getting in some on my collections; have receipts for $50 on foreign missions. I will get it in full. We are ahead of the past two years on salary, and will get more;" and a postal from W. W. Morse, P. C., Montrose, Oct. 31: "I have just returned from Holder and Mt. Zion; was gone eight and a half days; preached 6 times, baptized 2 babies, made 46 visits, and collected $46.25, of which $30 was on Conference collections. No doubt about all my collections being in full. Glory to God!" [He is almost as happy as Bro. Dominick!] "The stewards are hopeful also."

An earnest, persistent, prayerful effort on the part of the preachers-in-charge and of the official brethren will put the Forest district in "Class A," not only in the matter of foreign missions, but of every other church benevolence. It can be done. May the brethren determine that it must and shall be done!

The Forest district is represented at Millsaps College by 22 students, at Whitworth by 9, and at East Mississippi by 8 or 9.

Besides the Philadelphia Church, committees have been appointed for one new church on the Walnut Grove circuit, two on Carthage circuit, two

Get the Most Out of Your Food

You don't and can't if your stomach is weak. A weak stomach does not digest all that is ordinarily taken into it. It gets tired easily, and what it fails to digest is wasted.

Among the signs of a weak stomach are uneasiness after eating, fits of nervous headache, and disagreeable belching.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla at different times for stomach troubles, and a run down condition of the system, and have been greatly benefited by its use. I would not be without it in my family. SUMMIT CIRCUIT.

DEAR ADVOCATE: I enclose a clipping from our local paper, the Summit Sentinel, which gives some idea of what God hath done for us at Bogue Chitto, "whereof we are glad." It signifies yet more—that some days after the meeting closed the pastor and his wife visited that church and organized a W. H. M. Society of fourteen members. On the same Thursday night nearly sixty people attended prayer meeting. When we get our Epworth League organized that church will be well harnessed for work.

"On Sunday, Oct. 13, Rev. A. F. Watkins, D. D., president of Whitworth College, began aiding the pastor in revival services at the Methodist Church. He was already well known and beloved. The attendance was good from the start, and grew better to the close of the revival—Monday night, the twenty-first. During these beautiful nine days the people gave steady and close attention to our meetings. Stores were closed, so that even the day services led by the pastor, were attended largely. All Christians co-operated, helping in the singing and many ways.

"Dr. Watkins was at his best, and that is saying much. Such original, pithy, pointed and true preaching is seldom heard anywhere. He won many new friends and admirers. Many came for prayers. Eighteen names were added to the church rolls. Fifty or sixty persons said they were blessed by the meetings.

"Those who think Bogue Chitto people looking in orderly conduct should have been present to see the unusually quiet and attentive audiences that attended both night and day."

We are now holding a series of meetings at Summit, with encouraging prospects. Our gifted and energetic young presiding elder, B. F. Jones, came to our aid Monday, and stayed three days. Then our "all-round" good helper, W. T. Griffin, struck manfully for the Master two days. We expect to have much more to report next week.

Yours in good hope,

J. P. DRAKE.

JACKSON, MISS

DEAR BROTHER: We have just closed a revival meeting in Capitol Street Church, resulting in the rebirth of many souls, and the awakening of others that have fallen asleep. The preaching was done by Dr. W. M. McIntosh, president of Grenada Female College, whose ability and success as a revivalist are too well known for commendation here. His power seems to lie in his personal consecration, in his deep spirituality, and in his intense earnestness.

So far as we know, the meeting was attended by members of nearly every church in Jackson, and, with one exception, we had the presence and co-operation of all the pastors. The influence of the revival was felt in every part of the city, especially at Millsaps College. Many of the students attended the meeting, and by their hearty co-operation and excellent singing contributed much to its success. Dr. Murrah and several members of the faculty gladdened us by their presence.

Last Sunday morning we received eighteen persons on profession of faith, making sixty accessions during the year up to this time, with others to follow.

From present indications, our financial obligations will all be met in full, and the close of the Conference year will find Capitol Street Church in more prosperous condition in every way than ever before.

Yours fraternally,

C. F. EMERY.

RALEIGH, MISS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I wish to mention three very fine meetings on this, the Raleigh circuit, Forest district, Mississippi Conference.

1. At Twistwood, four miles east of town. Assisted a part of the time by Rev. J. E. Williams. Fifteen were converted, 8 entire sanctifications, and 10 accessions; church greatly revived.

2. At Raleigh. Rev. R. A. Breland, from Wesson, Miss., did all the preaching; continued for 9 days. One hundred were converted, 50 sanctified, 25 accessions; almost the entire town saved. Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist made one in Christ. The hosts will now pray, work, and pay. I never saw a better meeting, nor had better help. The financial question is solved here—i. e., get the people sanctified and "out and out for God." Eternity alone will reveal the good done here.

3. At Trinity. Assisted by Bro. Breland. Victory came, and 25 were converted, 15 sanctified, and 7 added to the church. Finances up.

Brethren, it pays to preach full salvation; salvation from all sin in heart and life.

Two more meetings to hold; then off for Conference, to go anywhere God wants me. Collections will be in full. In Him, R. S. GALE.

HARRISTON CIRCUIT, NATCHEZ DISTRICT.

MR. EDITOR: I am now closing out my second year on the Harriston circuit, and it has been a very successful year in many respects. We have held seven meetings during the Summer; all very successful meetings. Was assisted by the following brethren: Revs I. L. Peebles, of Wesson, Miss.; J. G. Cammack, of Rolling Fork, Miss.; W. H. Lewis, of Utica, Miss.; Ira B. Robertson, of Roxie, Miss; L. S. Jones, of Port Gibson, Miss., and J. T. Abney, of Natchez, Miss.—all of whom did excellent work. We have had 47 accessions—a net gain of 22 up to date—and still they come. We are very hopeful now that the Conference collections will all be paid in full. God grant they may. My own salary may fall a little short; I hope not. The people have been very kind and appreciative, and we are very thankful. God bless them all.

At Cane Ridge Church we have had accessions to our membership every preaching day for five months. That is as it ought to be.

God bless you, Mr. Editor, and our ADVOCATE. Pray for us.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WINONA, MISS.

DR. BOSWELL: We have just closed a splendid revival at Winona. The meetings continued two weeks, during which the whole town was reached, and hundreds pledged themselves to a better life. Old differences were settled, family altars erected, the whole church and town revived, and it is conservative to say the church here was never in better condition than now. Twenty-one persons have applied for membership.

An improved and enlarged district parsonage, practically a new station parsonage, an improved circuit parsonage, furnish evidence of life in Winona Methodism.

Rev. Theo. Copeland, of Birmingham, did the preaching the last ten days of the meeting. I weigh my words carefully when I say he "captured the town." Handsome, easy in manner, earnest in address (sometimes eloquent), a lover of men, fearless in denunciation of sin, yet warm in his love for the sinner, he just suited our people. A pastor himself, all his work is in line with the machinery of the church. He magnifies church offices; makes preachers and people feel that it's a great thing to be a presiding elder, a pastor, a steward, a Sunday-school superintendent or teacher. No man ever helped me who did me and my people more good.

Saturday night my congregation came down upon the parsonage like an avalanche. Such a "pounding" I never received before. Everything from the size of a barrel of flour to candy for the children came. Our large new pantry groans under its burden of palative delights, and we are ready to assist in entertaining the Conference. Let us pray for a great spiritual Conference.

HOLLY SPRINGS CIRCUIT.

DEAR ADVOCATE: We have had some good revivals on the work, the churches much built up, many conversions; old troubles, some of long standing buried, we hope, forever. Our work, generally, is in good condition. We hope to report a net increase of between sixty and seventy members. We have lost some members, and will lose more. We will have a net increase of forty per cent., or more, in membership. Our Sunday-schools are expecting to go through the Winter with colors flying. We have one League, which, though at a country church, has no symptoms of death. We are taking a Bible study, converting the League into Bible class and class meeting. We are studying the Bible with reference to the fundamental truths of Christianity, and not at random. We are now hard at work on the general collections. We hope to report one half as much on the collections as was assessed for preacher-in-charge. As this is our third year in Conference, we are kept close at work to bring up all the corners.

We are expecting our district to make the best report for years. The preachers have been doing some good work. Our presiding elder, leading the forces, is doing excellent service for the Master. We hope our Conference will return him.

A CLUB OFFER.

On another page will be found our offer to club with THE COMMONER, Mr. Bryan's paper. It is one of the sprightliest and best-edited papers in the country. Mr. Bryan, late candidate for the presidency, has thousands of admirers in Louisiana and Mississippi who will be glad to read his paper.

We will send the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and The Commoner for one year for TWO DOLLARS AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS; cash with the order. Read the advertisement. Send orders to

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

No man can voluntarily suspend the performance of his religious duties without suffering loss of spiritual life. No sort of excuse short of actual inability can justify such a course. Even the redoubling of diligence in one direction can not atone for failure in another. There is no provision in the gospel for that kind of vicariousness.

It is far better to take the world as we find it, and content ourselves as best we can, than to be always at outs with our surroundings. To be forever complaining and fault-finding will undermine faith and blast hope, and saturate the whole being with sourness. "It is better to dwell in the corner of a housetop" than with one who is not in sympathy with the world. He lives in misery, and makes unhappiness wherever he goes.

It has been discovered, "according to an old church book," that a Baptist society existed at Cowie, England, as far back as 1599. That is nothing. It is also reported that the old stone baptistery in which St. Peter immersed his converts at Rome has been discovered. If the alleged discovery does not turn out to be a canard, we expect Brother Eaton, when he leads another pilgrim band to the East, to go by Rome, and take a peep at that baptistery. Wouldn't a relic be worth seeing?

A good brother, reporting a meeting and complimenting the preacher, deplored the fact that he left before any material results were realized, and added: "If he could have remained longer, a great revival seemed to be in sight." That brother is not the only man that ever saw bright revival prospects blasted by the leaving of a preacher (we suppose that is what he meant), even when the work was zealously continued by a faithful pastor. Not only will prospects be blasted, but revivals, so called, will be killed if there is more dependence on the man than on the Lord, which sometimes appears to be the case.

THE VACANT PULPIT.

There is no such thing as a vacant pulpit in Episcopal Methodism. Occasionally a church runs down and finally dies, and is left off the plan of work. There is no pulpit to be vacant. The few members remaining, if any, are transferred to other points. The building, if worth anything, is disposed of by the Quarterly Conference. But all live churches are supplied with pastors. This can not be said of independent, or congregational, churches. With such there are vacancies, and they may occur at any time. No matter from what cause, the vacancy can not be regarded by interested parties—the pastor on the one hand, and the congregation on the other—as always pleasant. A pastor may be ever so glad to get away from a place, and the people ever so glad to get rid of the pastor, but unless the thoughts and wishes of each have been anticipated, and all necessary arrangements made in advance of the change, the preacher is all anxiety to secure another pulpit, and the people to find another pastor.

Referring to the vacant pulpit, the New York Evangelist says some very serious things. The opening paragraph is as follows:

"The Vacant Pulpit: It is an agony and an opportunity; it gives pain and it offers inducement to change. The frank confessions of pastors, the covert confessions of applicants, let us know what a stir among settled men one vacancy can make. To the agony of the vacant church and the pulpit committee we must add the agonies of a multitude who are set to coveting a new place. It is not a thing to be cynically treated, for the facts are serious enough to give us sober pause."

Even outsiders know what troubles are sometimes occasioned by the vacant pulpit, and how long it takes to properly supply the place. But let nobody suppose that because no Methodist pulpits are vacant, there are no troubles connected with the frequent changes that occur in the itineraney.

We do not intend to convey the idea that there is friction in the working of the system. There may be some occasionally, but it is so little as to be inappreciable. Changes often occure contrary to the wishes of the people, as also to the preachers. One change necessarily demands another—possibly a half-dozen or more; and where such is the case, the pleasantest relations between pastors and people are broken up, which, in the very nature of the case, produces heartaches, but nothing like disruption or rebellion.

Long and expensive moves are sometimes required. This is an unpleasant feature, especially when one moves from among his life-long friends to a land of strangers. But we have seldom known a man to make a move of that kind, if he went in the spirit of the Master, and attended to his work faithfully, to fail in his mission, or to regret his change. He always finds more than compensation for his trouble. He verifies, as far as possible this side of heaven, the promise of his Lord as given by Matt. xix, 29.

On the whole, we think it far better to put a preacher to some trouble and sacrifice, and to disappoint a church who anxiously awaits the announcement of the appointments, than to leave one or a dozen pulpits vacant for a year, or more. Appointments are not always just what they should be; there are misfits even when the preacher is one of the best, and the people thoroughly loyal to the church. But, if the mistake can not be remedied immediately, preacher and people know that the appointment is only for a year, and make up their mind to maintain cordial relations for that length of time.

As one of the laborers, after more than forty years of toil, we have no complaint to make; no modifications to suggest. Our system has justified itself, not only by the ease with which it works and supplies the world with the gospel but by its marvelous success.

PERSONAL CONSECRATION

We have heard more of the doctrine of consecration during the last ten years than during all the previous years of our life. We have heard much that is true and edifying, and much that is far-fetched and utterly confusing. From some things we have heard and seen it would have been quite impossible to determine whether the duty of consecration carried with it the idea of personal surrender to God, with a view to present and personal enjoyment, or the idea of consecration solely with a view to doing good to others. Different hearers would understand the same harangue in different ways, and be inspired to act according to their understanding. Hence some would give themselves to God and go into perfect ecstasy, so happy would they become, and so remain, under the impression that the whole of religion consisted in enjoyment. Others, equally as sincere and intent, having laid all on the altar, would give expression to their convictions by doing good.

It is possible with these divergent ideas to do hurt both to the soul and to the general cause of God. A man who feels thoroughly consecrated to God, and is satisfied with the personal enjoyment that he experiences, who does nothing but read and meditate, attend big meetings and ejaculate praises to God, is likely to become more or less of an enthusiast, not to say a fanatic. Such a man has missed the true idea of religion. He is literally worth nothing to the world as an exemplary Christian. On the other hand, the one who understands that he has no personal interest in religion save to do good as occasion requires, or who has no higher conception of religion than the misguided ones spoken of by our Lord in the closing words of his Sermon on the Mount, has missed the mark as clearly as the one who imagines that religion consists wholly in experience. Such a Christian is laboring under the idea that good works constitute both the ground of justification and the measure of reward.

Why should anyone be misled on a subject so plain and so vital? Consecration is the duty of all. "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price: therefore, glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." No duty can be made plainer. God through Christ accepts such a sacrifice, and gives to the consecrated soul an assurance of pardon and sonship by filling his soul with peace, and bearing witness to his spirit that he is born of God. Not until this is done will he be prepared to do good works that will in anywise be available in the sight of God. "If a man purge himself from these (from all iniquity), he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work."

Let no man be deceived on this subject. Let him come to God, bringing with him all he has, soul and body, family and estate, and lay all on the altar. Let him get the experience, deep, thorough, satisfactory. Let him shout long and loud, if he feels like it, but let him know that he is God's workman, and is expected to take his place in the ranks. His Christian life will then be satisfactory to himself, and a blessing to the church and the world. Otherwise he will be nothing more than a dead head in the church—a loser in the end. May the Lord help us to give ourselves to his service, and may we enter into his rest!

A SUGGESTION OR TWO.

Conference is near at hand. Many preachers and people are looking forward to changes. Many are fully satisfied, and are expecting things to move on just as they are for another year. Disappointments are in store. Preachers who are not thinking of moving will have to go. Some who expect to move, and think they ought to move, will be returned. The people, likewise, will be disappointed—maybe some of them displeased. There will be more or less talk and excitement. Some anxiety will be manifested—a great deal more will be felt than seen.

In our economy, though the preacher does not select his field, nor the people their pastor, there is nothing to hinder a free and full interchange of thought, so that everything may be so fully understood as to make as few mistakes as possible. The presiding elder ought to know all about a preacher's needs and qualifications, and all about the wants and ability and willingness of the people. To obtain such information is largely his business. If it becomes necessary to consult and express opinions, let it be done in the frankest possible way. We have known some brethren to talk to a preacher in such a way that he could not help believing they desired his return for another year, and then go directly to the presiding elder and tell him that "a change is necessary." They had no trouble in talking plainly to the presiding elder. He was a disinterested party. But it was a delicate matter as to the preacher, and they were not outspoken. Their manner of dealing was unfair to the preacher. Conference comes on, the preacher is moved, and he feels disappointed. This would not have been the case if the brethren had been perfectly frank.

The preachers are not always as frank as they should be—we are sorry to say. One brother—neither in Louisiana or Mississippi—was in great favor with his charge. With one consent they were anxious for his return. He expressed himself as heartily in favor of another year with them. Everybody was delighted at the prospect. When Conference met he asked to be moved. The people he left were hurt, and lost confidence in his integrity. The very best that can be said is, the preacher changed his mind after reaching Conference. That was strange conduct. Not many preachers do that way.

It is better to be frank and outspoken, or say nothing. If a preacher's return is desirable, say so. If it is not, tell the proper authorities. If anything is said to the preacher, let it be said as gently as possible, but in unmistakable terms. He will think none the less of you for plain dealing. As for the preachers, it is enough to say they can not afford to be two-faced.

A PERPLEXING PROBLEM.

A correspondent at the seat of an Annual Conference, in session last week, called attention to what he denominated a perplexing problem, viz.: the difficulty of satisfactorily stationing the preachers growing out of the fact that "there are more first-class preachers than first-class charges." A first-class charge, be it understood, is a charge made up of intelligent, progressive and liberal people. Neither the size of the town in which the charge is located, nor the numerical strength of the membership, counts for much. Nor is the field for usefulness and possibilities for expansion much considered. A big salary answers every demand. Plenty of first-class men are perfectly willing to retire to a small village or a country church on big pay. We have known village churches to try to work themselves up to first-class charges by promising exorbitant salaries if certain first-class men could be secured as pastors. And, strange to say, these first-class men consented to serve under the conditions named. Country charges can take the hint, and act on it, if they desire to come to the front.

It is harder to define a first-class man than it is to define a first-class charge—that is, if we are to judge by the notions of people, or of the preachers. Judged by a true standard, the first-class preachers are few—much fewer, we think, than the number of first-class charges. The number who take place in first class, or who are put there by injudicious and partial friends, are many. And because of this, there is trouble.

Our own notion is that a real, first-class man is easier to please, if he has an open field and fair opportunity, than the second- and third-class men. Such a man, whether he has filled the best station in his Conference, or the strongest district, if appointed to a weaker and less conspicuous work, will go in the spirit of his Master, and build it up. If he does not raise it to a first-class charge, he will edify the church and save souls, and that is his great business.

We do not know whether the secular press catches its ideas from the preachers, and proceeds to divide the ministry and the churches into classes, or whether it takes it for granted that the same conditions and classes maintain in the church as in the world. At any rate, the idea of divisions prevail, and the press makes the most of it possible, often to the detriment both of the church and ministry. These things ought not so to be. All gospel churches are first-class, and all true preachers are first-class. Were this recognized, there would be less trouble in stationing the preachers.

A FALSE ASSUMPTION.

It is earnestly insisted in certain quarters that Southern women who have a mind to work for God have no one to whom they can go for direction, and, perforce, must remain idle. Pray, what have our women been doing these hundred, and more, years past, and who, all along, have advised and directed? No set of women on earth have been more charitable, and more self-sacrificing in looking after the poor, and helping the afflicted, than our Southern Methodist women, and in all places, especially in our large cities, they have received the endorsement, the encouragement and the direction—when direction was needed—of faithful pastors. Now, to say that they have no one to whom they can go for direction is a reflection on the judgment and fidelity of our preachers. To say that the women, under the circumstances, must, of necessity, remain idle, is a reflection on our women. They naturally seek advice and direction, but if they fail to receive either, they are not going to be idle. And we do not believe for one moment that our pastors have become so indifferent to the claims of humanity as to force our women to band themselves together, and separate themselves from the great body of their sisters, for the purpose of carrying on, under a taking title, the charitable work of the church. We are not that far gone.

That there is a constantly increasing demand for more work and more workers is not denied, but that the demand is to be met by special legislation in calling out women and consecrating them apart from their sisters, we do not believe is at all necessary. If the women of our Home Mission Board can not devise some other plan than that of aping Rome, or our big sister north of us, then they had better defer the agitation of the deaconess movement, and wait for more light. In our judgment, there is some other solution of the city problem than putting uniformed women to work on the streets. Let us wait a while longer.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. T. Leggett, of Hazlehurst, Mississippi Conference, was married on the eleventh instant to Miss Josie Featherston, of Jackson. We congratulate Brother Leggett on his good fortune.

The Methodists of our city will join in a Union Thanksgiving service at Carondelet Street Church next Thursday. Rev. R. H. Wynn, pastor of Louisiana Avenue Church, has been selected to preach the sermon. We hope there will be a general coming together of our people.

We had the pleasure, on Saturday last, of half an hour's conversation with Dr. Murrah, president of Millsaps College. He was happy over the present condition of the college, and its prospects for future enlargement and success. We trust his most ardent hopes may be realized!

Mrs. Bishop J. C. Keener has been confined to her bed two weeks, or more, and at times seriously ill, but she is now improving, and hopes are entertained of her speedy recovery. The Bishop has been in unusually good health, but just now somewhat wearied in body watching by the bedside of his wife.

We regret very much to learn that Rev. J. W. Dorman, of Holly Springs, one of our best men, has transferred to the Memphis Conference. His going will prove a serious loss to North Mississippi. The loss of two such men as Bros. Dorman and Burroughs will be greatly felt. May the lines fall to these beloved brethren in pleasant places!

Rev. C. P. Smith, of the Louisiana Conference, has been transferred to the Arkansas Conference, and stationed at Central Church, Fort Smith. He has one among the best charges in the Conference, and, having served many of his members as pastor before Central Church was built, we know he has in his flock some of the choice men and women of the church. We pray the Lord's blessing on Bro. Smith and his charge.

Mrs. Clifford, wife of Rev. T. B. Clifford, pastor of Dryades Street Church, had an attack of sickness last week that created some uneasiness for a little while, but she rallied, and is now about well. Her illness kept Brother Clifford closely confined to home for several days. By the way, we have just learned that Brother Clifford has been transferred to the Arkansas Conference, and stationed at Dardanelle. He has a good appointment and a large field for usefulness.

Brother W. B. Thomson, the efficient treasurer of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions, is a loyal and active Methodist. He has just completed twenty-five years of service as superintendent of Louisiana Avenue Sunday-school. The anniversary did not pass unnoticed. The Sunday-school passed suitable resolutions acknowledging his worth and fidelity. His is an honorable record. The worth of such a man can not be estimated. It is above price. May Brother Thomson live long to bless the church!

Rev. M. Dickie, of our Brazil Mission Conference, has been temporarily relieved of work on account of an affliction of the throat. He is at present in New Orleans, rooming at 423 Hilary street, where he will remain several weeks. In the meantime he is being treated by one of the specialists of the city. Brother Dickie attended the Preachers' Meeting on Monday last, but as he is forbidden by his physician to do any public speaking, the brethren did not have the pleasure of hearing him talk. We hope his stay in our midst will be pleasant and beneficial.

The Commoner.

(Mr. Bryan's Paper)

The Commoner has attained within six months from date of the first issue a circulation of 100,000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the discussion of political, economic, and social problems. To the columns of The Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts; and his review of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

The Commoner's regular subscription price is $1 per year. We have arranged wit Mr. Bryan whereby we can furnish his paper and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE together for one year for $2.25. The regular subscription price of the two papers when subscribed for separately is $3 net. When remittance is made by personal check, ten cents extra will be charged.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

League Reports.

Any one who has attended the business meeting of the average Epworth League has no doubt been impressed with the fact that the majority of the officers have very little idea of the scope of the work of their department. The reports are nearly always verbal, and, as a rule, month after month they are on one or two items. If it is necessary to have these reports, it is also necessary that they should be written, and also that they should cover well-defined lines of work and be complete.

Our General Secretary has had prepared a very fine set of blanks on which the officers of the League should make their reports to the monthly business meeting. There is also a blank form for the report of the president of the League to the pastor. This sums up all the other reports, and puts before the pastor the work of the League in a nutshell.

I am convinced that the persistent use of this set of blanks, which can be bought for a few cents, will result in not only more intelligent officers, but a more intelligent League.

WM. G. EVANS.

There are two Leagues on the Grand Cane charge, the one at Grand Cane being one of the most constant in North Louisiana. It was organized by Rev. J. M. Brown about five or six years ago. The League at Stonewall has only lately been aroused from a ten months' nap, but it promises to be one of the best Leagues in this section.

The Grand Cane League is a little peculiar in its services—to say the least, the plans in vogue are novel. The meetings are held on Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The president presides, and after a song or two and prayer and a Scripture lesson, he has the roll called, and then has the minutes of the last Sunday's meeting read. A programme arranged by the third vice-president, which has been announced a week in advance, is then carried out. It consists of a reading or two, a vocal solo, duet or other music, a recitation, a short address and the topic, the Scripture references generally being all that is read. There is generally no connection between the first Scripture lesson, or anything else on the programme, and the topic. Every person taking part goes his own way, and we are at least sure of one thing—variety.

Some Facts about Cancer.

So far no serum has been discovered which will control or limit the disease. The knife, even in the hands of the most skilled operators, proves as deadly as the disease, and almost invariably there is a return, if the patient recovers from the operation. The burning plasters are too horrible to contemplate, and are barbarous in the extreme. The greatest stride to a cure of the disease has been made by the Dr. D. M. Bye Co., of Dallas, Tex. These well-known specialists have discovered a combination of Oils, which, in their effect on diseased tissue approaches the miraculous. The treatment is the result of thirty years study of this terrible disease and has been wrought out by patient labor. It is the only successful remedy known to medical science and has the highest endorsement from the medical profession, as well as from ministers and thousands who have been cured. Inquiries about the treatment gladly answered. Any who are interested may address Box 462, Dallas, Tex.

Conference Notices.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

First. The Committee and Class of the Third Year will please meet in the Methodist Church, city of Winona, Tuesday morning, Dec. 3, at 9 o'clock.

Second. All the railroads which touch our territory have agreed to give the usual reduction of fare for the benefit of our Conference session. Purchase your ticket at full fare to Winona, secure a certificate to that effect from your local agent, have the secretary to sign it at Conference, and your return ticket will cost only one cent a mile.

Third. I have not yet been able to find the Journal of our Conference which contains a record of our Conference sessions from 1882 to 1898. I have written to Baltimore with the hope that it had been left in the room where the last session of the General Conference was held, but no trace of the missing Journal could be found. I again ask for any information which anyone may have concerning the Journal. Does anyone know its whereabouts?

WOMAN'S KIDNEYS.

Thousands of Women Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

To Prove What the Great Kidney Remedy, Swamp-Root, Will Do for YOU, Every Reader of "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root investigated by "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" none seem to speak higher of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy than the one we publish this week for the benefit of our readers.

Mrs. H. N. Wheeler, of 117 High Rock St., Lynn, Mass., writes on Nov. 2, 1900: "About 18 months ago I had a very severe spell of sickness. I was extremely sick for three weeks and when I finally was able to leave my bed I was left with excruciating pains in my back. My water at times looked very like coffee. I could pass but little at a time, and then only after suffering great pain. My physical condition was such that I had no strength and was all run down. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, and while I

DID NOT KNOW I HAD KIDNEY TROUBLE.

I somehow felt certain that my kidneys were the cause of my trouble. My sister, Mrs. C. E. Littlefield, of Lynn, advised me to give Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root a trial. I procured a bottle and inside of three days commenced to get relief. I followed up that bottle with another, and at the completion of this one found I was completely cured. My strength returned, and to day I am as well as ever. My business is that of canvasser, I am on my feet a great deal of the time, and have to use much energy in getting around. My cure is therefore all the more remarkable, and I exceedingly gratifying to me." MRS. H. N. WHEELER.

Swamp Root will do just as much for any housewife whose back is too weak to perform her necessary work, who is always tired and overwrought, who feels that the cares of life are more than she can stand. It is a boon to the weak and ailing.

MRS. H. N. WHEELER.

How to Find Out If You Need Swamp-Root.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work. So when your kidneys are weak or out of order you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

Many women suffer untold misery because the nature of their disease is not correctly understood; in most cases they are led to believe that womb trouble or female weakness of some sort is responsible for their many ills, when in fact disordered kidneys are the chief cause of their distressing troubles.

Neuralgia, nervousness, headache, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, rheumatism, a dragging pain or dull ache in the back, weakness or bearing down sensation, profuse or scanty supply of urine, with strong odor, frequent desire to pass it night or day, with scalding or burning sensation—these are all unmistakable signs of kidney and bladder trouble.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are sleeplessness, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness, sallow, unhealthy complexion, plenty of ambition, but no strength.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

If you are already convinced that Swamp Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty cent and one-dollar bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

EDITORIAL NOTICE—Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder remedy, is so remarkably successful that a special arrangement has been made by which all of our readers who have not already tried it may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail. Also a book telling all about kidney and bladder troubles and containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured by Swamp-Root. In writing, be sure and mention reading this generous offer in NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

WHY HELEN KELLER IS HAPPY.

Who tires of reading about Helen Keller? This wonderful girl—deaf, blind and dumb—or at least dumb until recently—is perhaps the best-known and best-loved young woman in the land. We have followed her from those early days when the indomitable perseverance and marvelous skill of her teachers pierced through the shell in which a sad fortune had enclosed her beautiful soul. We have watched her progress, step by step, as the world has unfolded itself before her delighted appreciation. Of recent months we have seen her entering Radcliffe College, and taking honorable rank there. Unending effort has given her the faculty of speech, though she can hear no syllable that she utters. When chosen vice-president of her class she rose at the freshman luncheon, and said distinctly: "Classmates, it is a great pleasure, and I esteem it a great honor to be present and speak to you. I am glad to have an opportunity to thank the class for their kindness in electing me their vice-president, and I hope that I may become acquainted with many of you. Though I can not see you, I will soon know you by touching your hands." "Miss Keller," said one of her teachers the other day, "is really the happiest person I know of. And why? Because of the great obstacles she has overcome." Now, isn't that a secret worth knowing and practicing? We all want to be happy. Who is there of us that may not find this pathway to happiness; obstacles to be overcome. Fortunately for our feebler wills, they will not be Helen Keller's obstacles. We have those priceless possessions, our five senses. But as soon as we try to do things we shall run up against obstacles in sufficient abundance. The main thing is—to try to do things.

You are like Helen Keller. You are blind—blind to a world of thought and beauty. You are deaf—deaf to a myriad of voices of the unseen world. You are dumb—your lips closed to a thousand noble utterances that might inspire your friends and fellows. Oh, learn to see and to speak! Break through all barriers that shut you out from the best that is possible to you. Leap up the mountain side, not wait for the path to be blazed. You will find morasses, windrows, precipices, tangled thickets, dangerous beasts. Every foot of progress must be fought for. But as you go on rising higher and higher into ever widening and more glorious landscapes there will fill your soul a joy like that of this heroic blind girl, and it will be said of you, as of her, that you are among the happiest of mortals because of obstacles overcome.—Christian Endeavor World.

UNDER A BOY'S JACKET.

No one knows what possibilities of goodness and greatness are buttoned up under a boy's jacket. We should respect every boy, for he is sure to be good at something. Long ago a rector of the University of St. Andrews took a puny orphan youth between his knees, questioned him on his studies, and said: "My silly fatherless and motherless boy, it's ill to wit what God may make of thee yet." The boy, Andrew Melville, became a great man. On the grave of Schubert is written: "He gave much, but he promised more." Our boys give us much by their bright companionship, but they promise more.

Luther's schoolmaster, the famous Trebonious, used to take off his hat when he entered his schoolroom. "I uncover my head," he would say, "to honor the consuls, chancellors, doctors, masters, who shall proceed from this school." A school ought to be considered sacred, for it is the place, under God, where the infinitely valuable minds and characters of human beings are molded and fashioned.

But there is another side. A schoolmaster once said of a youth that he had never known a boy to do less work in more time. Was it the same boy, we wonder, who, when "The Result of Idleness" was given as the subject of an essay, handed to the master a clean sheet of white paper?

The habit of dawdling is easily acquired, and it is one that takes all interest and happiness out of work. If I were beginning life again, the two mental habits which I should be more careful to cultivate would be observation and attention.

He is a worthless boy who goes like a top—no longer than he is whipped. If boys knew the dreadful remorse which torments men who look back upon the fleeting opportunity of school-days wasted they would better use this opportunity. Even one year's idleness may make to a boy all the difference between an after life reasonably prosperous or heavily clouded by poverty and struggle. When the great Napoleon visited his old school at Brienne, he addressed these words only to the assembled boys: "Boys, remember that every hour wasted at school means a chance of misfortune in future life." It is quite pathetic to see grown-up men trying to go to school again, and learn with much difficulty what they may have learned with the greatest ease when boys.—The Quiver.

Polite James.

"What a nice boy James Harvey is," said Mrs. Case to her neighbor who was calling, as James passed, touching his hat in a polite manner.

"Yes, there are not many like him, and he does not exhaust all his politeness in recognizing one. The other day, when I was over town, poor old Mrs. Fox stumbled and let fall a whole basket of potatoes she was carrying home. James was the first boy to help her pick them up. While some laughed and began using them as footballs about the street, James said, 'Please don't, boys,' and they stopped at once and began helping, too. Soon everyone was gathered up, and if you could have heard the old lady when he handed her the basket, as she said: 'God will bless you for that,' you would have thought as I did, 'He has blest him with one of the kindest hearts that ever beat in the breast of a boy.'"

"But it seems more natural for some boys to be polite than others."

"It is true, but I believe all true politeness springs from a really Christian heart."

"Well, I wish we had more such boys."

"I have been thinking perhaps there would be more such boys if there were more such mothers as James has. I intend trying to train my boys better than I have, anyway."

The profitable morning call was ended, but not the train of reflections that started in either woman's heart.—Religious Telescope.

Every-Day Love.

A group of little girls were telling of the love each felt for her mother; and, as the testimony went on, the strength of the statements grew, each child feeling obliged to surpass her mates. Finally, one said positively, "I love my mother so much I would die for her." The impressiveness of this declaration subdued the circle. The climax had been reached. A wholesome turn was given to the situation by the quiet observation of a lady sitting near: "It seems very strange to me that a little girl who loves her mother enough to die for her doesn't love her enough to wash the dishes for her." We who are older and know better require just such homely reminders to bring us back from our theories to our conditions. The love that is to "the level of every day's most common needs" is the only genuine kind.—Congregationalist.

Laugh and Live Long.

Thackeray truly remarked that the world is for each of us much as we show ourselves to the world. If we face it with a cheery acceptance, we find the world fairly full of cheerful people, glad to see us. If we snarl at it and abuse it, we may be sure of abuse in return. The discontented worries of a morose person may very likely shorten his days, and the general justice of nature's arrangement provides that his early departure should entail no long regrets. On the other hand, a man who can laugh keeps his health, and his friends are glad to keep him. To the perfectly healthy laughter comes often. Too commonly, though, as childhood is left behind, the habit fails, and a half smile is the best that visits the thought-lined mouth of the modern man or woman. People become more and more burdened with the accumulations of knowledge, and with the weighing responsibilities of life, but they should still spare time to laugh. Let them never forget, moreover, and let it be a medical man's practice to remind them that "a smile sits ever serene upon the face of wisdom."—London Lancet.

What Children Should Be Taught.

The least part of children's education is that which they get from books.

They should be taught a thousand things at home in early life to make them good members of society.

They should be taught to wipe their boots when they come in on wet days.

They should be taught to speak softly and answer when spoken to, and not contradict.

They should be made to sit still on occasions when they are in the drawing room with grown up people.

They should be taught to use their forks and spoons judiciously, not to spill their food or make unpleasant noise in eating.

They should be taught not to expect to hear their own voices on every occasion, and not to interrupt older people's conversation.

They should be taught to shake hands with people in meeting or parting, and to bow to people they know in the streets.

They should be taught not to stare rudely or to make audible remarks upon persons and things about them.—Southwestern Presbyterian

Wanted to Make Sure.

A little boy who had been blowing bubbles all the morning, tiring of play and suddenly growing serious, said: "Read me that story about heaven; it ith the gloriouth."

"I will," said the mother, "but first tell me, did you take the soap out of the water?"

"Oh, yeth; I'm pretty sure I did."

The mother read the description of the beautiful city, the streets of gold, the gates of pearl. He listened with delight; but when she came to the words, "No one can enter there who loveth or maketh a lie," bounding up, he said:

"I gueth I'll go and thee about that thoap!"—Northwestern Monthly.

I sometimes go musing along the street to see how few people there are whose faces look as though any joy had come down and sung in their souls. I can see lines of thought, and of care, and of fear—money-lines, shrewd grasping lines—but how few happy lines! The rarest feeling that ever lights the human face is the contentment of a loving soul.—Beecher.

BOONEVILLE, MISS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I send you a short report of the situation at Booneville since the burn. The loss by fire to our citizens is great. Our beautiful church, valued at eight thousand dollars, burned, but work has been begun with great spirit to rebuild. A subscription of about two thousand dollars has been raised, and still going with ready heart. We had two thousand five insurance, which has been ordered paid. Our people expect to get the walls up before the severe weather of Winter. There were twenty men at work on the walls last Saturday. Bro. Bradley is moving things now. The district is getting on nicely.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

CALHOUN, LA.

DEAR EDITOR: Our last Quarterly Conference has just been held. Stewards and Sunday-school superintendents all present; some of the trustees. We had an ideal Quarterly Conference. Rev. A. J. Notestine, P. E, presided with dignity and tact. He honors his office. His sermon, Sunday, on "Connectionalism," was spiritual and masterly. His appointment further evidences the sagacious insight of Bishop Galloway.

We hope to be among the cheerful and happy that assemble at New Iberia in December.

Fraternally,

H. W. LEDBETTER.

FLORIEN CIRCUIT.

DEAR BRETHREN: We have just closed another gracious meeting on my work. Bro. J. S. Sanders did the preaching. He preached a full gospel with the power of the Holy Ghost. The meeting was a great success. The results are that many backsliders were reclaimed, good many converted, and several sanctifications, and the cause built up in many ways; also twelve accessions to the church. I have one more meeting I want to hold, and then I will be through with my meetings. I think now I will carry up a very good report to Conference.

Yours, trusting Jesus,

E. L. CARGILL, P. C.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

GULFPORT, MISS.

DEAR BROTHER: Our fourth Quarterly Conference for Gulfport charge has been held. Our much-esteemed presiding elder, Rev. W. W. Simmons, was with us in the spirit of the blessed Master. We all love him, and esteem him very highly for the work's sake. Reports are all good; $2 200 paid to date by the Gulfport charge; sixty-eight additions to the church; many bright conversions. We have the most beautiful framed church in the whole Connection.

Yours truly, J. S. PARKER.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

JOSEPH E. HOLSTEAD was born in Butler county, Ohio, Sept. 13, 1862; moved to Kansas with his parents when five years old; left Kansas when a young man, and went to West Tennessee, where he joined the Methodist Church at the age of twenty-one, in which he lived a consistent Christian till his death—Oct. 29, 1901. He came to Mississippi in 1894, and spent the remainder of his life at Boyle and Ruleville. While at Boyle in 1896 he lost his first wife and one child. He then moved to Ruleville, about ten miles from Boyle, where he remained till, a short time ago, he moved back to this place, to the delight of his many friends and relatives who loved him so much. But, alas! he is gone. The whole community, great and small, were shocked with sadness to know we had to give up such a good man so suddenly. We never knew a better man. He was a good, obedient child, husband, father, brother, neighbor. All alike miss his large, warm-hearted, broad-gauged life from among us. He leaves both parents, a wife, four children, three brothers and two sisters, besides a host of ardent friends, to mourn their great loss, but their loss is heaven's gain. His pastor, L. A. MCKEOWN.

FLOYD, the youngest son of E. W. and Mrs. H. L. Rhodes, was born July 9, 1887, and died at the home of his parents, near Sulligh, Rankin county, Miss., Nov. 3, 1901. He was baptized in infancy by Rev. A. D. Miller, and was brought up a child of the church. Surrounded by the hallowed influences of a Christian home, he grew up into a bright and promising boyhood. He was uncommonly studious and intelligent for one of his years, and an acknowledged favorite and leader in his classes at school. He was especially devoted to the Sunday-school, and long will we remember the sad faces of his teacher and the boys and girls of his class as they met to say a last sad farewell. May they all meet in heaven! About eight weeks before his death, at our recent camp meeting, Floyd was converted and joined the church. From then until his death he lived a bright, consistent Christian. It seems strange to us that he should be called away so young, and when his life was so full of promise; but we bow in humble submission to the will of him who "doeth all things well." May God comfort the bereaved ones!

P. D. HARDIN.

On the evening of the seventeenth of August, 1901, the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Coleman was saddened and made lonely by the visitation of the death angel, who bore away their beloved son, JOHN, who was in his nineteenth year. John was an obedient son, a kind and affectionate brother, a noble boy. To know him was to love him. He walked out and showed himself to be one of God's children, uniting with the Methodist Church, several years before his death, under the ministry of Rev. R. M. Evans. And when it was whispered that he lay dead in his home, many eyes were filled and many voices trembled as they told of his good traits of character. May the God who alone can console in such times minister to the bereaved family and relatives, "though he is not dead," but gone to meet little Alice, who preceded him several years, and is now waiting for father and mother, five brothers and dear grandma; but we must remember that "whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth." A FRIEND.

Mrs. MARY NELSON was born Feb. 24, 1871; was married to Mr. F. H. Nelson, Jan. 3, 1892, and died after a long illness July 5, 1901. She leaves a broken-hearted husband and little daughter (Jewel) eight years old to mourn their loss. Sister Nelson was a loyal member of the church, a loving and devoted wife, a faithful friend. We hereby extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, and pray that God may sustain them in this time of sorrow. O. L. SAVAGE.

WILLIAM IVY HUBBARD was born Jan. 3, 1859. He joined the church in early life. He was married to Miss E. Z. File, Oct. 6, 1880, and died Sept. 2, 1901, after a long illness. He was a true and loyal church member, a devoted husband and father. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn their loss. May the good Father continue to comfort them! To the mother, brothers and sisters we tender our heartfelt sympathy in their affliction.

O. L. SAVAGE.

Catarrh Can Not Be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they can not reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it, you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surface. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

A Strong Woman

Iowa City, Iowa, Aug. 15, 1900

My wife was sick for three years. We tried everything without relief and spent much money. My wife tried Wine of Cardui and four bottles cured her. She took two more bottles, knowing she would have to work hard during the hay harvest. She attended to all her household duties and loaded and unloaded all the hay. This medicine gave her strength. Formerly she was weak and tired and could hardly get about, but since she has been taking Wine of Cardui she feels better and stronger than when 20 years of age. JOS. A. EISENHAFER.

Mrs. Eisenhafer had tried everything during her three years sickness and had spent considerable money. She was weak and could hardly get about for three years before she took

WINE OF CARDUI

Now, after taking the Wine of Cardui, she can work with her husband in the hay field. That is hard work, but it is not as injurious to a woman's health as labor in stores, factories and offices where thousands of girls are closely confined year after year. With the aid of Wine of Cardui a woman can do any reasonable work and enjoy good health. The health that Wine of Cardui brings makes a woman vigorous in body and mind. Freed from those terrible devastating pains a woman grows well and strong naturally. Wine of Cardui regulates the disordered menstruation and cures leucorrhœa, falling of the womb and periodical pains in the head and back caused by standing or sitting a long time in the same position. Thrdford's Black-Draught puts the bowels, stomach, liver, kidneys and blood in proper shape. Greatly increased strength and endurance is the natural result. Most cases are cured quickly. All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui and 25 cent packages of Thedford's Black-Draught.

Epworth Organs are extra sweet toned

After all, the most important thing about an organ is its tone.

The case may be handsome or not; the price may be high or low;—but if the tone is cheap it is a bad bargain.

Epworth organs have that sweet, rich musical tone which the fine old-time organs used to have, before cheap methods of organ-making came in vogue.

The old-fashioned method of tuning and "voicing" is after all the best method, even if it is a little slow.

Every little reed-tongue in the Epworth is carefully voiced by an old-time expert. It is interesting to watch him put that curious little bend in the tongue of each reed. He is so painstaking with it, you might think him a hair splitter or a crank. The truth is, he is an enthusiast on the subject of fine-tone-quality.

For twenty years this expert has devoted all his time to this one branch, and its just his peculiar little bend in the reeds which gives the Epworth its remarkable purity and richness of tone.

There are many other good points about the Epworth Organs.

Our catalogue explains how to order on trial, at the factory price, saving dealers' profits. You can pay after you are perfectly satisfied;—cash or payments.

General Julian S. Carr, of Carolina, walked home across the Roanoke, a barefooted Confederate, from Appomattox. In twenty years he made a million out of the Durham Tobacco and quit the cigarette factory for the cotton mill. He has directed that every Southern Methodist Minister shall have at cost "The Complete Flour" (Lafferty process) a whole wheat product, yet creamy white, nutty flavor and three hundred per cent. richer in brain food—"All the Wheat Fit to Eat."

A booklet with a portrait of General Carr, and the anatomy of the wheat-berry in colored illustrations and its history as a health food, is sent free, if request is sent to Lafferty Complete Flour Co., Richmond, Va.—North Carolina Advocate.

"Cured of Snuff-Dipping."

To New Orleans Christian Advocate.

DEAR ADVOCATE: It gives me great pleasure to state through the columns of your paper that Dr. J. S. Hill, of Greenville, Texas, has cured me of the snuff habit.

I was an awful slave for years to snuff, but I thank God that I was cured through Dr. Hill's remedy.

ATTENTION, PREACHERS.

Now is the time for you to do some good work for the ADVOCATE.

The ADVOCATE greatly needs your help.

We need a new dress of type, that we may make the paper attractive.

Our machinery needs repairs, and there are quite a lot of other things that are necessary to bring the paper up to the proper standard.

It can not be done without your individual help.

Now, will you not make one hard effort, before Conference, to aid this worthy cause?

We believe the following will help you:

For Two Dollars we will send to all new subscribers the ADVOCATE from now until Jan. 1, 1903.

Thus, by sending us the names now, they will receive the paper nearly fifteen months for two dollars. This is worth considering.

If subscribers have not the cash on hand, you can send any time between now and your first Annual Conference.

To all old subscribers who will pay their subscription in full to date, and send us two dollars additional, we will send the paper from now until Jan. 1, 1903. The label tells when subscriptions expire.

The paper will also be sent from now until January, 1903, at our regular club rate: $1 50 in clubs of ten, cash with the order.

Now, brethren, please give this your personal attention, and by sending us one or two new subscribers, we will have as well printed a paper as anybody.

Next week we will mail you some sample copies to help you in the work.

Please help us. We want to make a good report at Conference.

Fraternally yours,
JNO. W. BOSWELL.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Many accounts for subscriptions and advertisements are due the ADVOCATE. It is important that these accounts be settled as soon as possible. We hope every brother who knows himself to be indebted to the paper will not delay a day. Some of these accounts are long past due. The money is needed. Brethren, one and all, please respond.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

BY MRS. N. D. LIPSCOMB

All Nature smiles this Autumn day,
For 'tis the day of praise and prayer;
A thousand blessings crown our life,
And all attest God's watchful care.

In our Sunny South, so bright and fair,
Peace and health go hand in hand;
No cruel war nor dreadful plague
Grieves or saddens our happy land.

The little rill a-on a thousand hills
Softly a song to heaven raise;
The flowers, refreshed by gentle showers,
Breathe out a fragrant hymn of praise.

And should not we, God's creatures blest
With happy homes and friendships true,
Lift up our hearts in gratitude,
And render him the praises due?

A year, with all its smiles and tears,
Is numbered with the buried past.
Have we been faithful to our trusts?
Will we receive the crown at last?

BRO WOODVILLE'S SUGGESTIONS.

BY DR. H. W. FEATHERSTUN.

The suggestions made through the ADVOCATE, a few weeks ago, by Bro. J. A Woodville, one of the trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground, relative to the widening the usefulness of those ample and splendid grounds impressed me as being very wise indeed.

It is always unwise to ignore facts. The camp meeting, as purely an evangelistic agency, loses it value as churches increase, protracted meetings in the various churches largely taking its place. The effort to maintain a camp meeting merely as an evangelistic institution after it has served its day, is always attended with difficulty and disappointment. These are facts that must not be ignored. There are but two things before us: First, abandon the whole camp ground business, or, second, widen its scope: and it is very evident that if its scope is not widened we will ere long be compelled to abandon it. These facts relate no more strongly to Seashore Camp Meeting than to others thoughout the territory of our church. These facts are not in any sense an argument against camp meetings, and are presented by one who has advocated them all his life, and who loves to attend them.

The widening of the scope of the camp ground by making it a place for religious gatherings of all kinds will make it more useful as a place to hold evangelistic meetings. It is a fact well known to many of us, for instance, that in the year 1900 there were more conversions at the Tri-State League Conference, held at Seashore, than there were at the camp meeting held at the same place ten days earlier. All of the work of the church, with its ever-enlarging scope, tends toward evangelization. If the Tri-State Conference of Epworth Leaguers, at Seashore, helps rather than hinders the camp meeting, what but most benefical would be the result if a Summer school for undergraduate preachers, similar to that held yearly at Vanderbilt University, and the State League Conferences of Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi could be held there? All of these with the camp meeting would be mutually helpful, and, co-operating, would soon make Seashore the grand assembly grounds of Southern Methodism. No spot in the South can offer superior attractions, and these attractions should be consecrated by the church for the Master's service.

The administration of the Tri-State League Conference is planning for larger work and a much larger attendance next year. Now, let the Examining Committees of the Annual Conferences contiguous arrange for a great Summer school for undergradnate preachers to be held at Seashore, and then let the State League Conferences of the three States arrange to hold either separately or jointly, as they elect, their annual sessions down at this lovely spot by the sea. It is not impractical at all; and when once tried, I feel sure that the policy will be continued. Let us hear from those in authority.

FROM JACKSON DISTRICT.

The swift passing of the weeks remind me forcibly that the time is short; Conference nearly upon us, and my promise of more from the district unfulfilled. Well, the Adamic inheritance would come to my relief early, but there is no special loss to anyone, and I desire; not the "woman thou gavest" this time, but the men.

The quarter is more than half spent. As a rule, the Conferences have been good in spirit and returns. It is even now evident that there will be a decided advance over last year. But for the disastrous drouth all over the territory, we would have great hopes for most of the collections in full, and for missions especially. In both crops our people have suffered greatly. In a large part of the district the white population is sparse. In some instances to hold our own is a good work; in others, a slight increase is all that can be expected, and as compared with other sections of the Conference, one accession is as eight or a dozen.

From all sources there will appear within the neighborhood of five hundred accessions during the year. Three new parsonages, costing over $1,000 each, have been built—at Lake City, Madison Station, and Brandon; all neat, roomy, and comfortable. At Benton a larger, better, more comfortable house has been bought. The congregation at Capitol Street have nearly enough to meet the conditions for a three-thousand dollar house. At Florence and Flora substantial improvements have been made on the preacher's home, and nearly two hundred dollars have been expended on the district parsonage, adding greatly to the comfort of its occupants. So, with one exception, all of our parsonages are comfortable.

There have been begun and finished during the past two years eight neat, new churches—two on Lake City work, one on the Vaughan's, one on Steen's Creek, three on the Thomasville, and one at Ridgeland, on the Madison circuit. The last is in a community of Western people, located two miles south of Madison Station, on the I. C. R. R. Last Thursday, Bishop Galloway dedicated this house, and not only was it enjoyable because of the Bishop's great sermon and happy spirit, but also from the evident pride of the people in the presence of this house among them. Sitting-room was at a premium, notwithstanding a capacity of more than two hundred. We think this house is wisely located.

All over the district harmony has prevailed, and this writer has met the greatest kindness and heartiest welcome from people and preachers, for which he here and now expresses his profoundest gratitude. Such manifestations of brotherly love go far toward compensating for weary trips and long absences from home. May the Great Head of the church have each one in loving remembrance!

We must lay the pen aside for a reason—until after the great convocation—and hie us away to the field of the Master.

And now, Mr. Editor, accept for yourself my most sincere thanks for your great kindness in flattering my vanity (?) during the year, and my most gracious bow until we meet at McComb City.

T. B HOLLOMAN.

P S.—That they might have an unembarrassed Missionary Rally on the first Sunday in December, the stewards of Yazoo City cleared the decks for the pastor at the fourth Quarterly Conference. Everything paid in full.. When, where, and by whom was the like ever done before? One hundred dollars as surplus fund on foreign missions has been pledged by the Epworth League and Sunday-school. Oh, for a few more on the Jackson district, and we would easily enter Class 'A." Why not? why not? T. B. H

A PREACHERS' INSTITUTE FOR THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

BY REV. W. W. DRAKE

Some time ago it was suggested through the ADVOCATE that an annual Institute be organized by the Louisiana Conference similar to those which have been conducted for some years past by the Tennessee and Louisville Conferences, for the more thorough mastery of the course of study by the undergradnates, and for outlining and pursuing post-gradnate studies after finishing the required course. The benefits of such a plan are obvious. A large proportion of the young men who come into our Conference are untrained to study, and with no one to direct their studies, can not get the best results from the course. These untrained men are at a considerable disadvantage in the examining-room as compared with the men of college training, as has appeared from recent controversies in the ADVOCATE in reference to the examinations. The relief sought for from this inequality is not to be found by further simplifying the examinations, which are already, as a rule, too easy to be a thorough test, but in providing an Institute at some centrally located place, where the undergradnates, under the direction of the Examining Committees, can study the books assigned to them with the help that comes from the contact of the living teacher and the discussion of the class-room. In addition, the Institute would go far to solve the oft-pondered question, 'What shall I study after I finish my Conference course?" by providing a well-selected post-gradnate course taught by a committee, specially selected, of the most competant men in the Conference. In order to get the best results out of such a gathering, it must be located at some central point where it is accessible to the whole Conference, and I, therefore, do not agree with the editor's suggestion to hold it on the Seashore Camp Ground. Of course, arrangements would have to be made to secure either free entertainment, or board at a minimum cost.

As some effort will probably be made at the coming session of our Conference to inaugurate such a movement, I suggest that every undergradnate who would like to have such an Institute arranged for, write me a postal card to that effect. I would like to hear suggestions also through the ADVOCATE, or personally from anyone interested.

LETTER FROM REV. H. P. LEWIS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Only two weeks until Conference. How time gets away. I soon will have completed my forty-fourth year in the ministry as a member of the Mississippi Conference. Forty-four years ago Rev. Jno. G. Jones, late of the Mississippi Conference, in answer to the question, "Who are admitted on trial?" handed in my name as a candidate for the ministry. There were twelve others admitted at the same time. I felt then, and have felt ever since, that I was less than the least of the class of 1857. Where are the twelve? All gone, and I am left alone; yet not alone, for God has been with me, and he is still with me; bless his holy name! I know of only three, possibly four, of the twelve still living: J. A. Vance and P. Howard, superannuates of the Mississippi Conference, and George Jackson, superannuate of the Louisiana Conference, and possibly Asbury R Hinds, of the North Mississippi Conference. Some say I ought to ask for the same relation; but how we hate to quit the field! We know it is only a question of time when we will have to yield to the inevitable. My heart aches and my eyes moisten when I think of it.

Wife and I started life together forty-two years ago. We have brought up and sent out into the world nine children, four of whom belong to the Methodist ministry, the fifth one preparing for the ministry, leaving only four to engage in other pursuits. It is indeed gratifying to us to know our nine children are getting on well in the world. There are no giants among them; neither are there any dwarfs among them. We feel that God has been truly good to us, for which we are profoundly grateful. Our experience is found in the 23rd, 116 h, and 127th Psalms. We have always loved the Methodist Church and her ministry. Her doctrines are the purest and the best; her government surpasses any we know anything about. We were both—wife and I—born in the lap of Methodism. We dedicated our children to God in baptism in early life, and not one of them has ever been dissatisfied with his baptism. If all our people would dedicate their children to God in baptism in their infancy, then train them right, we would have more and better Methodists.

God bless the ADVOCATE and its editor! Your brother,

H. P. LEWIS.

Fannin, Miss.

THREE YEARS AT COALVILLE.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I am closing my third year with the good people of the Coalville circuit, Mississippi Conference. Pleasant years these have been. God has graciously blessed our labors, and the labors of the members of our church. We have had revivals of great power. Many precious souls have been saved, and some of them have passed over the river. We have witnessed the manifestations of the convicting power of the Holy Spirit when conviction among sinners was so great that their arms and hands were drawn and twisted, and others lying on the floor crying for mercy, while some had the appearance of men in the last throes of death. We have seen billows of heavenly light sweep in on new-born souls until their faces shone with new and divine life.

During these three years we have added 350 members, and had about 300 conversions. Some of these went back to the world, but most of them are happy Christians and our best workers. Scarbrough, Smith, Fayard, Leggett, Bellew, and many others, have been faithful and true to the church during these years. Two churches have been built—one at McHenry and one at Poplar Head. Three new organs—one a present—a new pulpit, and one church painted, completes our building and repairing of churches. A new roof on the parsonage, a new brick chimney, and kitchen and dining-room; a new buggy-house, a good pasture, together with three acres of land bought and paid for at five dollars per acre, completes our work in and around the parsonage.

God bless the people on Coalville circuit. G. W. HUFF, P. C.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

TAKE NOTICE.

I have lately had calls for copies of the Minutes of the last Conference, and as every copy was placed in circulation, I have not been able to respond to the requests of the brethren. I would suggest to those brethren who will need copies during the approaching session of the Conference that they bring them from home with them, as I will have none for distribution.

I will have a few copies of Annual Conference report blanks on hand on Tuesday before Conference, and, as statistical secretary, I will appreciate it very much if the brethren will procure them promptly, and file their reports with the Auditing Board on the first day of the Conference session.

Please observe the following directions: Let "Local Preachers" include L. P.'s, L. D.'s, and L. E.'s. "Members" are all persons whose names are now on the roll except local preachers. "Members last year" are all those whose names were on the rolls of the churches you served this year when you took charge after the last Conference. "Received on profession of faith" are those you have received upon the assumption of vows. "By certificate and otherwise" includes those reinstated by Church Conference, but does not include members added to your charge by change of plan of circuit. These are nowhere reported. "Other church property" is to include all church furnishing, (bells, books, benches, lights, carpets, stoves, organs), parsonage furnishing, land, cemeteries, etc., not included in the value of churches and parsonages. Money raised for "other objects" includes ministerial help, incidental church expenses, poor fund, etc.; and "other objects" by Sunday-school includes any money raised and expended by the Sunday-school, and not reported in any other place. The "total from all sources" on the finance table is to include every cent raised on the charge during the year by the church as a whole—Epworth Leagues, Sunday-schools, and Woman's Societies.

By observing these directions, and specially this last (be sure to fill this blank), you will relieve the secretary of considerable work, and also facilitate the work of the Conference.

Yours to serve,

WM. G. EVANS.

Grand Cane, La., Nov. 16, 1901.

STATISTICAL REPORTS.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN: Our form of report to Annual Conference calls for the number of members at the close of the year, and the number at the beginning of the year, in order that comparison may be made, and our gain or loss determined. What could be easier than securing a census of church members? Yet it is here that we fail to get correct statistics, and I urge every man to prepare himself to give accurate statistics at Conference. Don't report total enrollment as you do in Sunday-school reports, and as our secular schools do, but report all members now in good standing, and no others. Then your successor can find them on his arrival. He ought to be able to find all you report, minus the few who die or remove while Conference is in session; and he ought to find and account for their names, since the books were closed at the opening of Conference.

Now, the preachers of our Conference, at the close of 1899, reported 45 154 members. The preachers of 1900 should have begun, then, with 45 154; but, behold! they come up at the close of 1900, and say, "We began the year with 43,253 members," or 1901 less than their predecessors testify that they left in the various charges. Think of it—nineteen hundred souls! Why, that would be a glorious harvest for a year of toil on the part of all our pastors. Yet they slipped away. Sardis district lost 38; Grenada, 235; Winona, 163; Durant, 307; Columbus, 34; Aberdeen, 435; Corinth, 172; Holly Springs, 324, and Greenville, 193—total, 1901. None can claim "swapping" circuits, etc., for all lost members.

Dear brethren, do not wait till Conference, and come around to the statistical secretary for a "copy of the Minutes, to see how many members" you had "last year." Minutes do not know. Your circuit may have been divided. Go to your church registers, and do your best to make an honest count, that we may one time report correct statistics.

Count your local preachers, add the number to the number of lay members, and you will have "total members this year." Your "members last year," plus your net gain this year, should equal "members this year." Let presiding elders secure statistics from supply preachers, who rarely attend Conference. Do not tell the statistical secretary to "see the Minutes of last year." He has seen too much of them already.

A GRACIOUS REVIVAL.

Friday night, the eighteenth ultimo, at East End, Meridian, we began a meeting at our church, with Rev. W. D. Bass as preacher, and Bro. Will Bass to conduct the singing. This meeting has been on the minds and hearts of our people for two months. We had covenanted to pray at least once a day that God would give us a great meeting. I remember hearing Bishop Keener say once that the secret of the success of Methodism was that she always honored the Holy Spirit. So Bro. Bass stated in his first sermons that we must have the baptism of the Spirit if anything was accomplished. Our church was thoroughly united, and worked faithfully through the entire meeting. Penitents were called to the altar, and urged to remain there until saved. Men and women were not wanting to go inside the altars and work with penitents. A number of the faculty of East Mississippi Female College were with us at nearly every service, and did efficient work. The visible results of these meetings, which closed last Monday night, were eighty accessions to our church, and over one hundred conversions and reclamations. Of the number who came into the church, fifty of them were over fifteen years of age. A number of the college girls were converted, and twenty of them united with the church; twenty-five were baptized. Our assessment for foreign missions has been paid in full. Every other claim will be met. We are putting a handsome carpet in the church this morning. This, with other recent improvements, have cost us about three hundred dollars, and all paid for. The last two nights of our meeting Bro. Bass stood in the midst of some fifty children, who were in small chairs inside the altar rail and on the pulpit rostrum; and with some six hundred packed in the house, many were turned away for want of room. A more consecrated and loyal man we have never worked with. This gives us one hundred and twenty three accessions for this year.

D. P. BRADFORD.

Oct. 30, 1901.

One who has carefully collected the figures says that the Protestant missionaries, including men, women and children, who lost their lives at the hands of the Chinese Boxers last year, number one hundred and eighty six. How many native Christians perished will never be known. All these were martyrs to the truth.

Japan is experiencing a wonderful outpouring of the Spirit. Revivals began in Tokyo in May. Five different denominations, including Episcopalians and Baptists, worked together, without regard to doctrinal differences. Natives and foreign missionaries worked together, and up to June 1 the number of converts numbered 1,050. And the close of the revival was not in sight.

The great Exposition to be held in St. Louis in 1903 will be the biggest thing of the kind ever undertaken. The gates will be closed on Sunday. This seems to be definitely settled more than a year in advance of the date of opening. It is also given out that the usual Midway shows will not be allowed These are items worth remembering.

What Our Editors Say.

CONFERENCE AGAIN.

The pastor where the Conference is to be held deserves our sympathy. His is a delicate and laborious task. To place the members and visitors where each one ought to go, to adapt the preachers to the families that entertain them, and to each other, requires much thought and tact. Again, when he has every one arranged, and thinks he can take things quietly, some one sends him a note, stating that, on account of sickness, or the unexpected visit of relatives and friends, she is sorry she will not be able to take any of the members and delegates. The pastor must go in search of another home for the preachers for whom he thought he had provided. Preachers themselves are sometimes thoughtless in such matters, and give the pastor and others no little trouble. Occasionally a preacher has not written that his wife is going with him. He has been assigned to a home with another preacher. But about the opening of Conference he drives up in his buggy with his wife and one or two children. You can imagine the indignation of the pastor, but he must not, or rather will try not to, manifest it. Sometimes a young preacher will invite a number of young ladies to attend Conference, and write to the host of the Conference to provide homes for them, although they have no connection whatever with the Conference, and then become offended because the pastor could not and did not provide homes for them. This has also occurred: A preacher has been assigned to a home in company with another preacher where the family has only one spare bed. But, without giving notice, he carries his fourteen or fifteen-year-old boy with him. Rather than say anything about it, the man and wife, who are entertaining them, give up their own room and bed, and put the preacher and his son in it, and shift as best they can for themselves. This is not a fancy sketch. We members of the Conference should give our hosts as little trouble as possible.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

A MAGNETIC FIELD.

Is not our annual muster growing too mechanical? Is there not a fear that "serving tables" is edging too much to the fore? We have noticed at a Conference that the pulpit during the sessions is unscrewed and set against the rear wall, while a desk takes its place. Far be it from our thought to insist on a perfunctory exhibition of goodness—no prelude of trumpet to prayer. In secret men seem to draw nigh in sweeter sincerity to God. Public worship, if a martinet exercise, will not augment devoutness of soul. Nor does the routine and rattle of the shekels of silver uplift. May not a Conference atmosphere tend to chill the youth not long away from the altar where radiant faces gave evidence of a divine power? Ought not the visitor to our Conference enter "a magnetic field" of unworldly influence?—Richmond Christian Advocate.

SOUND ADVICE.

Sometimes the apparent failure of the preacher is as much due to the people as to him. The people did not give him a fair chance. They stood aloof when he came. They would not stay near when he tried to be a brother and friend. They would not hear his messages with sympathy, nor lend a hand to help his labors. They gave no words of encouragement, they never talked him up to the community. They did not throng the congregations and prayer meetings, praying, or the Word and its speaker. Had these things been done, they would soon have fallen in love with the pastor, imperfect though he was and of mere ordinary ability, and the barren year would have been one of the right hand of the Most High. Even where these shortcomings were not the case, the desire for a change is sometimes a mere habit, or a spirit of fault-finding. An archangel would not satisfy some people. We venture to advise charges as we do ministers—Don't ask a change, if it be not necessary, or if you have done so already, "Recall the request." Let the presiding elder know the facts as you see them—looking with reasonable and charitable eyes—and leave the staying or going to God and the church. We believe that a charge so doing will prosper and be in peace.—Southern Christian Advocate.

A WONDERFUL SAYING.

That wonderful saying of St. Paul's concerning Jesus Christ in the letter to the Colossians—"In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily"—is almost sufficient, when read with proper emphasis, to settle the whole question of the Incarnation. It brings out the great truth that Jesus Christ is far more than a mere highly endowed or even divinely endowed man; that the fullness, the pleroma, all the fullness, of the Godhead, dwells in him, is permanently resident in him, bodily. Have we not here an echo of his own declaration: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father"? The vision of Christ is the vision of the Father. But, to go back to the passage with which we began, the apostle adds to his statement with reference to Christ another clause: "And ye are complete in him." The word "complete" ought likewise to be rendered "full" or "filled." The whole fullness of the Godhead is in Christ, and "in him," that is, as long as believers are in vital relation to him, they also, up to the full measure and limit of their capacity, are likewise filled. Who can grasp the glory of such a thought?—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

A SERIOUS MISTAKE.

Personal ambition in the preacher is often mistaken for a zeal for God. He proclaims himself ready to spend and be spent for the Master's cause. He desires the anointing of power to sweep multitudes into the kingdom. But his thought is to be a conspicuous leader It is only the power of leadership which he covets. It is only as a leader that he thinks to serve his Lord. That it should be appointed others to direct, and to him silently to obey, is never in his thought. When such men fail of the grand success of which they dream it is always the fault of the church, and in their disappointment they abandon their great plans and become morose and cynical.—Arkansas Methodist.

THE ONLY TROUBLE.

What Methodism could do, if every man would only do his duty in an ordinary measure, staggers conception. It is able not only to girdle the globe with a holy and triumphant evangelism, but also to belt it with institutions of learning, of reform, and of charity. To have part in the operation of a system, the possibilities of which are beyond speech—almost beyond figures—implies a vast responsibility, the very thought of which ought to arouse every Methodist to new vigor in the doing of his part. The system itself is in default at no point. The only trouble is a lack of fidelity on the part of those who have formally given their allegiance, but have withheld their aid.—Sunday-School Magazine.

THE HARDEST WORK.

There is harder work than preaching and pastoral visiting: it is overcoming the spirit of worldliness in a church. When a few Methodist women want their children to take dancing lessons and go to balls for the sake of good society and youthful pleasure; when Methodist families give dancing and card-parties; and when Methodist young ladies and gentlemen want to attend such things and stay in the church, then comes the hardest work of most pastors' lives. What to do and when and how, are troubling questions.—Florida Christian Advocate.

THE MODE OF WATER BAPTISM.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

THE METHODIST STANDARDS.

(Concluded.)

The writers quoted in the preceding article represent the highest authorities among Methodist expositors, and in the light of what they have written, it would be both absurd and inconsistent to regard the parenthetical clause as mandatory upon the Methodist ministry. If such a view is to be taken, we can only be consistent when we burn their books, or forbid their being studied by our undergraduates. "But," says the objector, "the Methodist Church has always practiced immersion, and a preacher is not loyal unless he practices it." I deny that it has always done any such thing. There is not one in five hundred that ever immerses a candidate, and when they do, it is "as a matter of concession to those who have been, as they consider, taught erroneously upon the matter." They immerse them only for "accommodation," and as following the "advisory" clause in the ritual. It is not upon their own conscience, but altogether upon the conscience of the candidate.

Dr. Tigert recently, in a sermon before our Annual Conference, described exactly the position of Methodist preachers. It was a remark made to him by some one else, and, as near as I can remember, was as follows: "You Methodists say in your Discipline that you are willing to immerse, but you give us to understand that you only go prepared to practice sprinkling."

The way in which we go prepared is right. How could we consistently go otherwise after having been taught by Wesley, Watson, Summers, Pope, and the rest? If we practice immersion, it is altogether on the conscience of the candidate and the advisory clause of the Discipline. Not because the mode is believed either to be scriptural or mandatory.

Methodist preachers would not do any violence to their ministerial vows if they refused to immerse a candidate. The standards which they studied and accepted say immersion is not taught in the Bible. It would be inconsistent to make mandatory that which they are taught to be only "an invention." "But," says the objector, "the Discipline is explicit. It reads, 'If he desire it, "shall" immerse him in water.'"

If the objector will turn to Paragraph 5 of Discipline, he will read as follows: "Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation; so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man."

If the objector thinks this has reference to faith and not practice, we read again from Paragraph 31, "His (God's) written Word is the only rule both of our faith and practice." "Before any" Methodist preacher "can be required to practice immersion for baptism, it must be shown in or proven by the written Word of God." So teaches Methodism. And the standard writers and expositors referred to above are the highest in the church; they represent Methodist interpretation, and without a single exception they declare immersion is not taught in the Bible.

"Must a preacher study Watson and Summers, and then reject them, or be rejected? Will you make a man take snuff, and then fine him for sneezing?"

If the Methodist ministry is compelled to receive the parenthetical clause as mandatory, the reader will also see that more importance is attached to it by our church than either of the other modes which precede it. The paragraph leaves it to the "discretion" of the minister to ask the name of the candidate, or to choose between sprinkling or pouring. He can choose himself between these two modes without consulting the candidate; but the will of the candidate in the latter (immersion) is "par excellence," and from which there is no appeal.

Such a view calls to mind an old Latin sentence ("parum claris lucem dare"), which, when translated, reads, "To throw light on an obscure subject." The church leaves it to the minister's "discretion" to choose between "sprinkling or pouring," but the candidate who desires immersion steps "by the fort" and "throws light on an obscure subject." His desire not only becomes compulsory, but the church invests him (though an ignoramus) with the superior dignity of throwing light upon a subject which she does not allow her talented ministers so much as an opinion.

The truth of the whole matter is, the clause is advisory and not mandatory. The preacher can exercise his own discretion for sprinkling or pouring (this is commanded); but if his conscience is against immersion after having been so taught by his church, no vow is broken if he refuses to grant the "desire."

The writer does not believe in immersing anything but a dirty garment. He never had but one candidate to "desire" immersion, and a little pamphlet soon convinced her that sprinkling was "a more excellent way." He does not believe that he would violate any ministerial vow in its spirit or letter if he were to tell any and all candidates desiring immersion that he "is not taking in washing," or if he were to send them to a Baptist preacher.

Let the next General Conference "immerse" the parenthetical clause so deep it will never know an "emersion." There are thousands of Southern Methodist preachers, traveling and local, and many hundreds of thousands of the laity who would like to chant its requiem. Our position before the world and sister denominations would then be understood and unassailable, and an effectual step taken toward relegating the immersion heresy back to the dark ages.

NOTE.—If the church makes immersion compulsory upon the ministry, the character of every standard writer and expositor in the church, as well as others who have written against immersion, can be arrested for "inveighing against our doctrines." (Vide Discipline.)

IMMERSION AS BAPTISM.

BY REV. I. L. PEEBLES.

If immersion were baptism, and the only baptism, and, too, as essential as some claim it to be, it ought to have been so declared by the Word of God as to leave no grounds for any other claim. Why was it not declared in language as unmistakable as that which declares that Christ is the Son of God, or that salvation is by faith? These truths are essential, and, therefore, so plainly stated, that "wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein." (Isa. xxxv, 8) And why was not immersion thus stated? It could have been. God could have said, "Put them under the water completely, and leave no parts uncovered, for this is baptism." And since his disciples were all Jews, and were accustomed to baptism by pouring or sprinkling, therefore, anyone ought to see how necessary it was for a very plain statement to be made about immersing the people instead of their accustomed mode of sprinkling or pouring. There is not a single passage of Scripture in the Bible that teaches immersion so unmistakably that any honest man in the church, or out of it, can hold up his hand before God and swear that he knows that it teaches immersion, and nothing else; or even just say, without the swearing, that he knows that it means immersion, and nothing else; and, therefore, does it not argue bigotry and narrow-mindedness in the extreme for professed Christians to unchurch those who are not immersed, and would deprive them of the sacred privileges of the church of God, although they have every proof that they have been changed in heart and that they love God?

Now, just let common sense have a little liberty, and will not even common sense thus decide? Certainly it will. We have no objections to any brother, or any organization of brethren, adopting immersion as their baptism because they prefer it, or even because they believe it to be the right way to baptize; but we do object to that uncharitableness and narrow-mindedness that declares immersion to be the only baptism, and, therefore, no one is baptized unless he is immersed, when the advocates of immersion themselves do not know that it is the only baptism, or that it is baptism at all. We know the plea is, that if you will just give any uninstructed person the Bible to read without any scriptural instructions to bias him one way or the other, he will see and believe that immersion is baptism. This might be so with some, but it would not be with all. The writer of this had no other training in his early years than that which favored immersion, and yet, after all, since he began to read and study the Scriptures for himself, he is further from the idea that immersion is the only mode of baptism than heaven is from the earth, and he is so honest in his belief that he has been and is still free to talk or debate with his brethren who differ with him on the subject of water baptism. With equal force with the plea that if one reads the Bible unbiased, he will believe in immersion, one might say, if he will thus read the Scriptures, he will also believe the world does not turn round, but that the sun moves around the earth. What is plainer in Joshua x, 12, 13, and yet who would dare say that the world is flat, and does not turn round, although it does seem clear to an unbiased mind to be the scriptural doctrine?

NORTH MISSISSIPPI ITEMS.

We have had two pleasant visits of late. The first was at Jackson, Miss., where we went to assist Brother Emery in a revival meeting at Capitol Street Church. The congregations were immense, and at times many were turned away because they could not be seated. The church was wonderfully blessed, and quite a number were converted and joined the church. It was a great pleasure to be with Brother Emery, who has a strong hold upon his people, and is doing a fine work for the church. He is not only a splendid preacher, but a gentleman of considerable culture.

I stopped with Brother Enochs and his family during my stay in the city. Brother Enochs is not only one of the leading business men of the city, but he is a good Methodist. He and his lovely family know how to make a Methodist preacher feel at home.

We also had the pleasure of preaching at Millsaps College, where the professors and a large body of students constituted our hearers. There seems to be as fine a religious spirit among the student body as I have ever known. Dr. Murrah has all the college to hear him lecture on the Bible once a week, and he gave me his hour in which to hold a special service with the boys.

We made our second visit to Minter City circuit, in answer to Brother Thames' invitation to dedicate the new church-building at Glendora. It rained all day Sunday, and we did not dedicate the church, but we preached at Glendora three days, and organized a church with a membership of thirteen. This promises to be one of the strongest churches on the circuit. We found Brother Thames well and hard at work. He serves the work well as pastor. He has had great success on Minter City circuit this year, and will be able to make a fine report at Conference.

We are glad to announce that we have a large crowd of boarders, and we think the best average class of girls we have ever seen at Genada College. Yours fraternally,

W. M. McINTOSH.

Grenada, Miss., Nov. 11, 1901.

TWO GREAT REVIVALS.

MR. EDITOR: On the third Sunday in October we began a revival with Bro. D. P. Bradford and his people at East End, Meridian, and continued ten days. Had a great revival, over one hundred conversions, and seventy-five additions to our church. Bro. Bradford is doing a fine work. His people love him. About fifty of the East Mississippi College girls were converted during our revival.

Nov. 2 I began with Bro W. L. Linfield at Laurel, Miss., where Bro. Clifford, of New Orleans, had been preaching ten days. Quite a number had been converted and added to the church, but the pastor was not satisfied to close without further results, and was anxious for me to assist him in continuing the meeting another week, which I did, and we closed out with seventy five additions.

Laurel is a growing little city of about 6,000 population. Bro. Linfield has received in all during the year 240 members by letter and on profession of faith. He has also built a nice two-story parsonage worth $2,000, and has plans on foot to build two other church-houses in the town. The probabilities are that Laurel will have two pastors another year. The people are expecting Bro. Linfield to be reappointed to Central Church.

I shall long remember the dear people of Meridian and Laurel among my thousands of friends at other places.

God bless the church and ministry, and bring the world to Christ, is my prayer. W. D. BASS.

Corinth, Miss., Nov. 15, 1901.

NOTE FROM REV. W. H. HILL.

To the Members of the Louisiana Conference—

BRETHREN: As it looks like I will not be able to attend the session of the Conference which meets on the twelfth of December, I will write this letter for the ADVOCATE.

Our son, Robert Randle, who was stricken with gangrene on Sept. 11, is still confined to his bed, and likely will be for weeks yet, and requires my personal attention every day. He lost all of his toes, part of each ear, and so much tissue from his arms and legs that it requires some one experienced in dressing wounds to attend him. My presence twice a day is absolutely necessary. Our son, Tommie, is also sick, and we fear he has continued fever. Our crop of cotton is not gathered, owing to affliction of our son, Randle, which has taken so much of our time. Our finances, of course, are tied up in this. At the last session I was placed in the supernumerary relation, which, of course, caused me to have planted a crop this year. I leave it to your judgment what you shall do with me another year.

I expect to be at Conference if I can possibly leave my boy, but it looks like now I will not be able. Should I fail to be at our session, I will address the Bishop and Conference by letter. Fraternally,

W. H. HILL.

Colfax, La., Nov. 15, 1901.

LAKE CHARLES, LA.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We closed on last night a two weeks' meeting. Six accessions on profession of faith—one by letter. In some respects the meeting has been very remarkable. The interest grew from the first, and at times became intense. Last night between two and three hundred people came forward professing to have been blessed, and promising to live for God and the right. I am greatly indebted to Rev. A. W. Turner, of Lake Arthur, for four strong sermons, which had fine effect, and gave me a much-needed rest. Our handsome new church is now complete throughout, and free from debt. Yours truly,

R. W. TUCKER.

The Woman's Home Mission Society of Magnolia, Miss., observed the Week of Prayer, carrying out the entire programme. The meetings were real interesting and spiritual, proving a blessing to us all. Much credit is due our first vice-president, Mrs. Sandell, for its unlimited success. She was untiring in her exertions to make it such. Different members of the society led on the several evenings, being assisted by our resident pastors, who gave us interesting talks upon the subject under discussion. The collection taken amounted to eight dollars and seventy-five cents, which has been forwarded. May God bless and prosper the Home Mission Society! is our prayer.

All Stuffed Up

That's the condition of many sufferers from catarrh, especially in the morning. Great difficulty is experienced in clearing the head and throat.

No wonder catarrh causes headache, impairs the taste, smell and hearing, pollutes the breath, deranges the stomach and affects the appetite.

To cure catarrh, treatment must be constitutional—alterative and tonic.

"I was afflicted with catarrh. I took medicines of different kinds, giving each a fair trial; but gradually grew worse until I could hardly hear, taste or smell. I then concluded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after taking five bottles, I was cured and have not had any return of the disease since." EUGENE FORBES, Lebanon, Kan.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

Louisiana Sunday-School Convention.

We trust the good brethren of Louisiana, who are so soon to meet in Annual Conference, will not think it amiss in us if we urge upon them the necessity of arranging for a Conference Sunday-school Convention. We are not so egotistical as to think for a moment that we know more about Sunday-school matters than they do, nor that our interest in them and our love for Sunday schools is greater than theirs. But sometimes brotherly love and fraternal pleading stimulates to action, where else there would be nothing done. Be this as it may, should we be censured, let it be imputed as an error of the head, and not of the heart.

The Convention will bring together the Sunday-school workers of the Conference for mutual profit and instruction. It will stimulate their zeal and increase their knowledge. It will diffuse a knowledge of the best methods to be employed in teaching and in management of the schools, so as to secure the best results. "To the convention," in the words of another, "under the blessing of God, more than to any other single agency, is the confessed pre-eminence of our country in Sunday-school enterprise due. They have given currency to improved modes of working, they have brought about a better state of feeling between the Christian denominations, they have given Christian people a better appreciation of the superlative value of the Sunday-school as a place of Christian labor, and they have produced continued and organized effort for Sunday-school extension."

Without organization nothing can succeed. It was his genius for organization that secured to John Wesley the fruits of his labors, and started Methodism on its glorious career. The Sunday schools of a Conference organized in a convention have more singleness of aim and present an unbroken front against the forces of evil. It is the difference between an organized and an unorganized army. Organized interdenominational conventions have accomplished a great work, but they should not—they can not—take the place of denominational organization. The same argument that would do away with the latter in favor of the former would equally apply to the doing away with all denominational work.

The president of the Louisiana Sunday-school Board recently stated in this column that a convention was appointed for last year, but was not held because of the objections of some of the leading brethren. We now plead for the coming year—that a convention be appointed, and that it be held. It will cost nothing except to those who attend and those who entertain them, and they will be abundantly repaid. Suppose that only a dozen should attend—that dozen will be greatly benefited, and the locality where it is held and the schools represented will feel an increased stimulus. Numbers alone do not make a successful convention. We would urge that Prof. Hamill be invited to hold it, but whether his services are secured or not, let the convention be held.

MISSISSIPPI ORPHANS' HOME.

A private letter from Rev. W. T. Griffin, the genial agent of the Mississippi Orphans' Home at Water Valley, gives us some interesting facts about the Sunday-school work there. All of the inmates attend the Wood Street Sunday-school, but they study the lesson systematically at the Home also, where they have a library and plenty of Sunday-school literature. Bro. Griffin states that the pupils from the Home always know the lessons. What a relief to some of our Sunday-school teachers it would be if all their pupils could be inmates of the Home for a season.

It would be a fitting thing for all the Methodist Sunday-schools in Mississippi to take up a collection for the Home on Thanksgiving Day. It would emphasize the saying of our Lord that it is more blessed to give than to receive. It would also be training the children in Christian giving, and in a cause that readily appeals to their hearts. The work of the Orphans' Home should be laid upon the hearts of every Sunday-school child in Mississippi. Not only on Thanksgiving Day, but on Christmas also let the orphans be remembered. We know of schools that on Christmas make an offering to the Home instead of having a Christmas tree, and they find it a most blessed occasion. Would that more of our schools would do likewise.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

TAYLORSVILLE CIRCUIT.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We started our revival work the first Sunday in July at Taylorsville, a new town on the Gulf and Ship Island railroad, which is the center of the circuit. We met with the most stubborn resistance. Only a few Methodist people here, and the most of them very indifferent. The people knew but little about Methodist customs, and were very much opposed to propositions. But in the face of all this, the meeting did good. One conversion, six accessions to the church, and all who attended were set to thinking. After this we held meetings at every point on the circuit, which resulted in about fifty conversions and nineteen accessions.

We labor at a great disadvantage in this part of the country. Methodism is greatly in the minority here, and the majority of our Methodist people are not established in the doctrine and discipline of our church. We are surrounded and intermingled with Antinomian believers, blind-tigers, Sabbath-breakers, and every other class of sinners to be found on or near a new railroad town. It is preached at every church in this country (except the Methodist Churches), that you can not keep the Ten Commandments, and that no man can live without sin. Like it was in Jeremiah's time, "The prophets prophesy falsely, . . . and my people love to have it so." But in spite of the world, the flesh, and the devil, God has given us a great victory. We have received more than fifty members into the church, and there have been almost a hundred conversions.

These are the brethren that assisted us in revivals: L. E. Alford, R. A. Sibley, Sr.; J. W. Thompson, J. M. Corley, W. W. Graves, and R. A. Breland.

Bro. Breland held a meeting at Taylorsville, beginning the twentieth of October and closing the twenty-eighth. He is a good preacher, and I cheerfully endorse him, and gladly recommend him to anybody, but especially to preachers having hard places.

This has been a year of joys and sorrows for me. In the midst of the revival meetings a telegram from home brought me the sad news that my youngest brother had been accidentally shot. I went to him at once, to find him in a dying condition, and after struggling for life only a few short days, he died in full assurance of heaven. I have been very sad ever since. Pray for me and the Taylorsville circuit.

J. E. WILLIAMS, P. C.

LEAKSVILLE CIRCUIT.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I wish to say through the columns of the "dear old ADVOCATE" that I am completing my last round on the Leaksville circuit for this Conference year. It is like leaving an old home where everything and everybody has grown very familiar; but the best of friends have to separate. This makes two years for the pastor, and while they have been years of work and toil, they have also been years pleasantly spent. The Lord has graciously blest the work, and everything is moving along very well. Through earnest effort and prayer the work has been considerably built up, numerically. We have received for the two years up to date about 65 members—60 of them on profession of faith. We have organized one new church on the circuit, have repaired one, and everything points to a success on this work. We paid all the Conference claims in full last year, and I am glad to say we were able to report all the Conference claims in full—cash in hand—at our fourth Quarterly Conference, which was held on the twelfth of this month. Pastor's and presiding elder's salary in advance of last year. I am glad to say, Mr. Editor, that I am leaving the work in very good shape for who ever may be pastor here next year, if it's your humble scribe.

Conference soon meets, "the wheel turns," and a move will take place with some of us, and I may be one of the movers; but, bless the Lord, I am ready for whatever may come.

The Lord bless the editor, and help him to continue sending us a good paper. Every Methodist ought to take the ADVOCATE, and everybody else, too.

Yours in the work of the Master,
W. L. BLACKWELL, P. C.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

GRAND CANE, LA.

This has been a good year on the Grand Cane charge. We have held three meetings, and had about one hundred and fifty conversions. The number received into the church has been comparatively small, due to this being an old community, and even the children having been taken into the church before; we have added fourteen on profession of faith and a number by certificate. I have been assisted in two meetings by Rev. E. E Rigg, who is a master-workman as a revivalist. We have almost completed this year a very neat and comfortable parsonage at Grand Cane, at a present cost of about $1,000 The Sunday-schools have prospered this year, and all three are well officered and supplied with our literature. They have raised about $30 for missions, against $3 95 last year. The total finances reported this year will be about double what was reported last year. The two Epworth Leagues are doing good work, and are great powers for good. I have organized three Woman's Home Mission Societies, with a total membership of about 40. They are enterprising three Thanksgiving entertainments, and will thus largely

Men who look much older than they are never appear to such disadvantage as with the wife who keeps her matronly beauty. The secret of health and the manly vigor which goes with health is nutrition. When the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition are diseased there is loss of nutrition, and corresponding physical weakness.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and its allied organs, which prevent nutrition, and makes men healthy and vigorous.

"I was a great sufferer from dyspepsia for over two years, and was a complete physical wreck," writes Mr. Preston R. Pensenmacher, of Egypt, Lehigh Co., Pa. "I also suffered much with constipation. I tried many different medicines which were recommended to cure the trouble but these only made me worse. I had such a weak and debilitated appearance that it seemed as if I had hardly any blood in my whole body. At last I came across an advertisement of Dr. Pierce's. I at once tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets.' I used about eight vials of the 'Pellets' and ten bottles of the 'Discovery' which brought me back to my former state of health."

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

The Baptists of Virginia are brotherly. While the Annual Conference of our church was in session at Newport News, the Baptist State Convention was in session at Richmond. The latter, by telegraph, sent brotherly salutations, citing Hebrews xiii, 20, 21. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

We once knew an old man who was so afraid of doing wrong that he would not do right. He seemed not to know that there are sins of omission as well as commission. Was he alone? Who has not seen men and women capable of good work sitting around doing nothing, afraid to move lest they get in somebody's way, or hurt somebody's feelings?

The primary object of the Epworth League is to develop our young people, spiritually, and to make them intelligent and useful Methodists. This can not be done, except to a very limited extent, without utilizing their talents and energies. They should, therefore, be put to work. In many places very little charity and help are called for, but as helpers in our benevolent enterprises they could do much efficient work. We need not be afraid of breaking down the League by calling on its members to assist in raising the collections. The more of that kind of work they do, the better.

The Virginia Conference, at its recent session, went heavily into the memorializing business. No less than eight or ten papers were presented, asking the ensuing General Conference to amend our Discipline. How many of the memorials were sanctioned by the Conference, we have not yet learned. One, at least, which was adopted by a large majority, if passed by the General Conference, will not only change our policy, but come dangerously near wrecking our polity. We are not yet ready to tie the hands of the Episcopacy in making appointments either to missions, circuits, stations, or districts. The Bishop must be as free in the one case as in the other.

THANKSGIVING.

"O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever." God is not only good in himself, but there is an outflowing of that goodness manifested in providence and grace that brings men constantly under obligation to him, and in good men inspires daily thanksgiving.

God's providence is lavish. We do not mean that it is unnecessarily extravagant, for that would be inconsistent with his character. It is amply sufficient, and its blessings so distributed as to meet the necessities and minister to the comfort of every living creature. Man alone is not the recipient of his bounty. The greatest and the least are alike dependent upon him, and he provides for all. He hears the young ravens when they cry, and not a sparrow falls to the ground without his knowledge. To accomplish his purposes, all the elements of nature, earth and air and water combine.

But while every living creature shares in the bounty of God, man is the object of his special care. "How much better," said our Savior, "is a man than a sheep," and, "Ye are of more value than many sparrows." He is "made only a little lower than the angels, crowned with glory and honor, and has dominion over all the works of God's hands;" all are under his feet; "all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field, the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas." Unlike the beasts of the field, man is subjected to the law of labor. It is by the sweat of his brow that he obtains his bread. But this makes him none the less dependent on God. The preparation of the ground, the sowing of the seed, the cultivation of the plant—all these belong to man; but without God's care and blessing, his labor will come to nothing. "Paul may plant and Apollos water, but God giveth the increase." It is literally true that "in him we live and move and have our being." Let God withdraw his protection, and at once we would cease to breathe, and our spirits would drop into eternity.

The Lord abundantly supplies the means, and places them at the command of man. In a thousand ways he may utilize the resources so generously put into his possession, and thus minister to his own and his fellow-creature's comfort. As a rule, if there is a failure, it is the fault of the man, and not because of oversight or failure on the part of God. "His tender mercies are over all his works."

Besides the divine goodness as manifested in the material resources of the earth, we have the blessings of good government and the highest order of civilization, under which we enjoy full civil and religious liberty, and social advantages equal to any people upon the earth. Our land is blessed with schools and colleges and universities, thus affording us opportunity for educating our children for future responsibility and usefulness. These are blessings that call for thanksgiving.

But the greatest and brightest manifestation of God's goodness is in his grace—the grace that rescued man from sin and death. To make this grace efficient, he sent his Son into the world to suffer and die; "not to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." Such goodness was hitherto unknown and unheard of. "For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. but God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Such goodness was undeserved on the part of man, and that is why it is called grace. It was unmerited, yet freely bestowed. And God, having given his Son, with him also freely gives all things necessary to our temporal and spiritual welfare. So then comes into the world the Holy Spirit "to reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment," and to comfort the hearts of believers with the assurance of their acceptance in Christ. Added to these, we have the church as a nursing mother welcoming us to her blessings and privileges, and throwing around us her arms of protection and sympathy. What more do we need to call forth the expressions of our gratitude?

The present year has been crowned with goodness. We have peace at home, and are at peace with all the world. The clouds have dropped fatness, and the lands have yielded their increase. Plenty everywhere abounds, and prosperity prevails. We have been more than ordinarily blessed with good health. Epidemics and scourges have been unknown, and no disasters by land or sea have fallen upon our people. The one calamity of the year was the assassination of our honored President. This, though an affliction of the severest kind, we trust has been overruled for good, and will tend to make our people wiser and better, and more careful for the safety of our rulers, and more jealous of their honor and dignity.

What shall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward us? It is impossible for us to pay what we owe. All the gold of Ophir, and the cattle upon a thousand hills, offered to God, could not cancel our obligations. The very best we can do is to "offer unto God thanksgiving, and pay our vows unto the Most High in the presence of all his people." This we can do. This we must do. Let us, therefore, reverently, this Thanksgiving Day, go to the house of the Lord, and there offer him the gratitude of our hearts. To obey is better than sacrifice.

THE TEACHING PREACHER.

It is said "the teaching preacher is to be the preacher of the future." We have heard much of him recently. We suppose he is somewhere now, in a wilderness, or cave, or mountain-top, getting ready to astonish the world with the extent and accuracy of his learning, and, withal, learning how to teach. Of course, when the teaching preacher comes, the exhorter and the man of heart must stand aside—if not, he will be pushed aside. Already it is asserted that his services will be no longer needed. He will be out of date.

All this looks to us like an effort to get ahead of the Master, and foretell what sort of men will be needed to carry on the work of the church. Indeed, it looks like an effort to forestall the Master. He called and sent out men of varied gifts, some apt in one thing and some in another, but all useful and successful as preachers. It has been so all along, and, we dare say, it will so continue. Our plain, old-fashioned Methodists need not get uneasy for fear the prodigies of the coming day will burst upon them before they are ready. All the good people of the present time will be in heaven before they arrive.

When "the teaching preacher" comes and brings with him nothing but the grey matter in his cranium, his congregations will not be packed; poisoned air of a heated auditorium will not reach his lungs. The Official Board will feel very much like the members of a certain Lyceum Committee of St. Louis, as related by Dr. Young in his "Characters." Having engaged the services of a lecturer for a course, they arranged for the first lecture to be delivered in the basement. After that they concluded to stay there. The room was large enough.

Learning is a good thing; the more a man has, the better—provided it is sanctified. But if it is acquired solely to be directed to the heads of the people, with the expectation of converting them to Christ, it will prove a failure. The intellectual assent of the world has already been given to the truth of the gospel. This has been achieved by teaching. What is now needed is to arouse men to action. Appeal to cold intellect will never do it. The heart must be reached. As long as human beings remain emotional—and that will be as long as the race exists—emotional preachers will be needed. It is said of a certain man in the Acts, that "he preached many things in his exhortation." We suppose he was a warm-hearted preacher, who urged his hearers to repent. The day for such preachers has not passed. It never will. The New York Sun said, some years since, "Wherever a pulpit is on fire, there will always be a crowd to see it burn." Something more than learning and aptness to teach is necessary. We persuade men. By the mercies of God when we can; by the terrors of the Law when we must.

THE ESSENCE OF SPORT.

Sport that is destitute of daring, or danger, if we may judge by the many accounts we see in the newspapers, is tame and wholly uninspiring. Where daring and danger combine, with the sight of flowing blood, there is interest — sometimes excitement almost to the point of frenzy. An advertised foot-ball game between two heavy teams calls together crowds of men and women, only a few of whom, we may safely assume, expect to see, or appreciate anything like athletic skill. The crowds gather to witness an exhibition of mere brute force, and the more brutal it is, the better the crowds like it. Whether the players cater to this taste, or whether they know that success depends on meeting force with force, we undertake not to say. Eliminate the danger from foot-ball, and you extract from it the chief essence of the sport.

For the same reason the crowds of toughs rush to the prize-fight. The bigger and the nearer the fighters approach to the level of the brute, the greater their attraction. They are sure to draw blood, and that is what the crowds desire to see. A boxing contest amounts to nothing. It is too tame. Horse-racing has ceased to be sport. It is a profession. Men follow it, not to see one horse outrun another, but because they have staked money, and hope to win.

A recent exhibition in our city confirms what we say. It was a mimic bull-fight. Regular professional Mexican fighters were employed, and live animals—perhaps from the ranges of Texas—were in the ring. Indeed, everything was prepared as if for a regular fight, but it was arranged and understood in advance that the bulls were not to be hurt. No security in favor of the men was exacted. They took their chances. It was, perhaps, as tame an affair—at the same time as disgusting and as disgraceful—as was ever allowed to take place in the city. There was nothing, it is said, worth seeing, save the agility with which the men jumped over the fence out of danger. After reading the account of it in the daily paper, the promoters ought to be ashamed to undertake the show anywhere else.

What was the matter with the fight? It was not a fight at all. It was nothing like as inspiring as the Georgia boy who fought the ground just to see how he could fight. No blood was drawn. There was but little daring and danger, because the men could so easily get out of the way. About five hundred persons witnessed the first performance. The second was on Sunday afternoon, with possibly a crowd of 2,000. A fight, with all the accessories and results of a Spanish or Mexican bull-fight, would have brought together a crowd of ten thousand on Sunday afternoon. We are a civilized people, and appreciate refined sport. The more bloody it is, the more it is appeciated. Cruelty and bloodshed, broken limbs and cracked heads, are what we pay to see when we attend real sporting exhibitions.

TEMPERANCE IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mississippi lacks but little of being a prohibition State. By popular vote the liquor traffic has been outlawed, and the open saloon suppressed in about four-fifths of the counties. But for the illegal sale of liquor, carried on in what is called "blind-tigers," the traffic would give the State very little trouble. And this trouble would be largely, if not entirely, averted if the "Federal privilege" were withheld. This privilege, when the tax is paid, operates as a license to sell so far as the general government is concerned, even in prohibition territory. For some reason, men who engage in the liquor trade are not much afraid of State laws, but they are afraid of Federal authority. So they proceed to secure themselves against Federal interference, and take their chances if arrested by the State.

Very many men of sound and sober judgment are of the opinion that the time is ripe for State prohibition, and are moving in that direction. Petitions to that effect will be presented to the next Legislature. Gov. Longino will also be asked to recommend statutory or constitutional prohibition in his message. Our Baptist brethren, who compose a very large number of Mississippi's best citizens, are deeply interested, and are taking a leading part in this good work. The Chickasahay Association, composed of more than thirty churches, and representing nearly three thousand citizens in the eastern section of the State, at its meeting in September unanimously joined in a petition to the above effect.

The Annual Conferences in Mississippi will soon convene. The brethren will bear this subject in mind, and take whatever action they deem right in the premises. This is purely a moral question—one that affects largely the spiritual as well as the temporal interests of the people of the State, and the church can well afford, not only to recommend, but to take a leading part in such moral reforms. It can be done aside from all partisan considerations. We would be pleased to see Mississippi take the lead of the Southern States in constitutional prohibition.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

A movement has been inaugurated in Mississippi to change a certain clause of the Constitution, and the people will soon be called on to say whether or not it shall be done. It is well known that the Constitution prohibits the citizens of the State from leaving, by will, money or other property to any church, charitable, or benevolent association. They can not even bequeath anything to school or college owned by an individual, or church, or corporation. If citizens are disposed to do anything for the public good, they must do it while they live, and this is not always convenient or practicable—at least, to the extent some of them might desire. In this matter we believe Mississippi stands alone. One result of this prohibition is the suffering of schools under the ownership and control of churches. It might not go so hard with these schools if their friends were allowed to leave them by will a few hundred or a few thousand dollars.

Whether the time has come to repeal this clause of the Constitution, we are unable to say. It is a matter that we have never been called to investigate. Bishop Galloway is on the ground, and is thoroughly informed as to the condition and needs of the State, and he is leading in the movement for repeal. The good citizens of the State have trusted him before, and, we dare say, can trust him again. The question is one of great importance. The interested ones will give it serious consideration.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Let all concerned take notice that the forthcoming session of the Louisiana Conference positively begins Dec. 12. This notice is repeated because of the fact that a typographical error in one of our church papers has misled or confused the minds of some of the brethren.

O. P. FITZGERALD.

Nashville, Tenn.

PERSONAL.

Dr. E. H. Mounger is closing his fourth year as presiding elder of the Vicksburg district. He is justly held in high esteem by his brethren as a Christian gentleman, preacher, and presiding officer. They will give him up with regret. He is a man of worth to the church.

We have had the pleasure of meeting Dr. E. B. Partin, a practicing physician, who is also a local preacher at Hickory, Miss. The Doctor is at present in New Orleans attending post-graduate lectures at one of the medical schools of the city. We thank him for the honor of a call.

In reporting Rev. J. W. Dorman as a transfer to the Memphis Conference, we had what we thought was reliable authority, but as his name does not occur in the list of appointments, we take it for granted that our informant was mistaken. Should it turn out to be a mistake, we will be glad.

Rev. Wesley G. Evans, local elder, died at Bond, Miss., Saturday, Nov. 16. He began preaching when about nineteen years of age, and for more than forty years has been a strong factor in Methodism along the Mississippi coast. Bro. W. L. Hightower, who gives us these facts, promises a memoir at an early date.

A painful note comes to us from Rev. Elton Wilson, of the Louisiana Conference. He says: "Our promising four-year-old boy entered into rest at two o'clock P. M. on Nov. 19. Little Malcom sleepeth, and is with us no more. We are very close to our Lord in this, our affliction." Those that "sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

A note from Rev. W. L. Anderson, of the North Mississippi Conference, dated Nov. 25, informs us that he is just from the bedside of his father, who lingers with typhoid fever, at the age of seventy-four. On account of this affliction, Brother Anderson fears he will not be at the Annual Conference session at Winona. He asks the prayers of the brethren.

From three sources we have had notice of the death of Brother P. B. Myers, father of Rev. S. B. Myers, of the North Mississippi Conference. He passed quietly to his heavenly home from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Whitten, in Tate county, Miss., Nov. 15. He was buried at Bethel Church, near Cold Water, Miss., with funeral services of the church conducted by Revs. W. L. Graves, W. W. Mitchell, and L. M. Lipscomb. His last illness was short and painful, but he died as he had lived—trusting in his Lord. It was our pleasure to know Brother Myers, and to partake often of his hospitality. He was an humble, consecrated Christian. His bereaved son says: "No cloud of doubt obscures the horizon, or dims the sky of our hope. We are fully resigned." The good man has entered into rest.

Fare to Louisiana Annual Conference.

The following railroads have consented to one and one-third rate to Annual Conference on certificate plan, provided there are fifty in attendance upon Conference—that is, fifty tickets purchased on this plan: Illinois Central, Mississippi Valley, Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific; Houston and Shreveport, Southern Pacific, St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern; Louisiana and Arkansas, Arkansas Southern, Kansas City Southern Texas and Pacific. When purchasing ticket get certificate from agent. This is to be endorsed by the secretary of the Conference while in session; then the agent at New Iberia, Mr. A. C. Pickett, will stamp same, and the return ticket will be sold at one-third usual price. Read directions, and follow strictly to the letter. Letter granting this rate in hand. Tickets will be on sale Dec. 7, 9, 10 11. Be sure to get certificate from agent when purchasing ticket, and let as many as come buy tickets this way, so as to insure the sale of fifty tickets, so the rate will not fall through. S. S. KEENER.

Rates to McComb.

All preachers, delegates, and others attending the Mississippi Annual Conference can buy tickets from Dec. 6 to 11, and get certificate entitling them to return for one-third fare. Certificate must be obtained every time delegate has to buy a new ticket. For instance: Passengers coming from any point on the A. and V. R R would buy tickets for Jackson and get certificates, and at Jackson they would buy tickets for McComb and get certificates again. These rates are good over all railroads in Mississippi and all roads in Louisiana east of the Mississippi river, except the G. and S. I. R. R. Parties desiring rates over that line will write Thos. P. Hale, General Passenger Agent, Gulfport, Miss.

All the brethren are requested to notify the undersigned when to expect them. JOHN W. CHAMBERS.

Attention!

Preachers and Delegates to the Louisiana Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: I am sending out this week and next a vest pocket booklet, containing the name and street number of your host's residence, where you will be entertained during the session of the Louisiana Conference. There will be a ticket, when necessary, entitling you to a pass over the Fisher bnss lines to your Conference home. You will find a complete schednle time-table of all the main railroads from the important railroad centers connecting with the Southern Pacific railroad. Do not come on the night trains, as none of these trains will be mot.

To parties coming via Alexandria from the Monroe, Shreveport, or Arcadia districts, it will be much cheaper and more convenient to go to Cheneyville. There you get the night's lodging and breakfast (and no transfers) for 75 cents, by special arrangement, which will be $1.25 cheaper than at Alexandria. Preachers coming over the St. Louis and Iron Mountain will wait at Alexandria thirty minutes for the Texas and Pacific. Yours truly,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

First. The Committee and Class of the Third Year will please meet in the Methodist Church, city of Winona, Tuesday morning, Dec. 3, at 9 o'clock.

Second. All the railroads which touch our territory have agreed to give the usual reduction of fare for the benefit of our Conference session. Purchase your ticket at full fare to Winona, secure a certificate to that effect from your local agent, have the secretary to sign it at Conference, and your return ticket will cost only one cent a mile.

Third. I have not yet been able to find the Journal of our Conference which contains a record of our Conference sessions from 1882 to 1898. I have written to Baltimore with the hope that it had been left in the room where the last session of the General Conference was held, but no trace of the missing Journal could be found. I again ask for any information which anyone may have concerning the Journal. Does anyone know its whereabouts?

The Commoner.

(Mr. Bryan's Paper)

The Commoner has attained within six months from date of the first issue a circulation of 160,000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the discussion of political, economic, and social problems. To the columns of The Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts; and his review of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

The Commoner's regular subscription price is $1 per year. We have arranged with Mr. Bryan whereby we can furnish his paper and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE together for one year for $2.25. The regular subscription price of the two papers when subscribed for separately is $3 net. When remittance is made by personal check, ten cents extra will be charged.

PENNIES

A THANKSGIVING STORY.

Lottie stood joyfully clinking the six bright pennies which grandma had just put in her hand. "I am going to have the nicest time!" she exclaimed.

Grandma finished buttoning the warm coat, put a kiss on each cheek, and said softly: "I know something better yet, Lottie."

The blue eyes opened wide. "Why, grandma," she said, "what could be nicer for a little girl than a holiday and pennies to spend just as she likes?"

Grandma could not help smiling as she replied: "Making a nice time for somebody else; that's it, Lottie. I know, and so will you, if you try it."

Very sweet looked Lottie that Autumn morning as she tripped down the street, clinking her six new pennies, and blushing yet at the memory of grandma's words Lottie was a good little girl, only a wee bit selfish, as both she and grandma knew.

A baker's window, all arrayed in Saturday morning glory, attracted her attention. O such lovely cream puffs, sugared doughnuts, buns, and chocolates! She gazed upon them with delight, exulting in her riches, yet finding it very hard to choose. "Six pennies'll buy three buns and one cream puff," she murmured, "or four doughnuts and one chocolate. O dear, I wish"—

She was so absorbed in the good things in the baker's window that she did not notice a little figure that crept up beside her till a little voice broke in upon her raptures, half crying with delight: "Buns, buns! Great fat buns!"

Lottie turned, to see a little girl like herself in size, but O so thin and pale, with her clothes in rags, and her fingers blue with the cold. It seemed as though she was sent there just to test Lottie, for the minute she saw her grandma's words came right to her mind. Here, surely, was a chance to make a nice time for somebody else. There was a great struggle in Lottie's selfish little heart, but she grasped the little girl's hand and drew her into the store. "A bun, sir," said Lottie, laying down a penny, and, putting the bun into the hand of the child, who stood dumb with wonder, said: "Eat it. You like them, do you not?"

It seemed but a second to Lottie when it had disappeared. She put down another penny with the same result, and so on until every penny was gone, and the little girl looked up with such a happy smile, and said softly: "I thank you, for I was so hungry."

Then Lottie took her hand and walked away, wondering if any little girl was ever so full before. Lottie asked the little girl where she lived, and she pointed to a dingy house in a narrow street, where the child said she and her mother lived and took care of her crippled father.

Lottie ran home even fuller than the little girl. "O, grandma," she cried, when she told her story, "it seems as though I never got so much for six cents in all my life! And to think I haven't had a single bun! I never would have believed it, grandma."

"Well, my child," replied grandma, "golden cream puffs and buns are very good things, but they can't equal a warm and generous heart, after all."

Thanksgiving Day was less than three weeks off, and Lottie was saving up all the pennies that grandma gave her, and what do you think she was planning? Well, I will tell you. She was going to send a Thanksgiving basket to the family in the narrow street, and every morning she counted her pennies over, and could hardly wait for the time to come when she could spend every one of them. You never saw a happier little girl than Lottie was on Thanksgiving morning as she grasped her savings and went down to the baker's to spend every cent for good things to put into her basket. And somehow another basket found its way to the house where the little girl lived. This one was filled with biscuits, a chicken all cooked, jelly, pie, and many other good things for the Thanksgiving dinner. I think Lottie's grandma had something to do with the packing of this basket, although she never said so.—Minnie W. Torrey, in Children's Visitor.

History of Thanksgiving Day

The earliest record which we have of an American Thanksgiving Day is found in the New England annals of 1621. In the Autumn of that year Governor Bradford, so saith the chronicler, sent out men to procure some game, in order that the New England colonists might properly enjoy a day of thanksgiving in remembrance of the fruits of their labors during the year that had passed. Another day of rejoicing was set apart and "solemnized" as "a day of thanksgiving unto the Lord," after an abundant harvest in 1622. It is stated that, on this occasion, Massasoit and his council of braves were invited to participate in the festivities, and that they did so, spending three days in feasting. Evidently the Indian friends of the colonists found Thanksgiving Day a day to be made the most of.

These thanksgiving days were not, however, of official character. The first official public Thanksgiving Day was not until the year 1631; and even this day was not at first intended to be a day of rejoicing and thanksgiving. It had been set apart as a day of fasting and prayer for relief. The colonists were in great distress; famine was imminent; a vessel laden with provisions, and long at sea, had not arrived. But just before the day of fasting came, the ship made port; and the day was then officially changed by the authorities from a day of sorrow to a day of thanksgiving. This was the first real Thanksgiving Day of the American people. Thanksgiving days were occasionally observed also in New Netherland after this date; but it was not until February, 1817, that another official Thanksgiving Day was proclaimed. That year Governor Kieft proclaimed "a day of general thanksgiving," the occasion being a victory of the colonists over the Indians. At the conclusion of peace, in 1645, another Thanksgiving Day was proclaimed. We are not told that the Indians were invited to this ceremony.

Occasional days of fasting, prayer and thanksgiving were kept by the various colonists, at different times; but no general Thanksgiving Day was set apart until 1775, when the Continental Congress adopted the practice of designating such days. The first was Thursday, July 20, 1775. The following Thanksgiving days were also suggested by the Continental Congress: Friday, May 17, 1776; Dec. 11, 1776; Wednesday, Apr. 22, 1778; Thursday, May 6, 1779; Wednesday, Apr. 4, 1780; Thursday, May 2, 1781; Thursday, Apr. 25, 1782. These days were suggested in the form of recommendations to the States, whose governors were asked to issue proclamations to their peoples for days in thanksgiving. Business with one exception was suspended on these occasions. Washington also issued a proclamation to the Colonial army for a general Thanksgiving day on Thursday, Dec. 18, 1777; and again on May 7, 1778.

The first national Thanksgiving Day was, by proclamation of President Washington, set for Thursday, Nov. 26, 1789. The second was set for Thursday, Feb. 19, 1795. The honor of the first suggestion seems to belong to Representative Elias Boudinot, who moved, in the House, that the President be requested to recommend "a day of thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by the people of the United States." There was some opposition to the motion, the objections advanced being that such a thing might tend to imitation of the frivolities and pomps of kingdoms and other harmful doings; but the motion prevailed, and Thursday, Nov. 26, 1789, became the first national Thanksgiving Day of the American people.—Harper's Weekly.

How Frank Won.

A prize of one hundred dollars, to be used for educational purposes, was offered in a school for boys. Among the contestants was a boy of seventeen named Frank Harlow. He did not succeed in winning the prize, and, a day or two later, one of his schoolmates, named Harry Marks, said to him: "Didn't get the prize, did you, Frank?"

"No, I did not," replied Frank, cheerfully.

"Feel kind o' cut up over it, don't you?"

"No; not particularly."

"Well, I'd hate to make as hard a fight as you made to win that prize, and then fail."

"I don't think that I have failed, Harry."

"Well, I'd like to know why you haven't failed! Didn't George Dayton win the prize?"

"Yes, I know he won the money; but I won just as much as George in that which comes from hard study. But you know, Harry, if you'll excuse me for saying it, your failure has been most marked."

"My failure! Why, what do you mean? I didn't go in for the prize at all. I made no attempt to win it."

"I know it," replied Frank; and then he added: "'They fail, and they alone, who have not striven.'"

"Oh, I see what you mean!" said Harry, rather soberly. "I suppose that there is something in that."

"There is a good deal in it," replied Frank. "It is too true that one of the eighteen boys who competed for the prize may be said to have failed. All of us won the prize which comes from honest effort, and it was a pretty big prize for most of us. I thought at first that I would not compete for the prize, for I felt quite confident that some of the other boys were so much further advanced than I was that I had very little chance of winning in the contest."

"You stood next to George Dayton at the examination, too," said Harry. "No, Frank, you did not fail, after all."

Harry was right. How could Frank fail to be a winner after the honest effort he had put forth?—Southern Churchman.

Some Things to Be Thankful For.

Our Eyes.—I looked into the sightless eyes of an old friend of mine, some years ago, and heard him say that he had never seen the sun rise, and had never looked upon his mother's face; and I realized that all my life I had been using my eyes, and never once had thanked God for them.

Our Reason.—I visited an insane asylum, and saw one of the most brilliant men this country has produced with reason dethroned, imagining himself a beast of the field, splendid in his physical proportions, but with mind entirely gone, and I turned away in shame to acknowledge that I had never thanked God for my reason.

Our Feet.—A certain beggar was crying out along the roadside that he was the brother of a king, and was without shoes. "What a shame," he said, "that a king's brother should go unshod!" and then he saw a poor beggar carried by without feet, and in confusion he began to thank God that he was better off than he. In ten thousand ways God has blessed us, for which we have not thought to render praise to him.—Exchange portraying "Popular American Actresses and Their Favorite Flower," all for $1.00. This calendar is a fine example of American art painted especially for Leslie's Monthly by Miss Maud Stumm, the famous American water color artist. Art stores would charge 50 cents each for these calendars. They are 12¼ x 10 inches, tied with silk ribbon, lithographed in twelve colors on heavy pebble plate paper.

The Anniversary Issue and Christmas Issue of Leslie's Monthly are worthy of preservation as examples of the highest point attained in artistic magazine illustration in colors and black and white.

Among the fiction and bright special articles which will appear in Leslie's Monthly during 1902 are products of the pens of Nansen, Zangwill, Ballington Booth, Henry van Dyke, Owen Wister, C. G. D. Roberts, Ralph Connor, Booker T. Washington, Frank R. Stockton, Mary Wilkins, Margaret Sangster, Conan Doyle, Sienkiewicz, F. Hopkinson Smith, Ian MacLaren, Hamlin Garland, Quiller-Couch, Bret Harte and a multitude of others.

By subscribing $1.00 now you receive the Art Calendar and 14 numbers of Leslie's Monthly.

Specimen copy and illustrated Prospectus 10 cents, which amount will apply on your subscription sent to us, should you accept the above offer.

Nov. 10, 1901.

FIRST CHURCH, SHREVEPORT, LA.

The year just closing has been one of fairly good results, so far as this charge is concerned. We have had an increase in membership, some good work done in several directions, collections all up, and we now have a handsome parsonage, in which we are domiciled. This property cost $6,500, on which we owe $1,500, which another year, we are sure, will see paid, and then my successor can have a clear field, and plenty to do. The ladies of the charge have done nobly, and the men have been liberal in meeting financial calls upon them, and, so far as I know, the church is united and prepared for better work in the future, for all of which God be praised.

W. T. BOLLING, P. C.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WEST POINT, MISS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Our church here is making some progress. It is very gratifying to see that a goodly number of our members are growing in grace and increasing in knowledge. We held a profitable meeting from Oct. 20 to Oct. 27. Bro. J. A. Bowan preached for us from Monday to Friday night. His sermons were strong, edifying, and inspiring. The Lord honored and greatly blessed his services, and they are highly appreciated by these excellent people. We have had fifty-two accessions during the year—six on profession of faith. The town is growing, and our church, harmonious and in a splendid spirit, is keeping up with it. We are expecting a good Conference. May the Lord kindly favor you in your important field!

Yours, J. M. WYATT.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

REV. FREDERICK WHITE, son of Redding and Mary L. E. White, was born in West Tennessee, May 30, 1831, and died Nov. 7, 1901, aged seventy years five months and eight days. He became a member of the church while young, giving his heart to God in a perpetual covenant. He was licensed to preach by Vincent Caldwell, his first presiding elder, in 1852. He traveled two years in the Memphis Conference, M. E. Church, South, and in the Fall of 1854 he was transferred, with several others, from that Conference to the Louisiana, which was held by Bishop Kavanaugh in December, 1854, at Bastrop, in Morehouse parish. He was appointed to the Chicot circuit, which embraced a large part of Avoyelles and St. Landry parishes, with J. F. Scurlock as assistant. On the thirtieth of October, 1856, he and Miss Henrietta Talleferro were united in holy matrimony by Rev. B. F. Alexander. Seven children were born to these parents, four of whom preceded the father. The other three having gone on before, awaited his coming. He lived at the ensuing Conference. During the war he became chaplain, for a time, of a Texas regiment. After a few years he re-entered the Louisiana Conference, and did much hard work as an itinerant preacher. He not only traveled circuits, but at different times he acceptably served two full terms on the Alexandria district. Again he located, and remained in that relation to the end of his life. His house was a home for preachers. Several young men found comfortable quarters there while on the Evergreen circuit. His household was one of peace and harmony, and where love directed the steps of every member. He prayed; he had faith in God, and worked for the glorious reward promised in the gospel. He preached what he believed, and with power he made known to his hearers the message of salvation. As a preacher, he was clear and pointed. He did not aim at preaching great doctrinal sermons, but in a practical way to make known the terms of the gospel, and the importance of accepting these terms to-day. He had a strong voice, which was most effective when inspired with his theme; and during revivals he was most successful in its use. Both as a man and a preacher he was very popular. No preacher could draw a larger congregation where he has lived most of his time for forty-five years. He was a successful business man, accumulating a large estate, which he leaves as a legacy to his bereaved family. One thing can not be said of him: that he was dishonest in his dealings. He was honest, and dealt honestly with his fellow-men. His gains were legitimate. But his local relation and business enterprises did not keep him from preaching regularly as long as his health would permit; and when he could no longer preach, he still attended church. But the time came that he should cease to work and live. For three years he was partially paralyzed in one side; then his heart became involved, as also his throat and head. He suffered much toward the last. He was perfectly resigned to the will of God, and, as a disciple of Christ, watched and waited for the end to come. He rests in the kingdom of God, and will wear a crown of glory as an emblem of spiritual royalty. Whilst his family and the church mourn their loss, yet with him to die was gain. He will sleep peacefully until the resurrection, when he will be aroused from his silent slumbers to meet his Lord in the skies.

J. F. SCURLOCK.

MISS ALYNE GRAAN was born Jan. 21, 1880, and died at her home in Indianola, Oct. 25, 1901. Her entire life was spent in and near the community in which she died. To all of her many friends, and especially to her own loved ones, it is said indeed that she should have been taken away just as she had reached the age of maturity and entered on life's duties. Not now, but "some day we'll understand." "She was a good girl," is the verdict of all who knew her. As a daughter and as a sister, she was kind and thoughtful; as a friend, she was obliging and true. She loved life dearly, but when sickness came, she bore it patiently, and after nine weeks of suffering met death calmly and bravely. A little more than a year before this she had professed faith in Christ as her Savior, and joined the Methodist Church. As a Christian, she was not demonstrative in an emotional way, but, what is better, she was consistent. A few days before the last she was heard to say, "It is well with my soul." Our loss is her gain. Let us join her in that better land.

W. C. HARRIS.

MISS LOU ETTA, daughter of John and Mary Glower, was born near Lexington, Holmes county, Miss., Dec. 26, 1870. She professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, in childhood, and was a faithful member of the same until Sept. 9, 1901, when her pure and gentle spirit went to join mother and the angels in the home of the soul. Miss Etta was one of the purest and gentlest of Christians. She was a peace to the community, and light and joy to the home. Her devotion to her mother was tender and beautiful. Her three last years on earth were years of suffering, and after the death of her mother in January, 1901, she was never able to leave her home. She bore her suffering with Christian fortitude and patience. A guileless Christian, faithful friend, devoted sister and obedient daughter has gone. Let us meet her in heaven.

Her pastor, W. D. MCCULLOUGH.

DR. G. F. PEEK was born Aug. 12, 1836, and died Nov. 7, 1901, at 9:35 P. M., aged sixty-five years two months and twenty-five days. Dr. Peek was a native of Autauga county, Ala. He was a son of George and Sarah Saxon Peek. When he was about twelve years of age he joined the Baptist Church and remained a consistent member of the same until after the war between the States. When he returned home from the war he joined the M. E. Church, South, and remained a member of the same until death. He leaves five children to mourn their loss—two sons and three daughters. A suitable memoir will be prepared in due time.

Catarrh Can Not Be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they can not reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it, you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

Concerns the Clergy.

General Julian S. Carr, of Carolina, walked home across the Roanoke, a barefooted Confederate, from Appomattox. In twenty years he made a million out of the Durham Tobacco and quit the cigarette factory for the cotton mill. He has directed that every Southern Methodist Minister shall have at cost "the Complete Flour" (Lafferty process), a whole wheat product, yet creamy white, nutty flavor and three hundred per cent. richer in brain food—"All the Wheat Fit to Eat."

A booklet with a portrait of General Carr, and the anatomy of the wheat-berry in colored illustrations and its history as a health food, is sent free, if request is sent to Lafferty Complete Flour Co., Richmond, Va.—North Carolina Advocate.

"Cured of Snuff-Dipping."

To New Orleans Christian Advocate.

DEAR ADVOCATE: It gives me great pleasure to state through the columns of your paper that Dr. J. S. Hill, of Greenville, Texas, has cured me of the snuff habit.

I was an awful slave for years to snuff, but I thank God that I was cured through Dr. Hill's remedy.

ATTENTION, PREACHERS.

Now is the time for you to do some good work for the ADVOCATE.

The ADVOCATE greatly needs your help.

We need a new dress of type, that we may make the paper attractive.

Our machinery needs repairs, and there are quite a lot of other things that are necessary to bring the paper up to the proper standard.

It can not be done without your individual help.

Now, will you not make one hard effort, before Conference, to aid this worthy cause?

We believe the following will help you:

For Two Dollars we will send to all new subscribers the ADVOCATE from now until Jan. 1, 1903.

Thus, by sending us the names now, they will receive the paper nearly fifteen months for two dollars. This is worth considering.

If subscribers have not the cash on hand, you can send any time between now and your first Annual Conference.

To all old subscribers who will pay their subscription in full to date, and send us two dollars additional, we will send the paper from now until Jan. 1, 1903. The label tells when subscriptions expire.

The paper will also be sent from now until January, 1903, at our regular club rate: $1.50 in clubs of ten, cash with the order.

Now, brethren, please give this your personal attention, and by sending us one or two new subscribers, we will have as well printed a paper as anybody.

Next week we will mail you some sample copies to help you in the work.

Please help us. We want to make a good report at Conference.

Fraternally yours,
JNO. W. BOSWELL.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Many accounts for subscriptions and advertisements are due the ADVOCATE. It is important that these accounts be settled as soon as possible. We hope every brother who knows himself to be indebted to the paper will not delay a day. Some of these accounts are long past due. The money is needed. Brethren, one and all, please respond.

THE COMING CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The wheel has about made its annual rotation. In a few days it will stop, and then start again. The fellow who holds on at the hub doesn't grow dizzy like the fellow who is riding out on the periphery—hanging on with one hand—uncertain where he will fall. We think the economy of our church as to the time-limit very sound. Except in rare cases, we can not see the necessity of moving a preacher every year. It is a hardship and an affliction to require a man to take wife and children out upon the road in mid-winter, spend the little purse of money he may have (as a bonus) and need for family supplies, traveling from one place to another. He leaves as good a people as those to whom he goes. The fact is, it takes a preacher a year to find and get acquainted with all his people, and it takes some people a year to know the preacher. As a rule, the preacher is a better man than the people. It is not always "like people, like priest." To move a preacher after one year's labor is a serious wrong to him, because of the under-current of suspicion and inquiry. Why? It is a fact that a preacher sometimes asks to be moved. It is a fact that it is sometimes necessary to move him. Except for health considerations, the necessity to move need seldom arise. We are aware that the Bishop must depend upon the presiding elders for a large portion of all the information he gets. We fear he sometimes depends too much on them. We believe if our Bishops would sometimes consult other preachers, and now and then a layman, they would get some information they greatly need, especially pertaining to the presiding elder's office.

The polity of our church is good enough, but in its practical application and adaptation to individuals there is sometimes friction. We believe that no man should hold the presiding elder's office longer than eight years, consecutively. The longer he holds it, the more he becomes unfitted for pastoral work. Too much authority sometimes spoils a man. New material needs to be developed annually. Sometimes there is a great misfit in the presiding elder's office. Our ablest preachers ought to be in this office. All we get out of them is pulpit ministrations. Holding a quarterly meeting is a very small affair. If the presiding elder is not superior as a preacher, what good does he do? We grew up inflated with the notion that the presiding elder was a giant in the pulpit; but, alas! alas! it is not true always. He is strictly a representative man. Methodists and other people look upon him as such, and expect more from him in the pulpit than from the pastor. The people never see him, except in the pulpit; hence he is guaged and measured by his preaching, and that only.

There is just as much reason for moving a presiding elder sometimes as there is in moving a pastor. The wisdom of the appointing power is not infallible, and for that reason is sometimes in error. Then, at the first opportunity, there is wisdom in correcting said mistake. If the presiding elder would consult more and oftener with the laity, he would know more of the efficiency and non-efficiency of pastors. He can not be fully informed otherwise. If the Bishop would consult with preachers and delegated laymen as to the fitness and unfitness of men in the presiding elder's office, he would sometimes "hear it thunder." Secret conclaves do not always conduce to best welfare of the church. We are not disposed to abridge the Bishop's authority, but we think he owes it to himself and the church to have the "light thrown on" if the presiding elder's office is to retain its old-time dignity and power, the best pulpit ability must be forged to the front. We will have to grow our presiding elders. There is a tendency among our best and ablest preachers to hunt a nest in the presidency of our colleges or fat stations. The man on "Post Oak" circuit is preaching the gospel to save souls. There is no reason why our educated laymen should not man these college offices and faculties, and let the church have these preachers for presiding elders and pastors. We certainly need them.

It may be more comfortable to teach than preach, but some men can teach who can not preach. How a preacher can ease his conscience and quit the pulpit to teach, has always puzzled us. Upon the accepted theory of a divine call to preach, how can he?

The exactions of the pastorate are hard, and sometimes severe, and rasping under discipline may explain it. Freedom from authority and a larger salary may ease a man's conscience, and lead him to believe that teaching is saving souls. We do not wish that anyone should draw the inference that we are thrusting at the presiding elders now in office. No more so than to those who have been or may be. We are discussing facts, and not men.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NEWS.

BY PROF. B. E. YOUNG.

Thursday afternoon the election of officers of the Senior class was held. Mr. J. R. Countiss was elected president; C. M. Simpson, vice-president; A. L. Fairley, secretary and treasurer; G. M. Galloway, poet; Pope Jordan, historian; W. L. Duren, orator. This class is composed of sixteen members—one of the largest in the history of the college; and the fact that one of its members is a young lady, makes it further unique. We believe that this class is one of the strongest we have yet sent out. Certainly few classes have brought greater honor to Millsaps College in collegiate and intercollegiate affairs.

At this meeting the class declared overwhelmingly in favor of the cap and gown as its distinctive dress on public occasions. There is much to be said in favor of the use of the academic garb in colleges and universities, and the class has before it a long line of distinguished precedents. The class of 1899 also voted to adopt this costume, we understand, but for some reason never carried out their plan, so that the present Seniors have the honor of introducing the custom here. The class also adopted a design for a class pin submitted by one of the best college jewelers.

The new fertilizer plant, located just north of the college, has generously offered to supply us with the sulphuric acid used in the laboratories. The cost of acids for experimental purposes is no small item in the yearly budget, and the college is much indebted to the owners of the plant for this courtesy. This is one more evidence of the cordial relations existing between the school and the people of Jackson.

Perhaps the most interesting debate of the season was held Friday night in the Lamar Literary Society. Messrs. A. P. Hall, E. L. Field, and H. L. Clark defended the affirmative side of the question, "Resolved, That the steel strike of 1901 was unjust," while Messrs. M. L. Culley, Cleyton Potter, and W. O. Tatum defended the negative. The decision was awarded to the affirmative.

President W. B Murrah was called recently to Canton, Miss., where he made an address before the Railroad Y. M. C. A.

The Lamar Society has just had an important meeting, the occasion being its election for representatives at its anniversary and at commencement. After a heated contest Mr. Allen Thompson was chosen anniversarian; Mr. O. W. Bradley was unanimously made orator. A committee was appointed to invite Hon. H. L. Whitfield, State Superintendent of Education, to address the society and be their guest at this anniversary celebration. Passing, then, to the election of commencement debaters, the body chose Messrs. C. D. Potter and A. J. McLaurin, Jr.

The members of the Freshman class had the pleasure of observing the stars through the big telescope last week, through the courtesy of Professor Moore.

We are glad to note the return of Mr. Lanrie Geddis, who has been at home sick for some time. Mr. B. Z. Welch, also one of our best students, is now at home suffering with fever. With these exceptions, we have had no illness among the students.

Assisted by Dr. W. C. Black and Rev. J. R. Countiss, Bishop C. B. Galloway recently ordained Rev. Wm. Walter Holmes, of Meridian, a deacon of the church, to which order he was recently elected by the Tennessee Annual Conference.

Mr. J. R. Bingham, of Carrollton, has just been with us, attending a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees.

Rev. C. M. Simpson has taken charge of one of the Bible classes of the Y. M. C. A.

A GRAVE QUESTION.

Can we, as Christian ministers, endorse the intercollegiate foot- and base-ball games in our church schools? I answer, We can not, for various reasons. Church schools stand for something, differentiating them from all non-church schools. The word "church," as connected with school, makes the decision in the Christian father's mind, and many others, as to where they will send their sons to be educated. In such a school it is expected that the morals will be closely guarded. The teachers are supposed to be model Christians, from whom their sons are to learn refinement and good morals as well as mental culture. None of this comes from the match games we oppose. The fact that parents send off their sons at a sacrifice of a stinted living, and money hard earned, argues they want the very largest return in manhood possible. No place promises so much as the church school. Never does a parent send off his son to school with the expectation of his returning ruined by vices contracted at school. Match games are a step downward from the true ambition of manhood, and puts a premium on boyish ambition which is childish, and leads to a family of vices no church school can afford to father. No church school can justify itself in match games with other schools for the applause one may gain and the odium the other may receive. One of the effects is a diversion of mind from study, and a perversion of the object for which the pupil was sent to school. No thoughtful father expects his son to return from school an athlete as the climax of his education.

Another objection is cruelty and inhumaneness of the games. It does not sound much like church school work when in those games it is expected that some of the boys will come out with dislocated or broken limbs, an eye knocked out, a nose broken, or a face so bruised as would arouse the suspicion of any humane person as to the allowableness of the game. Add to this the class of dissipated men who attend—the gambler, the drunkard, the worldly of all grades; then the crazy that possesses the individual after he returns home. The harmless, obedient, church-going son, who is expected to return a modest, refined Christian gentleman, surprises his parents with his boisterous coarseness; weaned from his church, infatuated with the game, so that he and his crowd can play a game within the sound of a funeral, or near the ground of a protracted meeting, and think it nobody's business.

Many preachers can testify to similar facts to these. It does not seem that church schools can lay themselves liable in any way for such a state of affairs as these, and yet they do.

Under this regime a father might put into the hands of a school president a thousand dollars for the education of his son, and it reappear most conspicuously in his mania for games—a thousand dollars worse than burned up. And if manhood could be estimated by dollars, the son has lost ten times ten thousands in manhood and morals. This may seem a strong array of charges against the games, but the half has not been told of the evils resulting therefrom. We can not endorse the game.

Do not let it be said that we will lose patronage if the games are prohibited between colleges. Surely no parent makes this a condition on which he sends his son to school. Most assuredly the parent or guardian is the one to decide this matter. Neither let it be pleaded as a necessity to physical development. The gymnasium is for that purpose. Of course, a college Board of Trustees or a college faculty would not surrender their knowledge of school government, and be dictated to by some whimsical pupil, or pupils, as to what they should or should not allow. Our Boards of Trustees and faculties are supposed to be men, not children.

A PREACHER.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: Many of your readers will be pleased to know that we are having the most prosperous year of any since our connection with the college. We erected during the Summer a new dormitory large enough to accommodate seventy-two students, and we now have the original buildings and this new annex filled, with the exception of about four rooms not yet taken. This new building is fitted with new furniture, hot and cold baths and modern conveniences, and connected with a covered bridge over the street with the dining-room and main building. We also secured the use of two residences in the same block with the annex; connected them with a gallery, fitted them up with gas connections, hot and cold baths, an excellent cooking range for coal, a gas range, and other kitchen and dining-room furniture; also with bed-room furniture, and have opened in this our Industrial Home for the benefit of worthy girls who find it necessary to economize in getting an education. One of our professors and his wife live in this home and superintend it, his wife acting as matron, the students being under the same rules as those living in the other dormitories and having the same privileges. The girls divide the work among themselves, which makes it very light on all, not taking more than a half hour each day on an average, which does not interfere with their studies. They live at actual cost, and will get through on about $100 a year, they think. This enables many a worthy girl to get an education in a religious institution who would otherwise be deprived of a college education. Some of our best and most honored girls and best students are in this home. It is quite popular, and the girls are very happy in it. There is room for but few more in this home, although we did not open it till late, and few knew about it. We hope to be able to enlarge it by next session.

We have recently put electric lights in the dormitory in the main building, which makes it more pleasant and convenient, and removes the danger of accident. We have also added a well-equipped scientific laboratory for the use of students in the scientific course. With the science lecture room erected last year, and our new professor of sciences from the A. and M. College of Virginia, we now have one of the best-equipped science departments of any college for girls in the South.

We have by far the largest attendance we have ever had, and the best student body. We will enroll over four hundred this session, two-thirds of them being boarders. We have about 225 boarding students. We have added a drill this year, which gives excellent, healthful out-door exercise to the girls, improves their carriage, and makes them more graceful. We have also employed a fine professor of voice, a musician of note, a strong composer of vocal music, as well as fine trainer of voice. He will make this department as strong as any in the college. He is also an excellent Christian gentleman, a local preacher in our church, and a great help in religious work. We are doing the best grade of literary work we have ever done. In proof of the character and thoroughness of the work, we report the fact that one of our graduates of this year has entered the Junior class, A. B. course, in the University of Tennessee, and is ranking among the first in her class, being the only girl taking Greek in the university. Another is in the University of Chicago taking the A. B. course, and will take her degree in June after having been there only two years. This speaks for the character of work we are doing in this line.

We have made a good beginning along spiritual lines this session. Already we have had eighty professions of salvation since school opened, and about thirty, or more, have joined the different Methodist Churches in Meridian. There has not been a week passed this session but that some girl has been saved. Some were converted in Bro. Bradford's meeting at East End; others at the college, either in the Christian Association room, or in the office, parlor, or in some teacher's room, or in their bed-rooms. The Lord is with us in great power in the morning and evening worship, and in our daily work. Preachers who have visited the college tell us they have never seen such a religious atmosphere in a college. And what is better, many from whose pastoral charge we have students tell us that it lasts when the girls go home in the Summer. Several have told me that they are the best workers they have at home. One pastor said he was always glad to meet up with an E. M. F. C. girl, because he usually met up with a religious worker; and another preacher standing near corroborated his statement. This could not be said of all of our girls. I wish it were always true. Yet I think they can safely find it true of the large majority of our students. Out of all the boarding students, nearly two hundred have voluntarily joined Bible training-classes. Not all of our girls are saved yet, though we are praying and trusting that all may be saved before the session closes. Let everyone that reads these lines, and knows how to get hold of God in prayer, unite in prayer for our work.

We shall be glad to have you, Mr. Editor, and any of our pastors or laymen and women who pass through Meridian, to stop at the college and visit us, and see something of our work. We reserve a room for our preachers which is always open to them, and we want them to examine our work and equipments.

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. BEESON.

VANCLEAVE, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I write you a brief account of our work during this year. This charge is composed of nine societies, requiring 1,500 miles of travel during the year to meet the appointments, not to mention the hundreds of miles traveled during the year in visiting the people. This gives one the idea of the magnitude of the work—at least, one feature of it. We have held a number of protracted meetings, quite a number of people have been converted, and 27 or 28 persons have been added to the church, mostly on profession of faith. Two new church-houses have been erected during the year, both neat, substantial houses, valued at $1,100. We have expended some money on the personage—fencing, etc.

Our camp meeting at New Prospect was a success. Bro. W. W. Simmons, our efficient presiding elder, was on hand looking well after all of the interests of the church. Dr. H. W. Featherstun, Revs. J. G. Galloway and T. J. O'Neal did the preaching. I have heard many favorable expressions as to the preaching. Some have said that it was the best ever heard at this camp ground. Dr. Featherstun's sermon on the judgment—11 A. M., Sunday—made a very profound impression on the minds of his audience. These brethren are held in high esteem by my people.

All of the collections ordered by the Conference are paid in full, and only a small amount due the preacher-in-charge. This, doubtless, will be paid.

Altogether, we have done well this year. The people of this charge are kind and appreciative. We feel under lasting obligations to them for their many tokens of love and kindness during the two years that we have served them. We will ever pray God's blessings upon them.

H. B. VANDENBURG, P. C.

Attention!

Preachers and Delegates to the Louisiana Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: I am sending out this week and next a vest pocket booklet, containing the name and street number of your host's residence, where you will be entertained during the session of the Louisiana Conference. There will be a ticket, when necessary, entitling you to a pass over the Fisher lines to your Conference home. You will find a complete schedule time-table of all the main railroads from the important railroad centers connecting with the Southern Pacific railroad. Do not come on the night trains, as none of these trains will be met.

To parties coming via Alexandria from the Monroe, Shreveport, or Arcadia districts, it will be much cheaper and more convenient to go to Cheneyville. There you get the night's lodging and breakfast (and no transfers) for 75 cents, by special arrangement, which will be $1.25 cheaper than at Alexandria. Preachers coming over the St. Louis and Iron Mountain will wait at Alexandria thirty minutes for the Texas and Pacific. Yours truly,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

Christian Advocate.

THE UNFORGOTTEN DEAD.

DR. C. K. MARSHALL.

BY M.

Quite distinctly does Dr. Marshall rise in recollection, attired in his "customary suit of solemn black," with the inevitable black silk hat—the once conventional beaver tile; about five feet ten inches in height, brawny, protuberant of chest. He was somewhat coarse-featured; of a very ruddy complexion; homely, like an Anglo Saxon yeoman; sturdy, deep-breasted, sinewy. His snowy hair had a furrow of parting on either side his head, and a ridge in the middle, and was brushed back stiffly, almost bristly. On top of his head there was a large disc of baldness. His upper lip was bare. Upon a somewhat long chin he wore what is called "chin whiskers." These whiskers were a notable feature. When sitting down, they forked obliquely across his chest; when standing erect, they mantled his breast with their snowy whiteness. He had a round, bulging brow; heavy, distinct, bushy eye-brows, making a dusky line (broken at the nose) across his upper face, in contrast with the snowy hair of his head; a nose suggestive of Roman; large mouth, a veritable gateway of sound; somewhat bulging or protruding lips, that seemed word-wise, language-caressing, rhetoric-loving; a dark eye, with a sort of mistiness of hue in it, like the bloom upon a black grape; twinkling in arch scintillations in fun and merriment; filmy and softly gleaming in pathos.

You could hardly say he had a handsome face, but it was stamped with an expression of masculine traits of character, deeply engraven with sincerity and force; a manliness as of home-spun texture; a sort of home-bred honesty or brawny sincerity; strong-fibered downrightness and uprightness; a sort of polished ruggedness, as of great force of character, and high and innate manliness; deep-heartedness intellectualized, but softened by social amenities. This homely-noble countenance was swiftly kaleidoscopic in its expressive changefulness, and seemed as sensitive to demonstrate heart-play as a fine mirror to reflect form.

He was a delightful man, socially. He had an easy, cordial familiarity; a sparkling urbanity, a polished and endearing geniality, without any taint of condescension or patronage; commanding respect and preserving his standing, even in a role of breezy bonhommie, at times; "a mercurial gayety of heart."

On the genial current of his soul he swept one, and you felt a delight akin to that a vigorous and heated bather does as he revels in the high surf of ocean. He was exuberant from chaste and exhilarating animal spirits. Claimed no conventional prerogatives. Did not flourish his years, nor flaunt his clericality. Was not a "wag" among divines, nor a divine among "wags."

He was pre-eminently a showy orator, a decided and dexterous rhetorician, and a good elocutionist; and, I am compelled to say, a good deal of a necromancer and sensation. As an all-round speaker, he had but few equals; and was good on all occasions. In respect to range, in his prime I am informed he had hardly a superior, if an equal, on the hustings in his State; and Mississippi was then in the zenith of her oratorical renown. What is certainly true of him is that he was always fluent; generally, exceedingly stirring, voluble, and fascinating in thought, diction, and delivery. Few orators had greater demands upon them from their reputation; and the expectations of his auditors he rarely, if ever, failed to honor.

He had a drawing power with intellectual men who went to hear him with the hope that they would see a sight, and have a treat, as an epicure would have paid a visit to Lucullus—sure to get a dish to titillate his palate at the banquet. He was an orator quite in demand for secular occasions; could be trusted always, too, for impromptus, where eminent orators sometimes fail. He had a magician-like gift of clothing the palpable and familiar "with golden exhalations of the dawn," or, like morning, to paint "all her fleecy skirts with gold." Few men garnished the commonplace with such fetching graces of diction. He was a felicitous complimentarian; sincere and full, without fulsomeness; signalizing, with graceful allusion, any discriminating trait of personality his bright alacrity of apprehension had discovered in the subject of his panegyric.

He was a versatile man, a Proteus in oratory, and went from "grave to gay, from lively to severe," with a dexterity and force, superb and facile. It was often his lot to eggrandize potatoes and pumpkins. He was specially dear to and beloved by dignitaries of agricultural fairs, and to the "Village Hampdens," by a knack of allusion that gratified their self-consequence, and their transitory and petty importance, and which made them, for the hour, "Lords of the Ascendant."

The breeder of a fine horse or hog, the producer of an extra large beet or cabbage, went to the bosom of his family, feeling that, for him, there was a surcease of "homely joys and destiny obscure," after the tribute paid by the orator of the day.

I shall never forget his delivery, in his initiative or exordium, in secular oratory. I do not mean his arts of voice and gesture, but the subtle and delightful charm of his exquisite individuality of style.

I can not degrade it by calling it artifice; it was full of address—an ardor of winsomeness, unspeakably seductive. At that stage it was persuasive, and not overbearing or commanding. There was a sort of ardent gallantry of delivery or bearing, a wooing of your eye, and ear and soul, that had the endearing commendations of a personal compliment; that came upon you as the suit of a gallant cavalier to his lady love—somewhat as Romeo's spell upon Juliet; in the ravishing realisticness of its ineffable blandishments; one of those rare and high experiences. There was a sort of clairvoyancy, in a subtle charm of winningness, next to entrancing. It seemed an insurmountable emanation of mere presence, rather than any spell from action or utterance, as if his mere personality made an atmosphere of entrancement. The captivation, after all efforts at analysis, seems quite occult, yet, piques, while it baffles description. Perhaps I had better say it was bewitching, and there leave it.

It was as a preacher, however, that Doctor Marshall wrought his greatest works, and won his greatest renown as an orator. At this lapse of time I can not attempt to characterize his exegesis, except in very general terms. I think it perfectly safe to say it displayed freshness, depth, lucidity of exposition, without anything bizarre, strained, or unorthodox; amplitude of survey, nicety of perspective and modulation; was strenuous in reasoning, postulated with assent-compelling, illuminated with historic research, illustrated with noble lore; was racy with anecdote, vivid with inventive and affluent quaintness, lambent with fancy, teeming with imagery, illumined with simile, furthered with hyperbole, poignant with application, and seemed to traverse the whole circle of elucidation and persuasion with his wonderful variegation, breadth and symmetry of style, and picturesqueness and piquancy of delivery; irradiated and aggrandized by an individuality, imponderable as a factor of enhancement, and utterly indescribable. He appeared to have an ingratiating consciousness of power over and "rapport" with his audiences, and an endearing self-possession.

"The ease
That marks security to please."

An ingenuous elateness seemed to elevate and commend him, reminding one of Milton's words, "Hope elevated, and joy brightened his crest."

He had "that self-trust which in the man of genius is sublime, and in the man of talent insufferable." I used to like his noble courage of conscious masterliness, his undisguised and inspiriting self-assertiveness. He was like a skillful aeronaut, with everything fixed for a grand ascension, conscious of conferring a superb pageant upon and pleasure to the multitude. You will find this robust frankness in most of the heroic characters of history—in warriors, orators, statesmen, saints.

His gesticulation was highly ornamental. It appeared a trifle profuse, a sort of Sir Charles Grandison style; an elaborate elegance, never inept, but sometimes rather overdone. It seemed like a lavishness of pose and action. These overflowed and ornamented delivery with a certain richness of accompaniment or embellishment, as a most florid arabesque of obligato accompaniment on a delightful instrument does a fine solo from a heavenly voice. His throat was a grand repertory of tone, and he loved arabesques and ornamentations of inflections, seeming to remember how the old worthies had musical accompaniments to their speeches; and he was not ashamed of a sort of voluptuous profusion of varied intonations, and mellow and melo-dramatic modulations.

His voice had thin, clear, piercing notes at times, like the yelp of a beagle when warm on the track, in certain tones of vociferation; then mellow full-throated roundness of sound much like a "French-horn;" in a sort of melo-dramatic style, and as if in conscious allurement and seductive appeal to the ear. Then, again, his voice rang out in penetrating upper notes, like the crack of a rifle in crisp morning air; and it had airy dexterities and gladsome salliences of tone in that register, like some blithesome, swift and unmerless bird, swallow-like, gamboling in mid-air, in graceful ecstasies of flight; joyous wing-whimsies and librations. It had a fine range, an infinite variety of cadences; was very flexible and beautifully modulated, of fine compass and volume; pealing thin, almost shrill and clear, in upper or tenor register; broad and mellow in middle; rich, round, sonorous in bass, but not grand. It was exquisitely attuned to the range of sentiments in prayer; especially soothing, consoling in pathos, and in recumbency upon "the loving-kindness and tender mercies of our Heavenly Father."

He was the master, not the dupe, of his versatile inflections; and was apt at dramatic imitations of tones and captivating mimicry. Predominantly, his voice was musically vibrant, as if age-shaken; a sort of tremolo habit, but, possibly, its life-long wont; a sort of plaintive faint-huskiness, with a great pliability in and expressiveness of the tender and pathetic. And it seemed prone to, and delighted in that key. It had a rich fidelity and captivating trueness and fullness of expression of tone in pathos, and merriment or humor. These two opposite spheres served to show the breadth, elasticity and versatility of his fine voice.

I am so particular to dwell on voice, because all who remember Doctor Marshall know that he was not a man to renounce any "appliance and aid" for effect; and, when we know its capabilities, and his delight in impressiveness, the great range of his repertory, you will know that there was a world of play, tone-lights, tone-shades, in his facile and wonderfully dexterous organ.

Bear in mind now, constantly, these physical characteristics of the orator: great expressiveness of face; graceful, forceful, elegant gestures (what else, but the last, can some of them be called?) often noble, sometimes grand; a voice full of variability, flexible, strikingly consonant and even dramatic; an equipment rare, and managed with consummate tact; engaging and melting in softer moods; commanding, next to resistless, in higher ones—"a glorious privacy" of style.

If you had been under the charm of his electrifying method often, when you came to hear him speak, you were on a peak of expectancy, quivering with impressionableness, and yearning for the thrills of his possessingness, or delightfully, recumbently susceptible, like "the earth all Danæ to the stars."

There must have been an interaction of electrification pulsing from speaker to auditor till a deep glow of enkindlement suffused and thrilled both. I think there was a spell, an ascendency with which genius dances men's emotions, as a puppet, and we laugh and cry at slightest hint, when, before the sorcery, we could hardly laugh or cry at all. Men make their auditors, and sway them "above all rule or art."

Like all men of great imagination, Doctor Marshall "was an idealist." With him, as with Spencer, "the ideal was not a thing apart and unattainable, but the sweetener and ennobler of the street and fireside." Hence his ideality invigorated, fortified, emboldened us. We could not fear to be called dreamers; were exempt from the blights and chills of cynicism; were immune from the groveling dread of derision, and of the bludgeon of vulgar and droning dullards; dared to wear our dress and feathers, in sympathetic exultations, under his spell; were birds of paradise in our mode, and had its privilege of plumage; had the courage of our fascination; wore our hearts upon our sleeves, nor dreaded that daws would "peck at" them.

SOME HISTORICAL DATA.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

The article of Aug. 15, on "The Origin of Immersion," has created quite a stir amongst the Baptist brethren. Their modesty was shocked in several States. One writer even charges "Circuit Rider" with "false statements . . . offensively set forth." But "Circuit Rider" has not been more immodest than warranted by many historical facts. He started out with no intention of getting into a controversy; simply to indoctrinate Methodists generally.

But, as several are calling for "historical data" in support of the statement that immersion was first practiced by a trine immersion in a state of entire nakedness, a few quotations are here given. They come second-hand, it is granted, but they are taken from authorities who say they "have not taken them at second-hand, or garbled authors." For immersionists to rant is but to break the looking-glass for revealing their own ugliness. Many immersionists even grant that the primitive church baptized stark naked. Dr. Wall says: "The ancient Christians, when they were baptized by immersion, were all baptized naked, whether they were men, women, or children." Prof. Steward, Mr. Benedict, Robinson, and others, say the same.

But the reader is especially referred to the authorities of the early centuries. St. Cyril, "bishop of Jerusalem," was born about two hundred years after the death of the apostles. He addressed a series of lectures to a class of catechumens, and in "Lecture XX" says (the entire lecture would fill much space): "I will lay before you the sequel of yesterday's lecture, that ye may learn of what three things, which were done by you in the inner chamber, were the emblems. As soon, therefore, as ye entered in, ye put off your garment; and this was an image of putting off the old man with his deeds. Having stripped yourselves, ye were naked: in thus also imitating Christ, who, being naked on the cross, and by his nakedness spoiled principalities and powers, and openly triumphed over them on the tree. . . . O wondrous thing! ye were naked in the sight of all, and were not ashamed; for truly ye bore the likeness of the first-formed Adam, who was naked in the garden, and was not ashamed. Then, when ye were stripped, ye were anointed with exorcised oil from the very hairs of your head to your feet. . . . The exorcised oil, therefore, was a symbol of the participation of the fatness of Christ, the charm to drive away every trace of hostile influence. . . . After these things ye were led to the holy pool of divine baptism, . . . and descended three times into the water, and ascended again; here also covertly pointing by figure at the three days' burial of Christ."

St Chrysostom, who was contemporaneous with Cyril, also says: "Men were as naked as Adam in paradise, but with this difference: Adam was naked because he had sinned, but in baptism a man was naked that he might be freed from sin."

St. Ambrose, who was born about the time of Chrysostom, writes: "Men came as naked to the font as they came into the world."

Hear, now, Tertullian, who flourished the latter part of the second century: "Wherefore all waters from the ancient privilege of their origin obtain, after prayer to God, the sacrament of sanctification."

Again: "Wherefore the waters being in a certain manner endued with power to heal by the intervention of the angel, the spirit is washed in the water after a carnal manner, and the flesh cleansed in the same after a spiritual manner."

Again: "When we come to the water . . . we renounce the devil and his pomp and angels. Then we are three times plunged into the water, and we answer some few words more than those which our Savior in the gospel enjoined. When we are taken up out of the water we taste a mixture of milk and honey, and from that day we abstain a whole week from bathing ourselves."

The reader not only observes from the above quotations that the fathers immersed naked three times, but he also notices the importance attached to the water.

There is no historical data showing that immersion was practiced prior to the days of Tertullian. "Circuit Rider" is conscious just here that Baptists often quote the letters of "Barnabas" and the "Shepherd of Hermas," but these letters were not extant until the beginning of the third century; nor is it believed that they were written by the authors that bear their names. Even if they were accepted as antedating the century in which Tertullian lived, they would only prove that immersion originated under the idea of baptismal regeneration earlier than Tertullian. There is proof that baptismal regeneration was taking shape prior to his day, and Justin Martyr (A. D. 140) and Irenæus (A. D. 184) speak of "infants and children and boys and youths and old men" being "regenerated unto God" by baptism, but they speak of their "washing with water," and not by immersion.

In Tertullian's time such efficacy was attached to the element that the reader can see at a glance how the ordinance was corrupted by the "immersions," "disrobing the body," the "anointing with oil," etc., and that all originated out of the idea of water salvation. Naked trine immersion was the climax of the erroneous dogma.

Some of the fathers afterwards claimed apostolic practice for the innovation, and Chrysostom said: "Our Lord has delivered to us one baptism by three immersions."

Another said: "If there were no authority of Scripture for it, the consent of the whole world in that matter would obtain the force of a precept."

It was afterwards made compulsory, and a canon said, when a "bishop or a presbyter do not perform the three immersions, let him be deposed."

The reader must not suppose that even then the validity of "sprinkling" was denied. It was still practiced as in the case of sickness.

Neither must the reader infer that there was no opposition to the heresy of baptismal regeneration, as climaxed in naked immersion. Even Emperor Julian (A. D. 331) wrote at length, and gave his contemporaries the following caustic sally: "And baptism which can not heal the leprosy, nor the gout, nor the dysentery, nor any other distemper of the body, takes away adulteries, extortions, and all other sins of the soul."

AN AWAKENING IN BRAZIL.

Rev. J. M. Lander, after a two weeks' trip on his circuit, writes as follows:

This circuit stretches for a long way on the Central railroad, which follows the majestic Parahyba, which divides the States of Rio and Minas. Our work embraces the villages and the coffee fazendas (plantations) on the borders of these two States. I was accompanied in all the tour by my devoted and able junior, Senhor Jose Ferraz. We traveled a good deal by rail, and some 16 or 18 leagues on horseback. Some days our party consisted of 8 or 10 brethren and friends, in Indian file, climbing the mountain and winding through the fertile valleys. We preached 21 times, one Sunday 3 times, and one Wednesday 4 times. We baptized 9 infants and received 21 members. For the various collections and subscriptions the brethren handed me $959. In every place, village or farm-house the congregations were unusually large and attentive, and the brethren animated and encouraged as I never saw them. Several heard the gospel for the first time, and invitations crowd upon us to visit places where we have never preached.

Yesterday I spent in Palmyra, the first city above us here; a new work attached for the present to Juiz de Fora. We had four services, one being in Italian. Last night I preached to a hall packed and jammed as I have never seen. And on this occasion I performed all the services possible to a Methodist preacher, except the burial of the dead; that is to say, I baptized a child, preached the gospel, baptized six adults, received them into the church, married a couple, administered the Lord's Supper, opened the door of the church, three responding. And yet, after it all, the people begged the quartette to sing some more.

There never has been in Brazil such an awakening to spiritual things. The people read and inquire and listen. The great daily papers are giving leaders on theological, moral and ecclesiastical questions. Four or five religious papers have sprung into existence these last few months.

On our district Bro. Tilly calculates that we have already received more members during these two months than was the net increase all last year.

We thank the Lord, take courage, redouble energy, and go forward.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss.

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

Training-Course.

We have referred several times to the training-course for teachers in course of preparation by the Sunday-school Board. Descriptive circulars have been sent out to pastors and superintendents, and if any such have not received them, they should send for them at once. The course is to begin Jan. 1, next, and the necessary books for the first year are now ready for delivery.

To quote from the circular: "There are at least three things about which the Sunday-school teacher needs to be thoroughly informed. These are the history, aims and methods of the great movement of which he is a part; the Bible as the text-book of his school; and the doctrines, polity, and working plans of his church.

"The name of the general organization is, The Bible Teachers' Study Circular, and for convenience the circle is divided into three courses. In each course there are three books; none of them large, but all of them vital and first-class—just such as our teachers want. The books of the first course are: (1) A History of Sunday-schools, by an able and well-known writer, with an added chapter bringing the history up to the present date and giving the latest world-statistics; (2) A Book of Bible Studies, giving the teacher an accurate and comprehensive view of the purpose and plan of the entire Bible; and (3) a very fresh, vigorous and inspiring book on The Teacher and His Work. The cost of the three books will be only one dollar."

This is a matter of prime importance, and we can not too strongly urge our superintendents and teachers to act at once. This course can be taken in the privacy of your own homes, and be studied in your leisure moments, and it will be an inexpensive, but effective means of improving our Sunday-school work.

TEACHERS' PLEDGE.

If a pledge is a good thing in the League, why not find a place for it in the Sunday-school? The greatest difficulty that Sabbath-school superintendents have to meet is the little sense of responsibility felt by their teachers. Might not some such form of pledge as the following, adopted recently by a Baptist Sunday-school, prove helpful?

"I will pray for the pastor, superintendent, and other officers, for my fellow-teachers, and for the individual members of my class.

"I will prayerfully and diligently study the lesson.

"I will take part in all the opening and closing exercises, and encourage my class to do so.

"I will notify the superintendent in good time, or get a substitute, if I intend to be absent from my class.

"I will be faithful in looking after absentees.

"I will call on the members of my class at their homes at least once a year.

"I will encourage my scholars to attend the other church services.

"I will assist the superintendent in keeping order in my class during opening and closing exercises.

"I will assist the superintendent in every way I can to increase the number of members and efficiency of our school.

"I will remember, above all, that I am to labor not to entertain my scholars, but to lead them to the Great Teacher."—Christian Guardian.

One of the most significant statistical facts of our time, says the Christian Herald, is that an analysis of the members added to our Protestant Churches last year shows that an average of eighty-three in the hundred came from the Sunday-school. This is interesting from a psychological standpoint, in that it shows how much more frequently conversion occurs in early than in later life. It carries also an impressive lesson on the value of the Sunday-school as a nursery for the church. Evidently the work of planting Sunday-schools, and of Sunday-school work generally, is one that yields a sure and quick return for the labor and money invested.

Aching Joints

In the fingers, toes, arms, and other parts of the body, are joints that are inflamed and swollen by rheumatism—that acid condition of the blood which affects the muscles also.

Sufferers dread to move, especially after sitting or lying long, and their condition is commonly worse in wet weather.

"It has been a long time since we have been without Hood's Sarsaparilla. My father thinks he could not do without it. He has been troubled with rheumatism since he was a boy, and Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine he can take that will enable him to take his place in the field." Miss ADA DOTY, Sidney, Iowa.

Fearful Arraignment of the Liquor Traffic

A SERMON ON

TEMPERANCE,

By the Rev. George R. Stuart,
CLEVELAND, TENN.
Coworker with the Rev. Sam P. Jones.

The author has had numerous calls from all over the country for this sermon. In order to meet this demand he had it published in pamphlet form. He proposes to use the profits of the sale in the interest of the cause for which the sermon was preached.

It is sold by the single copy for 10 cents; by the 100, at 7 cents per copy; by the 1,000, at 5 cents per copy.

ORDER OF
BARBEE & SMITH, Agts.,
Nashville, Tenn., and Dallas, Tex.

Fare to Louisiana Annual Conference.

The following railroads have consented to one and one-third rate to Annual Conference on certificate plan, provided there are fifty in attendance upon Conference—that is, fifty tickets purchased on this plan: Illinois Central, Mississippi Valley, Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific; Houston and Shreveport, Southern Pacific, St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern; Louisiana and Arkansas, Arkansas Southern, Kansas City Southern, Texas and Pacific. When purchasing ticket get certificate from agent. This is to be endorsed by the secretary of the Conference while in session; then the agent at New Iberia, Mr. A. C. Pickett, will stamp same, and the return ticket will be sold at one-third usual price. Read directions, and follow strictly to the letter. Letter granting this rate in hand. Tickets will be on sale Dec. 7, 9, 10, 11. Be sure to get certificate from agent when purchasing ticket, and let as many as come buy tickets this way, so as to insure the sale of fifty tickets, so the rate will not fall through. S. S. KEENER.

Rates to McComb.

All preachers, delegates, and others attending the Mississippi Annual Conference can buy tickets from Dec. 6 to 11, and get certificate entitling them to return for one-third fare. Certificate must be obtained every time delegate has to buy a new ticket. For instance: Passengers coming from any point on the A. and V. R. R would buy tickets for Jackson and get certificates, and at Jackson they would buy tickets for McComb and get certificates again. These rates are good over all railroads in Mississippi and all roads in Louisiana east of the Mississippi river, except the G. and S. I. R. R. Parties desiring rates over that line will write Thos. P. Hale, General Passenger Agent, Gulfport, Miss.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

FOREST DISTRICT ITEMS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Only the Lake and Forest Quarterly Conferences remain to be held. The Morton and the Shiloh Conferences were very, very pleasant. Not only were all finances in shape—that is, in good form—but the Morton circuit has had 125 accessions this year, and Shiloh 108. Everybody was in good humor. There have been more than 1,200 accessions to the church in this district this year, fully as many conversions. Morton, Shiloh, Raleigh, Montrose, Vossburg and Heidelberg, Laurel, Newton and Hickory, Neshoba, Lake, Raleigh, and probably Ellisville, will have all collections in full; Rose Hill is doubtful, Forest and Trenton will have assessment for foreign missions in full, and the outlook is bright for this district being in "Class A." Preachers are enthusiastic.

T. L. MELLEN, P. E.

PORT GIBSON

We have just closed a meeting which lasted two weeks. Bro. J. J. Smylie did the preaching. Bro. Smylie is an evangelist of rare gift and great ability. His preaching is clear, strong, and scriptural. While plain, he is pure and chaste in his language. Unlike many evangelists, he is true to the pastor and loyal to the church. No one will make a mistake by having him in his charge. He did us much good, and won all of our hearts. Some of the visible results are as follows: 15 accessions, about 60 conversions, and many backsliders reclaimed. If our church had rallied to him, he could have taken the town for Christ, but this they failed to do, and that to the limit of precious souls for whom Jesus died. "The common people heard him gladly," and will ever remember him as an earnest, faithful preacher. May the Lord bless him, and keep him, and help him in winning lost souls!

Yours truly, L. S. JONES.

HOMOCHITTO.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: Our fourth Quarterly Conference has come and gone. No, not gone, but merely in the past tense. It would be hard indeed to erase from our hearts and minds the impressions made during this Conference. The stewards were all present with good reports. One of the stewards walked sixteen miles on Saturday morning to be present at Conference. This means something for this charge. Perhaps I would be safe in saying that the church here was never in a more prosperous condition during its history as a separate charge, or as parts of other charges. May God continue to bless the work! Our presiding elder, Rev. T. W. Adams, was with us, and, though sick, preached two very fine sermons. He has constantly grown in the love and admiration of the people, and has endeared himself to us in many ways.

And now, Mr. Editor, we want to thank you for giving us a good paper. It is a constant benediction to our home.

May God abundantly bless every means of grace!

Your brother, R. A. SIBLEY, JR.

WASHINGTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: On Washington circuit, Mississippi Conference, early this year the remnants of Locust Grove and Linwood Churches were organized eight miles north of Washington, where a new structure for church and school purposes has been erected. The officers—N. E. Lazarus, steward; Frank Cobb, Sunday-school superintendent; J. P. Latham, trustee; W. Cobb, secretary—and the members have shown much interest. To the original twenty-five members six have been added, an organ has been purchased, and all assessments paid. This place and Washington, eight miles south, and Kingston, fourteen miles further south, and Mars Hill, six miles still further south and across the Homochitto river, constitute the circuit.

We are grateful for assistance from Bro. J. E. Carpenter, whose strong sermons, peculiarly delightful, need no mention; also from Bro. T. W. Adams, P. E., who embodies his office with an earnest, zealous, and efficient type of Christian ministry. His help and the fidelity and loyalty of Bro. J. D. Ireland and family, shall tell very much on our financial report. Our assessment for foreign missions is paid, and other Conference collections, comparatively large, will far exceed past years. The delightful parsonage constantly receives the beneficial touches of the Ladies' Aid Society. Of this historic field, perhaps more anon.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

CORINTH DISTRICT.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I am well on the fourth round of Quarterly Conferences, and the outlook for a fair report for the district for the year is good. The preachers are hopeful, so are the people. The women's missionary work is encouraging in some parts. While at Ripley, I addressed the "Mary Harris Memorial Society." This society has been recently organized by Miss Ida May Jones, and has thirty-four members, and is one of the most enthusiastic missionary bodies of young women I have seen in years. This society promises much for the young women of the district.

The Building Committee for the new parsonage at Booneville have put in the bill for lumber—so we expect a new parsonage here soon. Bro. H. T. Gaines has his little daughter, Mary, at Nashville for special treatment for her arm. We do hope she will be benefited, and if possible, the use of her arm regained. W. M. YOUNG.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

JENA AND JONESVILLE CHARGE.

Since my last report we have held three meetings, which resulted in ninety accessions and many bright conversions. Brothers John A. B. Jones, J. D. Harper, and L. L. Roberts assisted me in two meetings. These brethren did excellent preaching. We are nearing the two-hundred mark in accessions this year. I can not move this Conference. I am too well fixed. I think now that I will attend Conference.

G. D. ANDERS.

LEESVILLE STATION.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: While we have not had the phenomenal success we enjoyed last year, yet this year has been marked with blessings to the church. We have a net increase of about forty to report in membership. Have had some bright conversions. The main feature of the year's work has been to establish the Christians in the faith; therefore, we have had a hard year's work, as all pastors know who have had experience in "looking after" new converts.

Our finances are well up. Have all my collections in hand, and the assessment for preacher-in-charge and presiding elder, which is twenty per cent. more than that of last year, will be paid. We have also raised and paid $1,000 on our church since last Conference.

We have recently closed a very successful meeting. Bro. H. R. Singleton, Jr., of Ruston, was with us, and did the preaching, which was blessed of God to the salvation of sinners and the strengthening of the membership. There was an accession of twelve to the church. Bro. Singleton is at home in revival work.

It will be remembered by the brethren that this is a new place—a new town and a new church. We came here last year, and found a handful of Methodists—27 all told. We are now 200 strong, numerically, and the church strengthens as the town grows in population.

Last Sunday night we preached to a crowded house. The interest is increasingly good. I predict a good future for this place. This humble servant of the Lord Jesus Christ has spent two pleasant years among this good people. God bless the ADVOCATE! Yours in Christ,

J. M. ALFORD.

P. S.—I wish to state that our church is now draped in mourning, and our hearts are sad. Yesterday, late in the afternoon, we laid to rest our beloved sister, Mrs. S. A. Ails, the president of the Woman's Home Mission Society of our church. This is the first and only member I have buried during my two years' pastorate. Truly God has blessed us.

SNAKE CHARMING

Is not a popular occupation. Most women shrink from the sight of a snake and would faint at the touch of one. But these same women run greater risks than the snake charmer. How many women allow disease to fasten on them and slowly to crush out their strength.

Womanly diseases should never be allowed to undermine the health. Female weakness, bearing-down pains, inflammation, ulceration, backache, headache, nervousness, and other womanly ailments, curable by medicine, are promptly and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"I deem it my duty to express my deep, heartfelt gratitude to you for having been the means under providence of restoring me to health," writes Mrs. Oscar Brown, of Oxford, Granville Co., N. C. "For two years I suffered with female weakness, headache, neuralgia in various parts of the system, and after using four bottles of Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription, three of his 'Golden Medical Discovery,' one vial of 'Pleasant Pellets,' also 'Lotion Tablets,' and one box of 'Antiseptic and Healing Suppositories,' I am cured."

If you are led to the purchase of "Favorite Prescription" because of its remarkable cures of other women, do not accept a substitute.

THE RELATION OF BAPTIZED CHILDREN TO THE CHURCH.

BY THE EDITOR.

A Paper Read Before the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting, Monday, Nov. 18, 1901.

I have been requested to answer before the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting the following questions: What is the relation of baptized children to the church? And what definite provision ought to be made by the church for the care of such children?

Back of these questions is another fully as important, viz.: Why do we baptize children? We answer this question first.

1. We do not baptize them because of any virtue in the act itself, for baptism by whomsoever administered has not the power to communicate any grace. Baptism is "not the putting away of the filth of the flesh" in the case of an infant, any more than it is in the case of an adult. This being true, immersionists charge Pædo-Baptists with folly in administering the ordinance to infants. Their argument is, that as baptism is administered to effect regeneration, and that as it is impossible to effect such a change as is involved in regeneration by a simple ordinance, it is useless as applied to unconscious children. We quite agree with their contention at this point, but we beg to assure our immersionist friends that they wholly misapprehend the position of Methodists if they suppose we baptize children with a view to regeneration. If we had that in view, we would be foolish indeed. We, therefore, deny in toto the doctrine of baptismal regeneration.

2. Nor do we baptize our children in anticipation of what they may be in years to come. It is true, we bind ourselves to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and expect them to be dutiful Christians. For this we have the strongest possible assurance—the word of God, who tells us that if we "bring up our children in the way they should go, when they are old they will not depart from it." It is sometimes urged that we do not know what our children are going to be, good or bad, and, therefore, we should wait until they are able to choose for themselves. This supposes that a bad life will so vitiate the ordinance as to render it useless. We acknowledge that we do not know what sort of lives our children will lead. But if this is to be accepted as an argument against infant baptism, it must be accepted as having equal force when applied to grown-up believers. We do not know, when we baptize them, what they are going to be. As a matter of fact, many do turn out badly—"make shipwreck of the faith." Shall we, therefore, decline to baptize them? By no means.

3. Another fallacy we notice in this connection, viz.: that as baptism is administered as an "outward sign of an inward change," it is useless as applied to infants, inasmuch as no change occurs in an infant, either before baptism, or as a consequence of the act of baptism itself. The fallacy consists in charging that Pædo-Baptists baptize children as an outward sign of an inward change. We know no well-informed Methodist preacher who takes such a position. Methodist preachers do not preach foolishness. And it certainly would be foolish to administer baptism to an unconscious infant on such a ground as that, for it supposes that a change has been wrought which baptism is intended only to signify. But neither the Scriptnre, nor Methodist theology, teaches any such doctrine.

Why, then, do we baptize children? For the simple reason that they sustain a saving relation to Christ, and are entitled to everything under the atonement to which any other saved being is entitled. As baptism is the sign and seal of the saved relation, and as infants are in a state of salvation, we put upon them the sign and seal of that relation.

For our faith and practice we have scriptnral authority. For example: The words of our Savior as recorded by three evangelists, "For of such is the kingdom of heaven." This was spoken of children in their mother's arms, and was evidently intended to teach the disciples, not so much the Lord's feelings toward children as such, as to inform them of the fact that the kingdom of heaven in part is made up of little children. Dr. Whedon tells us that the literal translation of the passage is, "To such belongs the kingdom of heaven." This strengthens rather than weakens the position. But, whether the rendering is, "of such is the kingdom," or, "to such belongs the kingdom," it fixes the relation of children to Christ, and indicates their privileges under the gospel dispensation quite as clearly as did Moses under the Law.

To my mind it is utterly impossible to conceive that God would incorporate children as members of his church under the Law, and give such specific directions as to their initiation and general treatment, and then not only ignore them under the gospel, but deny them a place in his church. It argues nothing to say, One is national and the other purely ecclesiastical. That is a subterfuge, for under Moses, Church and State were combined, and when a child was initiated, he was recognized as being a member of the Church fully as much as a member of the State. Nor does it matter that under the gospel no specific directions were given as to the proper initiation of children. There are no specific directions given as to the initiation of adult believers. The general direction to the church—perhaps, properly speaking, to the ministry—is, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost." Not a word is said about the age of the subjects, or the mode of baptism. These things were understood. Apostolic practice in the immediate future, in the baptism of whole households, clearly show in what sense the disciples understood the Lord's words.

Again: The words of St. Paul (Rom. v, 18), "As by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life," assure us of the soundness of our position. If, as assumed by some, the first clause of this passage teaches that each individual of the race is actually guilty, and comes into the world a sinner and under condemnation, and, therefore, justly liable to the penalty, which is death, then the second clause is utterly meaningless, and has no place in the Word of God. But if it is to be construed as teaching that the whole race is involved in the fall of Adam, and suffers the consequences of his sin, then the apostle could consistently add, "even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." That is to say: If the race was condemned in Adam, it is freed from the condemnation by the righteousness of Christ, and all men come into the world full beneficiaries of the free gift, and entitled to everything the free gift carries with it. If the free gift carries with it, not only freedom from condemnation, but the right to holy baptism to one who has believed and is saved, why should baptism be denied to an infant, who sustains to Christ precisely the same saved relation? Why grant a child the greater blessing and deny him the less?

Were we allowed to institute an argument, we would present something like this: All persons who are in a state of salvation are entitled to baptism. Infant children are in a state of salvation; therefore, infant children are entitled to baptism. This conclusion will not be universally accepted, save on proof of the saved state of the infant world—a fact, it seems to us, abundantly sustained by our Lord's words and the words of St. Paul, already quoted.

But, in further contention, we venture to say, Children are in a state of salvation, or they are not. If they are in a saved state, then on no just ground can they be denied any blessing guaranteed to the saved through the atonement. If they are not in a saved state, then they are not entitled to any kind of recognition at the hands of the church. They can not be even regarded as "lambs of the fold," for, if they do not belong to Christ, they are not of the fold at all. Not only so, but they are in all respects to be dealt with as waifs and outcasts, and left to grow up in sin, in order to become the subjects of grace. No wonder so many children are growing up in sin, utter strangers to God, and daily getting further and further from the church.

It is objected that if this doctrine be true, it militates against the doctrine of natural depravity—one of the fundamental doctrines of our religion. That it is in opposition to the idea that men are born sinners, and, therefore, guilty and worthy of eternal death, is true; but it is not in opposition to the doctrine of depravity, unless depravity is sin, which is denied. In further reply to this objection, we say: The doctrine of infant salvation, or that infants are born in a state of salvation, no more militates against the doctrine of natural depravity than regeneration militates against depravity in an adult. It is not destroyed in the one case, nor acts as a barrier to the efficacy of the atonement in the other.

To obviate difficulties in the way of accepting the doctrine of the guilt of children in the case of those dying in infancy, it is said that in the act of dying the Holy Spirit prepares them for heaven. This is a pure assumption. There is, as far as we know, no intimation of such a thing in the Word of God. There would be no necessity for such an assumption were it borne in mind that depravity is not sin, and that infant children are not sinners.

Another subterfuge, to get out of trouble, is that the term moral can not be appropriately applied to infants, as they are neither good nor bad. The argument is, an infant has in itself no good, and can not go to heaven. It has in itself no bad, and can not go to hell. And as it is possessed of neither good nor bad, dying, it meets annihilation. This is logical, but horrible, and is not sustained by reason or common sense. Our Lord would hardly have paid the attention he did to little children had they been nothing more than little brutes, and wholly outside of his kingdom.

Now, if what we have said in regard to the relation of children to Christ is true, it follows that children are members of his church, and that baptism is nothing more than a public recognition of the fact, and the ordinance of initiation. It is not quite sufficient to say that they are probationers, and under watch-care. They are under watch-care, but are not probationers waiting to be received into the church. They are born into the kingdom, and only need to be recognized and accorded their rights. Churches should make definite provision for the care of such children.

1. The church should insist and, as far as possible, require parents under its jurisdiction to bring their children to the altar and dedicate them to God in holy baptism. If this, in itself, could prove no direct benefit to the children, it would prove a blessing to the parents. They would naturally feel under stronger obligation to look after their religious training, and be more careful to guard them against the evil influences of the world. This would certainly in the end be a blessing to the children.

2. The church should require pastors to guard these "lambs of the fold." Their names should be recorded and kept sight of as faithfully as the names of the adult membership. This Methodist pastors are required to do. They should be thoroughly instructed as to their relation to God and his church. This ought to be done systematically and faithfully. Every Methodist preacher who purposes permanently entering the pastorate is required to promise that he will "diligently instruct the children in every place." It is specially enjoined that presiding elders make inquiry into this matter, and, that it be not overlooked, he is required to ask at every Quarterly Conference, "Is there a written report . . . of the pastoral instruction of children?"

3. Minute instructions to pastors as to the care of children are given in our Discipline. Among them this: "As soon as they comprehend the responsibilities involved in a public profession of faith in Christ, and give evidence of a sincere desire and earnest determination to discharge the same, see that they be duly recognized as members of the church, agreeably to the provisions of the Discipline." (Dis., par. 210.)

To us it seems that the church has made not only definite, but ample provision for her baptized children. And we believe that if these directions were observed in all places, our Methodism would be more prosperous, and a larger factor for good in the world. May the Lord give us wisdom to see, and to obey. Amen!

DIVORCE AND RE-MARRIAGE.

The New York Times says: "No minister of the Episcopal Church is allowed to marry a divorced person, excepting only the innocent party in a divorce granted upon the ground of infidelity." The Episcopal Church is not alone in taking such a stand. The M. E. Church, South, took the same ground long since. This fact is not generally known. We have had occasion to correct a statement to the contrary, innocently made by a reputable journal.

Personally, we would be glad for the Church and State to go even further. South Carolina, we believe, grants no divorce for any cause. That is extreme ground, but it is better than to esteem marriage so lightly as to grant divorce for trivial and insignificant causes, which, when granted, reflects no dishonor in the public mind on the party sued, nor any credit on the party suing. In certain circles it seems that notoriety, not to say popularity, depends on securing a divorce. In high-life, a divorce secured for any cause short of absolute scandal, is no bar to society. So much the worse for high-life.

Of course, we do not believe that marriage is a sacrament, and for that reason indissoluble, but we do believe that it is a relation of divine origin, and to be sacredly maintained—a relation, when entered into "reverently, discreetly, advisedly, and in the fear of God," that no man has a right to put asunder. The parties themselves who enter into the contract have no right to annul it. If one is unfaithful, the relation to the other is forfeited, and the faithful one may go free. And as the State, for good reasons, sanctioned and authorized the union, so, for good reasons, in case of infidelity, it may free the faithful one from the vow.

We view with alarm the increasing number of divorces, and the increasing number of causes that are allowed for action. In our land the church does not control this matter. It would be different if it did. And we are glad to know that comparatively few of the divorce applicants are connected with any church. When they are, church discipline is apt to be exercised. It ought always to be a matter of investigation and discipline when parties to divorce suits, save for the one scriptural cause, are connected with the church. Even then an investigation would be well.

The moral sentiment of our land ought to assert itself, and make it impossible for easy-going legislators to degrade the marriage relation, and blight family life, by creating so many loopholes through which a dissatisfied and petulant man or woman may slip, and throw off their vows. Our divorce laws and divorce courts are disgraceful to our nation. That divorces increase day by day is no good sign.

DESERVED RECOGNITION.

The Official Board of Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans, unanimously adopted the following resolution and requested its publication in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. We gladly give it space:

Since the law of our church requires the separation from us of our worthy presiding elder, who has served us the limit of time; be it

Resolved, That we recognize in Bro. S. S. Keener an earnest, faithful Christian; a courteous, impartial presiding officer, and a personal friend, who has our confidence and love, with whom we part with much regret, and pray that his useful life may be spared many years.

A GREAT BOOK.

CHRISTUS AUCTOR: A Manual of Christian Evidences. By Bishop W. A. Candler, D. D., LL.D.

We have in this book the mature thoughts of a great mind. Bishop Candler has evidently put into it his best work. He believes in a revealed religion, and that God, in the person of his Son, Jesus Christ, has appeared among men. He believes that Jesus died, was buried, and rose from the dead. The questions in hand he argues clearly, logically, and conclusively. Zion's Herald says, "No skeptic can read this volume without finding it exceedingly difficult to remain an unbeliever, and no Christian can study it without having his faith confirmed." Those who have been charmed and edified by the masterly preaching of the Bishop will be equally pleased and benefited by studying the pages of this book. It is commended by the best minds in the church, both North and South. We unhesitatingly advise all persons, especially our bright young men who desire something fresh and vigorous, and in small compass, on the evidences of our holy religion, to buy this book. The price is one dollar and twenty-five cents, and may be bought of John C. Candler, 57 Elizabeth street, Atlanta, Ga.

NOTICE.

The arrangements for the entertainment of Louisiana Conference are about completed. We regret that we have not been able to respond favorably to the requests of all the brethren, especially in the entertainment of the preachers' wives. But when it is known that the Catholic Church has on roll about 10,000 members and the entire Protestant force amounts to only about 450, the brethren can appreciate somewhat of the difficulty we had in finding homes. The Protestant people, and some few Catholic have nobly come to our relief. We feel and believe that the Conference will be one long to be remembered by both the Conference body and people of New Iberia.

It will greatly assist us if the brethren who receive notice of their entertainment, and can not attend, will drop us a card to that effect.

Rev. W. T. Boiling, D. D., of Shreveport, will preach the opening sermon at 7:30 P. M., Dec. 11.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

PERSONAL.

Our friend and brother, Rev. H. H. Ahrens, connected with the Daily Picayune, has received substantial promotion at the hands of the managers of that great paper. His success is deserved, and we rejoice with him.

The Arkansas Methodist reports the transfer of Rev. T. Y. Ramsey to the Little Rock Conference, and his appointment to Monticello station. Thus Mississippi loses another one of her bright young preachers. Who next?

Rev. R. H. Wynn preached an interesting and edifying sermon, Thanksgiving Day, at Carondelet Street Church. The sermon was altogether adapted to the occasion, and was heard by the large congregation with evident pleasure.

Rev. F. M. Keen, whose transfer to the Arkansas Conference we noted a short time since, was stationed at Booneville. The brethren in Arkansas will find in Brother Keen an active and useful worker, and a genial, Christian gentleman.

Rev. W. H. LaPrade, Jr., transferred to the North Georgia Conference, was appointed last week to Kirkwood and East End, Atlanta. Brother LaPrade is one of our most promising young preachers. May he have great success in his new field!

A letter from Rev. A. T. Bell, Shubuta, Miss., informs us that he has been transferred to the Western North Carolina Conference, and stationed at Murphy, N. C. This is a great surprise. May Brother Bell be abundantly blessed in his new field!

The Bishops of the M. E. Church have appointed Rev. D. W. C. Huntington, D. D., president of Nebraska Wesleyan University, and Hon. John L. Bates, lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts, as fraternal delegates to the General Conference of our church to assemble in Fort Worth, Texas, next May.

Rev. W. L. Anderson, who last week informed us of his father's sickness, tells us this week of his death. He passed from his old home in De Soto county, Miss., to his heavenly rest, Nov. 21, 1901. A memoir is promised in due time. May the good Lord sustain the sorrowing family!

Mrs. Alla Byars, of Water Valley, Miss., a lovely and useful Christian woman, died at her home on the nineteenth ultimo. Mrs. Byars was the daughter of Rev. W. S. Lagrone, of the North Mississippi Conference. He and his devoted wife have the sympathy and prayers of a host of friends in this, their great bereavement. No particulars of the sad occurrence have reached us. A tribute to her memory, we hope, will be forwarded in a short time. The bereaved ones we know are "leaning on the everlasting arms."

A Parting Word.

DEAR ADVOCATE: As I do not often trouble you with a communication, I ask for space now for a parting word to my friends in Mississippi and Louisiana, and which must serve in place of many personal letters that I can not find time to write just now.

From the fact that the climate peculiar to this section had materially affected Mrs. Clifford's health, I have had it in mind for some time past to go to a more northerly and westerly clime.

Bishop Key was kind enough to keep me in mind, and last Monday I received a telegram from him to the effect that I had been stationed at Dardanelle, Ark. A letter received to day from Dr. A. C. Millar, president of Hendrix College, Conway, Ark., extends to me a hearty welcome to his Conference, and informs me that Dardanelle is one of the good old towns. He likewise sent me a copy of the "Minutes," and from these I see that it is the metropolis of the Dardanelle district, and seems to be among the best appointments in the Conference. One thing I noticed particularly—that the charge was assessed and paid more for support of presiding elder than any other charge in the Conference, save one. Geographically, it is located on the south bank of the Arkansas river, is the county seat of Yell county, and at terminus of the Russellville and Dardanelle railroad. With the presiding elder of the district and the preacher-in-charge of the Dardanelle circuit living in the same town, and a near neighbor at Russellville (only 5 miles distant), I expect to enjoy a continuation of fellowship and friendship with Methodist preachers during the year, such as I have been permitted to do while a pastor in this city. Messages full of kindness and brotherly love have reached me this week from my good friends, Drs. Keener and Sawyer. I assure them of my appreciation. I hereby renew my subscription to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE from January, 1902, to January, 1903, and shall look for its weekly visits as I would look for an old friend.

I shall follow in my thoughts the brethren as they go to Winona and McComb City and New Iberia. May God abundantly bless them and theirs, and give them health and prosperity and many souls for their hire, which shall be as stars in their crowns of rejoicing in the sweet by-and-by.

Your Brother in Christ,

THOMAS B. CLIFFORD.

Preachers' Meeting.

The members of the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting convened at Carondelet Street Church, Dec. 2, 1901. The presiding officer, Dr. S. S. Keener, being absent, Dr. W. H. LaPrade called the meeting to order. The following members were present: Dr. W. H. LaPrade, Dr. F. N. Parker, Revs. R. H. Wynn, C. D. Atkinson, P. H. Fontaine, W. W. Drake.

The order of business was hearing reports from the local pastors. Bro. Wynn reported three new members during the month. Plans for church improvements reported. Bro. Fontaine reported a marked increase in attendance on public worship. Had four additions. Bro. Fontaine has charge of the "Home for Homeless Men." Pastor of Carondelet reported an up-grade in Sunday-school work. Four or five additions. Bro. Drake reported five additions, and the general condition of the church about as usual. Dr. LaPrade reported an increase of about one hundred per cent. in attendance on Sunday school and prayer meeting as compared with this time last year. Four additions. Dr. LaPrade believes there has been an increase in New Orleans Methodism during the last two years.

Dr. F. N. Parker believes a greater stress should be placed on the spiritual work of the church.

There is to be a Missionary Institute held at Felicity Street Church during this week. Prof. Thomas Carter and Dr. F. N. Parker will deliver the addresses.

Dr. Cooper, president of Centenary College, was a visitor, and made an interesting talk.

Cancers and Tumors Cured by Anointing with Oil.

It is justly claimed that the Oil Cure is the best remedy known for malignant diseases, and every honest doctor who has investigated the matter must admit the fact. The remedy is not only mild and safe, but it cures internal as well as external Cancer and Tumors, and gives relief from unceasing pain. Thousands have been cured in the last few years. Dr. Bye claims that after twenty years of success as a specialist for Cancer and Tumors, the Lord led him to the Oil Cure, and for eight years, thousands of good letters have been received from persons cured. Hundreds from ministers and Christian patients are printed in books and papers, which if one will read, they will plainly see that surely God's blessing is with the Oil Cure. Its just popularity is shown by the fact that at this time over two thousand patients are taking home treatment. Its great success has caused many counterfeiting imitators, therefore be careful and send to the right place and persons by addressing Dr. D. M. Bye Co., Look Box 462, Dallas, Tex. (Cut this out and send to some afflicted one.)

Conference Notices.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Class of the First Year, Mississippi Conference, will please to meet the committee for examination in pastor's study of the Presbyterian Church, at McComb City, Dec. 10, 1901, at 8:30 o'clock A. M. The examination will be in writing. We will make an effort to finish the work in one day; therefore, let the class prepare themselves to this end.

ROBT. SELBY,
Chair'n of the Committee.

All the members of the Committee for Admission on Trial (the first, second, third, and fourth years) are requested to meet in the Presbyterian Church, McComb City, at 7 o'clock, Monday night, Dec. 9, to confer with reference to a Summer Normal for undergraduates. B F. LEWIS, Chair'n Admission on Trial.

R·I·P·A·N·S

One said I had chronic dyspepsia, others claimed I was suffering with nervousness and kidney trouble. The last doctor told mother to take me away to the country. I could not eat nor sleep. My aunt, where I was staying, persuaded me to try Ripans Tabules. The fifth 5 cent box relieved me a little. I was so glad I kept on taking them. In all I had taken nine boxes. God bless Ripans Tabules! May they be spread abroad to those that are afflicted as I was. They have done for me what doctors could not do.

At druggists.

The Five-Cent packet is enough for an ordinary occasion. The family bottle, 60 cents, contains a supply for a year.

Applicants for admission on trial into the Mississippi Conference will meet the committee in the Presbyterian Church, McComb City, Tuesday morning, Dec. 10, at 9 A. M.

B. F. LEWIS, Chairman.

The Class of the Second Year will meet the committee at the church in McComb, Tuesday morning, Dec. 10, at half-past nine o'clock. Bring paper and pen and ink, as the examination will be written.

The Commoner.

(Mr. Bryan's Paper)

The Commoner has attained within six months from date of the first issue a circulation of 100,000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the discussion of political, economic, and social problems. To the columns of The Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts; and his review of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

The Commoner's regular subscription price is $1 per year. We have arranged with Mr. Bryan whereby we can furnish his paper and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE together for one year for $2.25. The regular subscription price of the two papers when subscribed for separately is $3 net. When remittance is made by personal check, ten cents extra will be charged.

How Do You Know

those baking powders are made from alum?

Their lower price, their unfamiliar names, generally betray them.

But it is not necessary for you to know. You know that Royal does not contain alum, that it makes the best food, that it is pure and healthful. You know that alum powders are unhealthful. This knowledge is sufficient to enable you to protect yourself and your family from alum baking powders and the evil results which are certain to follow their use.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Do You Have Rheumatism? Have You Bladder or Uric Acid Trouble?

To Prove what Swamp Root, the Great Kidney and Bladder Remedy, will do for YOU, all our Readers May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Pain or dull ache in the back is unmistakable evidence of kidney trouble. It is Nature's timely warning to show you that the track of health is not clear.

If these danger signals are unheeded, more serious results are sure to follow: Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble, may steal upon you.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of the world-famous kidney remedy, Swamp Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. A trial will convince anyone—and you may have a sample bottle for the asking.

Lame back is only one symptom of kidney trouble—one of many. Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are, obliged to pass water often during the day and to get up many times at night; smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, catarrh of the bladder, constant headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, irregular heart beating, rheumatism, bloating, irritability, worn-out feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh or sallow complexion.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidney and bladder need immediate attention.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Swamp-Root is the triumphant discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist. Hospitals use it with marked success in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients and use it in their own families, because they recognize in Swamp-Root the greatest and most successful remedy.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you free by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book of wonderful Swamp-Root testimonials. Be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE."

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take, and if you are already convinced that this great remedy is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at drug stores. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

Home Circle.

THE CRYING NEED.

What is the crying need of the home? Not money. Not intellect. Not refinement. Not wisdom. It is love and warm demonstration of love.

Life is such a little thing, a short space of years at best, and to live it through, and to have missed love in childhood from father and mother, is the saddest thing in all the universe. Most people love their children. The fathers and mothers would never own to a lack of affection to their offspring.

But in many homes—shall I say in the majority?—there is a lack of real living love and tenderness that fill the heart full to running over with love-words, kisses, fond caresses. The good-night kiss, the dear hand upon the little one's head and cheek, how these things expand the soul of a child and make it receptive to good influences.

In her autobiography, Harriet Martineau cries out from the depths of her soul: "I had no childhood! My mother loved me, but she never told me so!" Once, when she had a good lesson, her mother ventured some word of praise, and smiled kindly at her. The child was in such an ecstasy of joy that she ran to her room, and, throwing herself upon her bed, wept and laughed and repeated the word over and over again.

In a recent little poem a mother calls to a little child she hears enter the room, thinking it is the baby of the family: "Is that you, darling?" The little girl, several years older than the baby, answers with a sob: "No, mama; it's only me." How many mothers seem to have room for but one "darling" in their hearts at a time.

While teaching in a Western school I had a boy who was the torment of my existence—willful, stubborn and lazy—and yet so capable. One evening he sat before me in dogged silence, after a bad day. I was in despair as to my next move. Suddenly I fancied: "This boy has never been loved." Taking his face in my hands, I kissed him, and said: "Go home now, Fred, and tomorrow we will start out new and try to make a better record." The tears came instantly to his eyes and rolled down his cheeks.

"Dear teacher," he began, but he could get no further. From that moment he was changed. He is a successful man in business to-day, and, although that was fifteen years ago, I have not a more devoted friend than he.

Many a mother who sews until she aches in every nerve, and who spends hours a day cooking nice things for her family, is so tired when the different ones come in from school or work that she has no impulses for smiles and kisses. She has performed a lesser duty and sacrificed the higher.

Many a father, through a mistaken sense of obligation, spends all his strength earning money for his family, so that he has no time for companionship with sons and daughters. And so they find love—or its counterfeit—outside of the home, cheated of their most divine birthright. To starve a child's affections is a crime as much as to starve its body. A dwarfed soul is worse than a humped back.

Countless numbers of young men and women would be saved from steps they afterward bitterly repent by the loving co-operation of father and mother. If they felt free to go to them from childhood all through life's years with their plans, their ambitions, their joy and sorrows, trivial or great, sure always of sympathetic interest in their affairs, though the thing itself might not be approved, life would be filled with a sweetness no gloom or trial could take away.

To be a father or mother is to hold the keys of heaven and hell for the human race. The relation is a divine one, with infinite demands, and yet how often undertaken with no forethought, no sense of the awful responsibility! Wisdom, goodness, nobility, strength and patience are needed by the parent, and, above all, love.

The child who has these qualities united in his parents' blood is indeed blessed. No richer heritage could be given him. All of life's duties will be made easier for him because of it.—Mrs. Ogilvie, in New Era.

Woodpeckers and Their Habits

The small spotted woodpecker, commonly called "sapsucker," is really the downy woodpecker, says Willis Edwards Hall in the Ledger. This curious little bird is quite common in the eastern part of the United States; he feeds on insects, which he obtains by climbing trees and examining plants that are diseased. First he finds a small hole, or, perhaps, a bump on the bark of the tree; then he immediately sets to work hammering on it furiously with his bill. His head goes so fast that it looks as if he would dash his brains out, but Mother Nature has made a provision for this, as she has for everything.

The woodpecker's head is very thick and tough in front, and his bill is very hard and stoutly set in his forehead. As the bird's bill strikes the tree very fast, he makes a racket that is quite astonishing for such a little fellow. When he gets to the worm he stops hammering, runs his long tongue into the hole he has made, and brings out the reward of his hard labor. The woodpecker impales his prey on the end of his sharp, bony and barbed tongue, the bark preventing his prey from slipping off; consequently, when the tongue is withdrawn from the hole, Mr. Worm is obliged to come with it.

In this way the bird continues to fly from tree to tree all through the day, uttering, at times, his peculiar cackle, starting on a low key, as a musician would say, then getting higher, and coming down the scale on the other side; this cackle is made up of utterances of two syllables that sound, as near as I can spell it, like "K e r-L e-e," kept up in a string until he reaches his scale.

The downy woodpecker is black in color, with prominent white spots scattered all over his body. He has four toes on each foot, two behind and two before; his tail feathers are pointed at the ends. He uses both his tail and his feet to climb with. When he lights on a tree he always travels upward, never down; he goes by jumps, catches his feet, leans back on his tail, and then jumps again. In this way he ascends the entire height of the tree; he uses his tail as much, or more than any other part of his body. It is the main thing that gives him leverage when he is hammering for food, and then it serves him the same purpose in flying, as the weighted pole serves the ropewalker, and as the rudder serves the vessel.

The nests of the woodpeckers are the most interesting affairs. It takes from two days upward, according to the softness of the wood the bird chooses to build in, to dig out a nest. When finished the bird can defy any kind of weather, cyclones excepted, of course, because being a hollow dug out of solid wood, it is impervious to both snow and rain. It is nicely lined at the bottom with small chips of soft wood.

The eggs of all woodpeckers are white; those of the downy, generally four to five in number, are of a glossy white. The downy woodpecker is the most interesting and industrious member of this tribe, the rest of the woodpeckers being very much like the downy in general shape and habits.—Presbyterian.

He Said "No."

The great Young Men's Christian Association Convention, recently held in Boston, brought delegates from all parts of the world to testify to the value of the Christian religion as the highest rule of conduct for practical life. The following was told by one who had traveled 8,000 miles to attend the meeting:

"My father was a rancher on a small scale in Australia. He was an English emigrant of sturdy yeoman stock, and while the free life of a shepherd had taught him tolerance and kindness, he remained true in principle to the strict lessons of his early years.

"The nearest neighbor or station was ten miles away, but the ranchmen used to think nothing of riding twenty or forty miles to a centrally-located farm on Saturday to spend the night in carousal, and ride back on Sunday. When the men came together once a week in this way, drinking and gambling seemed inevitable.

"At last it was my father's turn to entertain. He must invite the herders of the kraals and ranches within a radius of nearly fifty miles.

"'Boys,' he said to his two sons, my brother and myself, 'it's the parting of the ways. We either live as we have lived, simply, in the fear of God, minding our business, paying our debts, if we can, saving our money, if possible, and being cut by every man around here, or fall into the ways of our neighbors, and drink and gamble ourselves into perdition. I am not going to break your mother's heart, and I say, "No," even if they burn us down.'

"So it came about that my brother and I divided the circuit between us, and I rode to the north and he to the south. To every ranchman this message went: 'Father invites you for Saturday and Sunday as usual. There will be no cards or liquor—only a quiet talk about old England and the welfare of the colony.'

"We waited that Saturday afternoon with trembling, not expecting a single guest; but the whole section was represented.

"With mother opposite him, father said grace at the table, and we boys saw tears flow down rugged cheeks. That night the men talked long about bushmen, and rabbits, and fences, and drought, and how to stand by each other.

"The next morning, as he did every Sunday morning, father conducted prayers, this time before fifty of the roughest men I had ever seen assembled; and there was singing of hymns, broken here and there by sobs and by tears. When they parted, my father, although a recent comer, was the acknowledged leader of the community.

"That section became the most prosperous section in all the country round, and I thought if Christian courage could accomplish that, it was good enough for to live and die by. My father's 'No' was the one thing needed to save the community, and it saved it."—Youth's Companion.

Will of God in the Heart.

I have heard of a famous King of Poland, who did brave deeds in his day, and confessed that he owed his excellent character to a secret habit which he had formed. He was the son of a noble father, and he carried with him a miniature portrait of his father, and often looked upon it. Whenever he went to battle he would look upon the picture of his father, and nerve himself to valor. When he sat in the council chamber, he would secretly look upon the image of his father, and behave himself right royally; for, he said, "I will do nothing that can dishonor my father's name." Now, this is the grand thing for a Christian to do—to carry about with him the will of God in his heart, and then in every action to consult that will.—Selected.

A Lesson in Giving.

Nannie had a bright silver dollar given her. She asked her papa to change it into dimes.

"What is it for, dear?" he asked.

"So that I can get the Lord's part out of it." And when she got it into smaller coins she laid out one of the ten.

"There," she said, "I will keep that until Sabbath."

And when the Sabbath came she went to the box in the church and dropped in two dimes.

"Why," said her father as he heard the last one jingle in, "I thought you gave one-tenth to the Lord?"

"I said one-tenth belongs to him, and I can't give to the Lord what is his own. So if I give him anything, I have to give him what is mine."—Selected.

Concerns the Clergy.

General Julian S. Carr, of Carolina, walked home across the Roanoke, a barefooted Confederate, from Appomattox. In twenty years he made a million out of the Durham Tobacco and quit the cigarette factory for the cotton mill. He has directed that every Southern Methodist Minister shall have at cost 'the Complete Flour (Lafferty process) a whole wheat product, yet creamy white, nutty flavor and three hundred per cent. richer in brain food—"All the Wheat Fit to Eat.

A booklet with a portrait of General Carr, and the anatomy of the wheat-berry in colored illustrations and its history as a health food, is sent free, if request is sent to Lafferty Complete Flour Co., Richmond, Va.—North Carolina Advocate.

AARON J. WILKINS, son of A. J. and H. A. Wilkins, was born near Holly Springs, Miss., July 9, 1857. He was happily converted in 1875, during the first camp meeting ever held at Bailey's Camp Ground, and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Wesley Chapel, now on the Red Banks charge, Holly Springs district, North Mississippi Conference. Shortly after joining the church young Wilkins moved with his parents into the vicinity of Beaufille, Miss. (known now as Cayce, Miss.), and placed his membership in New Salem Church, where he remained a faithful and loyal member until his death. Bro. Wilkins was taken sick at his home in the early Spring with consumption. After lingering awhile he seemed to get better, and went to his brother, Dr. W. T. Wilkins, of Lewisburg, Miss. Here he relapsed, and after several days of intense suffering he yielded up his generous soul to God in great peace, June 2, 1901. From the beginning of his sickness he received all the medical aid and tender nursing that devoted brothers and kind hands and hearts could give him; but his hour had come. Bro. Wilkins was the son and grandson of a Methodist family of the old type—one that loved God, the church and her ministry; that read, prayed and sang around the family altar morning and evening. Hence it is not strange that he grew up to love the church and ministry with an ardor and loyalty that always made him companionable to his pastor. Bro. Wilkins had a cheerful and generous nature that made him agreeable to all whom he met. He was a consistent member of the church, a dutiful son, a kind and tender brother. God bless the bereaved relatives, and help them to meet their departed loved one in the better world.

J. W. ANDERSON,
Byhalia, Miss.

REV. JOHN HARVEY WINBORNE, son of David and Nancy Ann Winborne, was born in Wilkinson county, Miss., June 6, 1814, and died at Columbia, Miss., Sept. 27, 1901. He was converted and joined the M. E. Church while quite young. He was twice married. His first marriage was to Miss Sarah McCullough, Oct. 13 1833. One year after their marriage his wife died. Oct. 6, 1836, he married Miss Temperance Brister. This union was blessed with nine children—two boys and seven daughters. The two sons are still living, but only two daughters. All of the children were Christians except one son. Bro. Winborne was licensed to preach about 1837. He was a good preacher, and did great good, and continued to preach every Sunday as long as he was able to stand. He was steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. He was not only a good man, whom everyone loved, but he was a man of courage and energy. He fought for the right. He lived a godly life every day, and made no compromise with sin. He was confined to his room, and most of the time to his bed, for six months before his death, but he did not complain. He said to me often that he was willing to suffer God's will, and ready for the last summons. He moved from Wilkinson county to Pike county, near Topisaw Camp Ground, about 1838, and moved to Columbia, Marion county, in 1872, where he died. We all know where to find "Uncle Harvey." God help all his children and grandchildren to follow him as he followed Christ, that they may meet him in glory.

W. M. WILLIAMS, P. C.

Sister MARY ELMINA CALHOUN (nee Hicks) was born in Clark county, Ala., Nov. 6 1832. She was married to Malcom Calhoun, also of Clark county, Ala., in December, 1850. With her husband she moved to Lincoln parish, La., in 1851, where she died at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. J. T. Rinehart, Nov. 7, 1901. Sister Calhoun professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1851, in which she lived a faithful member until her death. She was the mother of seven children, two of whom, with her husband, preceded her to the glory land. She was a widow twenty-seven years, but, with faith in God as her helper, she trained her children for God and the church, and by her life the children know where to find their mother. Sister Calhoun was a friend to all, and in return was loved by all, as was evidenced by the large crowd of sorrowing friends that attended the funeral. She was in bed about seven weeks before she died, but bore her suffering with Christian fortitude and patience. She died surrounded by her children and grandchildren, and was laid her to rest with her husband and children in the Shiley Cemetery. She has gone, but her example of faith and piety will long be remembered by those who knew her.

B. H. SHEPPARD, P. C.

JOSEPH W. LEWIS was born Dec. 12, 1850, and died Oct. 7, 1901. Bro. Lewis joined the church while young, served the church as Sunday-school superintendent and as steward for many years. He was faithful to every office to which he was elected. He was married to Miss Sarah Ellen Bass, July 9, 1872. To them were born eight children. One is gone before, seven remain with the mother to mourn their earthly loss. Many a pastor remembers Bro. Joe Lewis, of Waterloo Church, as the faithful friend and helper in all church work. Bro. Lewis' home was always open, and a hearty welcome extended from him and family to the pastor, and in his sanctified hospitality the itinerant felt the fulfillment of Christ's promise. The writer served him as pastor nearly four years; knew him well, and loved him as a brother. He lived faithfully, died triumphantly, and is only gone on before. The community has lost a good citizen, the church a faithful worker, the pastor a true friend, the family a loving husband, a tender father, and a faithful and wise counselor. God bless and sustain the bereaved.

M. J. MILLER, P. C.

ERMA ECHOLS was born Aug. 19, 1888 and died at the home of her father in Marshall county, Miss., Sept. 22, 1901. She was the daughter of Bro. J. H. Echols and wife, Mrs. Doreon Echols. Sad indeed to give up this sweet girl that was all to her home that any girl of her age could be. She was so much comfort and help to her mother, who could always trust her with the care of the younger children and the home, feeling certain all would be cared for. She was sick for five weeks with slow fever, and during the time was so patient that there was hardly a word of complaint. We miss her at the church and Sunday-school, but feel safe in saying that we will meet her where no death comes. May God bless Bro. and Sister Echols, and keep them and their family unto eternal life!

JAS. PORTER.

WILLIAM RAPP LYNCH, son of Rhet. B. and Minnie Lynch, was born Sept. 27, 1896, and died Sept. 30, 1901. Willie was a very bright child, and endeared himself to everyone by his sweet disposition and affectionate manner. He was only five years of age, and yet regarded his word to his father as something very sacred. As an instance: During the past Summer he came to my house with his sister and brothers for plums. I offered him three very ripe ones, but he refused to eat them, saying he had told his papa that he would not eat any until he came back home. How many grown boys consider their word obligatory, though given to a parent? Death has certainly taken the pet of the family. The charmed circle is broken; there is one more in heaven.

K. V. B.

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. MARY A. BARR (nee Terry), was born in Kemper county, Miss., Dec. 19, 1874; joined the M. E. Church, South, at Bethel, on Daleville charge, in August, 1894, in which church she lived a consistent member until God called her home, Oct. 30, 1901. She was married to Thos. J. Barr, Nov. 23, 1894. Four children were the result of this happy union—two boys and two girls. It was my sad, but happy, privilege to visit Sister Barr several times during her last illness. She was a patient sufferer, and when the final struggle came, she was ready. May her loved ones live for God, and meet her in glory! Her pastor,

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

At a regular meeting of the Argonian Literary Society, Grenada College, Oct. 5, 1901, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Our former friend, sister-mate, and member of this society, Miss WILLIE LEE SMITH, has been removed from this world to a world of bliss, we, the committee appointed to draft resolutions commemorative of her death, beg leave to submit the following:

Resolved, That in the death of Willie Lee Smith our society has lost one of its brightest former members, the church an earnest supporter, her family one of its best loved members, and society in general one of its brightest ornaments.

2. That we deplore her death, but, trusting in the promises of God, believe she has been translated to a happier sphere, where she is forever with the Lord.

3. That we deeply sympathize with her mother, our former much loved matron, in this great affliction, but would recommend her to the source of all comfort, and to "Him who doeth all things well."

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the Minutes of this society, a copy sent to the mother of the deceased, and a copy to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Lonely Homes

A home is never complete without children. Yet many homes are childless. Many wives are desolate for the lack of a child to love. Their lives are aimless—void of the high motives of motherhood. While barrenness is causing incalculable sadness and sorrow, it exists in most cases on account of some little female trouble, which Wine of Cardui would speedily set right. This pure Wine regulates the disordered female organs by building up the worn out nerves and regulating the menstrual flow. It restores the fallen womb to its proper place. By strengthening the generative organs, it makes pregnancy possible where barrenness exists. You can depend on

WINE OF CARDUI

Suffering women all over the land have been depending on it for seventy-five years. No more convincing proof can be given than the testimony of Mrs. Benson, who is only one of thousands of women to whom Wine of Cardui has brought a permanent cure. Many cases of miscarriage—that trouble which robs mothers of their hopes—have been avoided by timely use of the Wine. You are asked to try Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught, its companion medicine. Nine out of ten cases of female trouble, barrenness included, yield to them. All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui.

Vandervoort, Ark., April 2, 1900.

Last May I had a miscarriage, which was followed by flooding. I read your Almanac and my husband got me a bottle of Wine of Cardui and it stopped my flooding and restored my fallen womb to its place. Now I am cured after taking three bottles and have another to take which I got this morning. I am expecting to become a mother and Wine of Cardui will be my doctor.

Consecration services were held at the new Prytania Street Presbyterian Church, this city, on Sunday, the Rev. Dr. B. M. Palmer preaching an eloquent sermon.

Mr. Hutin, president of the Panama Canal Company, presented to President Roosevelt a formal offer for the sale of the property and franchise to the United States.

An international labor alliance, offensive and defensive, between unions of Great Britain and the United States was advocated by a British delegate at a meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

Mr. Moody (Republican), of Massachusetts, introduced in the House of Representatives a resolution asking for the appointment of a committee to investigate whether or not members of the Louisiana delegation are entitled to their seats in that body.

George J. Gould, his wife, his daughter and a party of railroad officials visited New Orleans, and Mr. Gould said he was anxious to put on a line of steamers; that he did not know whether the west bank line would be built, and that he was pleased with conditions in the South.

Bills were introduced in the House of Representatives for appropriations of $50,000 for the celebration to be held in New Orleans of the one hundredth anniversary of the Louisiana purchase; of $8,000 000 for deep water navigation at Southwest Pass, and of $2,000,000 for a postoffice at New Orleans.

ATTENTION, PREACHERS.

Now is the time for you to do some good work for the ADVOCATE.

The ADVOCATE greatly needs your help.

We need a new dress of type, that we may make the paper attractive.

Our machinery needs repairs, and there are quite a lot of other things that are necessary to bring the paper up to the proper standard.

It can not be done without your individual help.

Now, will you not make one hard effort, before Conference, to aid this worthy cause?

We believe the following will help you:

For Two Dollars we will send to all new subscribers the ADVOCATE from now until Jan. 1, 1903.

Thus, by sending us the names now, they will receive the paper nearly fifteen months for two dollars. This is worth considering.

If subscribers have not the cash on hand, you can send any time between now and your first Annual Conference.

To all old subscribers who will pay their subscription in full to date, and send us two dollars additional, we will send the paper from now until Jan. 1, 1903. The label tells when subscriptions expire.

The paper will also be sent from now until January, 1903, at our regular club rate: $1 50 in clubs of ten, cash with the order.

Now, brethren, please give this your personal attention, and by sending us one or two new subscribers, we will have as well printed a paper as anybody.

Please help us. We want to make a good report at Conference.

Fraternally yours,

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

The Illustrated Methodist Magazine FREE to Our Readers

Everyone Will Appreciate This Gift.

By special arrangement with the Methodist Magazine Publishing Co. (St. Louis, New York and Chicago) we are enabled to offer their beautiful monthly magazine to everyone of our subscribers free of charge. That is to say, we will give the magazine free for twelve months with every yearly subscription, at two dollars each, to this paper, new or renewal. If your subscription is in arrears, pay up your arrearage and one year in advance, and we will give you, absolutely free, one year's subscription to that splendid pictorial monthly, The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine. This is the only illustrated Methodist magazine published in the United States. Most of our readers have seen it; if not, write us, and a free sample copy will be sent you. The MAGAZINE is a beautiful publication, containing not only the general literature and artistic illustrations which are characteristic of the best features of the high-class secular magazines, but it has also the distinctive literature of our church. No other magaziae so richly deserves a place in every Methodist home. It is chaste in matter, lavish in illustration, ably edited, and contains departments of interest for every member of the family, old and young.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"It is a joy to the eye, the mind and the heart."—Bishop W. A. Candler.

This remarkable offer of a free gift of a year's subscription to this splendid MAGAZINE is for prompt acceptance. It may not remain open long, and we hope that all our readers will take advantage of it at once.

If your subscription to our paper is not in arrears, or your renewal is not yet due, send price of renewal for one year, and date of your subscription to our paper will be extended, and The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine will be sent you for twelve months.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The North Mississippi Conference of the M. E. Church, South, was authorized by act of the General Conference which met in Memphis, Tenn., May, 1870. It was formed out of portions of the Memphis, Mississippi and Mobile Conferences. It embraces that part of the State lying north of the southern boundaries of Washington, Holmes, Attala, Winston and Noxubee counties, and also those portions of Sumpter and Pickens counties, Ala., west of the Tombigbee river. It includes the great prairies of Eastern Mississippi and the rich Delta of the western portion of the State from near the mouth of the Yazoo river to within a few miles of Memphis. Between these two sections is a large territory, not so rich in soil as the Delta or the prairies, but containing as many good people to the square mile as any part of our great Southland.

The first session of this Conference was held at Water Valley early in December, 1870, under the presidency of Bishop David S. Doggett. As fragments of three Conferences were brought together to organize one, the session, especially on the opening day, was one of unusual interest. Officers were to be elected. Of course, no president was to be voted for, as by law the Bishop presided. Interest centered in the election of secretary. There were three nominations: Dr. L. C. Garland, then a professor in the University of Mississippi; Rev. R. J. Jones, who was from the Mississippi contingent, and Rev. John Barcroft, from the Memphis end of the territory. After several ballots, Mr. Barcroft was elected. After that election there was never any struggle over the secretaryship as long as Mr. Barcroft lived. He was twenty times elected to that office. After his death the lamented J. S. Oakley, who succeeded him, held the position for nine consecutive sessions. Mr. Oakley's health failed, and he gave place to Rev. T. W. Lewis, the present incumbent, who, without asking, can have it indefinitely.

The bringing together of these men from different sections created no friction. Each man, under the peculiar system of the Methodist Church, went his way as he was appointed, attended to his work, reported to Conference, and looked after all the interests of the church that came before the body. A stranger looking on could detect no difference between this and one of the oldest Conferences of the church. Methodism being connectional, all the Conferences "walk by the same rule, mind the same thing;" hence, when fractions of different bodies come together, they readily resolve themselves into one.

The leaders of the Conference of that day were strong and consecrated men. There were Joseph H. Brooks, E. E. Hamilton, Philip Tuggle, Isaac Ebbert, F. S. Petway, J. J. Wheat, Amos Kendall, and W. S. Harrison, from the Memphis end of the work. Of these, only Amos Kendall and W. S. Harrison are living. Though getting along in years, both are still in the active work. Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan was originally of the Memphis Conference, but the writer is not sure that he fell into the North Mississippi Conference at its organization. He is, however, to-day a member, and one of the most intelligent and active leaders. From Mississippi there were W. P. Barton, P. A. Johnston, Kenneth A. Jones, and Ransom J. Jones. The two last named are still in the work. From the Mobile section came T. Y. Ramsey, Sr.; J. D. Cameron, Thomas Cameron, S. M. Thames, J. B. Stone, and Dr. T. C. Wier. Of these, only the first named has ceased to labor and to live.

There was also a class of bright and promising young men on hand, some of whom had been in the connection several years. Others were received at this session of the body. We name R. G. Porter, John Barcroft, J. W. Honnoll, J. M. Boon, Thomas W. Dye, Lee Bates, R. M. Davis, and others. John Barcroft died in 1890. J. M. Boon is a prominent member of the Southwest Missouri Conference. Lee Bates quit the ministry and went to practicing law. After establishing himself well in practice in Mississippi, he went to Texas. The others named are still in the mother Conference, and leaders among men. A host of others have come and gone. A nobler man than J. S. Oakley never served the church. He came to America from England, and joined the Conference in 1872. He was then about twenty years of age, and took high rank at the very beginning and maintained his place—a strong and faithful man—until stricken by disease. He lingered more than a year, and died in peace. R. P. Mitchell was a product of Mississippi, and a very superior growth was he. He began early, rose rapidly, and died ere he had reached middle age. Others might be named, but the list is too long. Let it suffice to say the North Mississippi Conference of to-day is a body of superior men, working to cultivate Immanuel's land, and are doing their work with an eye single to the glory of their Lord. Dr. W. B. Murrah, one of the foremost men, came in in 1874. He is a tower of strength.

But even a short sketch like this would be incomplete without mention of two men who labored in these bounds. Dr. Joseph B. Cottrell spent four years at Columbus. He was a brilliant, but erratic man. He took pleasure in verging as near on to heterodoxy as possible without committing himself to heresy. It was said of him that on one Sunday he would make some strong statement, and the next Sunday would be compelled to explain, and the Sunday following he would be called on to explain his explanation. It was hard for him to keep out of trouble. Dr. Samuel A. Steel, another product of Mississippi, also spent four years at Columbus. He still lives, and is president of Logan College, Russellville, Ky. Dr. Steel is among the most brilliant and fascinating preachers in Southern Methodism.

The North Mississippi preachers have wrought well. Beginning their career as a Conference less than six years after the close of the Civil War, they had to begin, it may be said, almost as pioneers, and build up from nothing. The country had been devastated and impoverished. The preachers were poorly paid, and many of them found it hard to secure a living. But they had gone in for sacrifice and suffering, and heroically bore their part in efforts to resuscitate their stricken country. Many sections of the Conference are still poor, and the preachers yet know what it is to suffer hardship. They are as uncomplaining to day and as cheerful in their work as in the days of old.

Success has crowned the labors of the Conference. There is, perhaps, not a township in the territory, save in the Delta, that has not a Methodist house of worship, or one or more members of the church. Some townships have several churches and many hundreds of members. The greatest success has been achieved in the great river valley. This is largely due to the railroads, which have developed the agricultural resources of the country. But Methodist preachers were in the swamps and cane brakes before the days of railroads. They were the advance guard, and though the progress of the country has been manifold, more during the past two decades than for the forty years previous, the church has fully kept pace with the country, and the Delta is now, in some respects, the most desirable section of the Conference. The preachers are not afraid of malaria, as they used to be. The hill country is also developing. The people are not growing rich, but they live well, and are learning more and more to appreciate the gospel, and are giving the preachers and the benevolent enterprises of the church a better support.

The statistics for 1870 are not at hand. The figures here given show the strength of the Conference at the close of 1900: Local preachers, 111; members, 14,928; number of churches, 525; value of churches, $537,106; number of parsonages, 121; value of parsonages, $122,168; number of Sunday-schools, 439; officers and teachers, 2,177; scholars, 20,591; paid for support of ministry, $71,105.10; paid worn-out preachers, etc., $2,882.95; for foreign missions, $7,590.40; domestic missions, $2,407.80; church extension, $2,201.70; for other benevolent enterprises, $10,708.17; total amount of contributions, $96,899.12.

This total does not include the amount raised by the women of the Conference for home and foreign missions. Their work is separate and controlled by their own societies. The amount added to the above would swell the aggregate considerably above $100,000.

North Mississippi Methodists are doing a grand work for the Master.—New Orleans Picayune, Dec. 3.

MISSIONARY BULLETIN.

Five Annual Conferences have paid, up to date, their assessments for foreign missions in full, the last being the Northwest Texas.

Rev. F. S. Onderdonk writes of a great revival in progress in the City of Mexico. It has reached many Americans who have drifted far away from home and church privileges.

Our growing work in the great city of Sao Paulo, Brazil, demands a more commodious church. The Church Extension Board and the Board of Missions, by instruction of Bishop Galloway, have recently forwarded $1,000 each toward the purchase of a site and erection of a building. We need at least $5,000 more at once with which to carry this enterprise to completion. The Bishop says there are over 100,000 Italians alone in this city.

Rev. C. F. Corbin reports from El Paso that the church he has been building for the Mexican congregation has progressed so far that they will soon be able to move into the basement. It is a substantial structure, and has been erected upon a corner lot facing the great highway between the United States and Mexico.

Palmore Institute, Kobe, Japan, is one of the most important factors in our work among young men. Miss Maud Bonnell writes that four or five of the finest students in their night-school have just been baptized on profession of faith in Christ. We are greatly in need of a building which could be put up and be equipped for this work at an outlay of $5,000 in gold.

The revival in Japan continues with unabated interest. Rev. B. W. Waters writes from Hiroshima: "We are now having a series of meetings in the church here in connection with our Conference Forward Movement. Brothers Tanaka and Yanagiwara have been assisting us. Sixteen have given their names as enquirers."

A recent communication from Rev. C. A. Tagne tells of his return to Yamaguchi, and the cordial welcome extended by the Japanese Christians to himself and wife. He writes of the wonderful revival work under Mr. John R. Mott as follows: "Mr. Mott was in Oxayama only last week, and held a meeting for students, when 200 out of an audience of 600 placed themselves on record as anxious to seek Christ, and be taught the 'way.'"

The city in which Bro. Tagne and his wife are stationed is one of the great strategic points in Japan. Immediate help should be given in order that they might seize the opportunity before them. "With a night school," Bro. Tagne writes, "in which the Bible should be a text-book, we could find a way to the hearts of many of the more than 2,500 students in attendance on the special schools in this little city. To show you how dominant must be the influence of the schools and students on the city of Yamaguchi, I need only tell you that the inhabitants of the city barely number 15,000, while within its borders there are 11 schools in addition to the common schools sustained by the city. If we could only secure the rental of a building at $6 per month, we might open a night-school, through which to reach many of the students. Is there not some one who would like to invest that much in behalf of these students?

There is no field which offers more encouragement at present than Rio Grande do Sul—the southern state of Brazil, into which we have recently entered. Rev. John W. Price says, in a recent report, that no phase of the work is more promising than that among the young men. He is reaching them daily in his evangelistic work, while Bro. Terrell has two promising fellows with him at Cruz Alta, whom he is preparing for the ministry; one is a weaver and the other a shoemaker, but both with more than ordinary capacity, and thoroughly consecrated. Three others are under instruction, and working with two of our Brazilian preachers. This only gives emphasis to the necessity of equipping Granbery College to do the work of educating and qualifying men, which is so much needed.

While young men are being converted and trained in Japan, in Mexico, and in Brazil, we are not without those at home who are offering for the work. Three candidates have recently written to the secretaries of the Board, seeking advice as to further preparation for the foreign field. One is a teacher in Virginia, another a young preacher in Florida, and a third a physician of considerable experience in Arkansas.

A clarion note comes to us from Rev. James L. Kennedy in Brazil: "We are expecting to receive 1,000 into the membership of our church in Brazil this year. The harvest is ripe. We are inspired by what God has done through Methodism for the world, and for this great republic in the Southern Hemisphere, and we hope for the richest ingathering this year in the history of our Brazilian Church. Pray for us."

"CIRCUIT RIDER" ON BAPTISM.

MR. EDITOR: I have been reading "Circuit Rider" on baptism with intense interest. He shoots a rifle-gun and aims at the target. In olden times marksmen used to put up a target with a cross in it, and the man that shot out the cross would carry off the medal. So "Circuit Rider" has won the medal, and I see no hopes for the immersionists, unless they come again with a new argument favoring immersion as being a scriptural mode of baptism. When I read his last article on the striking out the word "immerse" in parenthesis in our Discipline, I said, "A man" He voiced hundreds of itinerant preachers' sentiments in reference to immersing candidates for membership into our church. I have been a member of the Mississippi Conference for twelve years, and I have never immersed anyone yet and I never intend to do it if I can get some one to do it for me. I would send forty miles for a man to do the work for me, and pay his railroad fare going and coming. I do not want to do anything that I can not do conscientiously. The immersionists have failed to prove from Scripture that John ever did immerse anyone; neither can they prove that Christ was immersed by John. Common sense ought to forever settle the question of John's baptism, for no man on earth could have stood in the water as long as John would have been required to do in order to have immersed all the people that attended his ministry; and more than that, he could not have baptized half the people that he did baptize in the length of time that he was required to do it in by immersion (ten months). I had a Baptist to say to me a few years ago that we Methodists had no mode of baptism; that we recognized every mode of baptism practiced in the world by all religious sects. I, for one, am in favor of striking out the word "immerse" in our Discipline, and let us stick to our mode of baptism, and the embarrassments of the past will be ended in reference to mode. Let it be known the world over that when candidates come to the Methodist Church they must receive baptism by affusion, and if they are not willing to receive it that way, let them strike their number at the pool, where they belong.

ITINERANT.

AN URGENT APPEAL.

BY MRS. C. D. SIMMONS.

DEAR BRO BOSWELL: In addressing you personally, I hope to reach each one of "the powers that be" in the Louisiana Annual Conference; hence I beg space in your valuable paper for some points in regard to this portion of the field which was served by Rev. J. L. McManus during the year now closing. If the simple dimensions of the work were an enticing feature, then would it be a coveted position indeed. Well-nigh countless are the souls who are extending a mute appeal, as it were, for spiritual light. To one who sees for the first time the total blindness which Catholicism wraps around her votaries, the conditions are almost incomprehensible. Then how urgent is the necessity for the church to bestir herself, that those who are not allowed to investigate for themselves may be taught "the way, the truth, and the life," as revealed in Holy Writ?

The membership of Meadows Chapel and New River are extremely anxious to have Bro. McManus returned to them next year. He is evidently the man for the place, judging from the amount of real, earnest good he has done these people. "Building day by day as the moments glide away" seems to be his watchword, and an aggressive, wide-awake worker, who does not seek easy positions, nor fear to put his shoulder to the wheel, is the right man in the right place.

Bro. McManus has been wonderfully blessed in his work on New River. In the very citadel of this Catholic community he has diligently sought out and united a few of the faithful into a very prosperous little church. Baptists and Catholics, as well as Methodists, have extended to him a hearty welcome, and their homes are ever open to receive him. The members of these two churches are very anxious to secure all of his time, divided between them, but the paucity of their numbers precludes the possibility of supporting him as he should be, so they are praying that Conference may convert this into a mission field, and supplement the amount raised from the churches, thus guaranteeing him a respectable salary while he is endeavoring to win souls for Christ. He has visited much among his people, entering homes where a minister of the gospel was never before seen, showing he possesses the art of gaining admittance to all classes. While these two fields are willing to do their utmost towards his support, yet, on account of small numbers, their contributions would be entirely inadequate; therefore if the Conference really wishes to "hold the fort," and keep this field open, they should, by all means, furnish the necessary amount to keep a man here.

"Lift up your eyes, and look; behold! the fields are already white unto harvest, but the reapers are few."

HERMANVILLE, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I am closing my second year on the Hermanville charge very successfully. In many respects it has been a very pleasant year. We have had good meetings at all of our churches. Received at these meetings on profession of faith, 27; by certificate, 5. We had with us in these meetings Bros. W. H. Lewis, L. Carley, J. R. Jones and L. S. Jones. These brethren all did fine work, and the people were delighted with their preaching. Our beautiful new church at Carpenter, Miss., was dedicated on the first Sunday in October by Rev. L. S. Jones. It was a very nice occasion, and the people were delighted with the services. We are planning to build a handsome church at Hermanville. We expect the salaries of pastor and presiding elder to be in full at Conference, and the Conference collections well up. The kind ladies of this charge, led by Mrs. J. W. and Mrs. Gus Smith, of Pisgah Church, have presented their pastor with a handsome suit of clothes, and, to complete the outfit, Mrs. Capt. Cameron and Mrs. John H. Gordon, and others, presented me with a nice hat. I extend my sincere thanks to the kind ladies for their most thoughtful and generous consideration of their pastor. Dr. Monnger made his last visit to our charge a few weeks ago. We had a very good Quarterly Conference, and he gave us four fine sermons, which were enjoyed by all. Our people regret very much to give him up from the district. He is held in the highest esteem in this charge as a painstaking presiding elder, an excellent preacher, and as a highly cultured and refined Christian gentleman.

What Our Editors Say.

A PARADOX.

There is a common notion abroad to the effect that a man may show the uprightness of his own character by the severity with which he judges the actions of other people. Just how this notion originated, we are unable to say. That it is contrary to the plain teaching of Scripture, as well as to the dictates of common sense, is entirely evident. The known fact of every-day observation is that the faultiest men are the keenest critics, and that they are likely to be particularly harsh in dealing with the very shortcomings of which they themselves are guilty. Those who dwell in glass houses ought not to throw stones, but that is really their chief occupation. . The liar refuses to believe that anybody is truthful; the thief, that anybody is honest; the debauchee, that anybody is pure. Our Lord himself has given us that inimitable picture of hypocrisy in which a man with a beam in his own eye is very busily and actively engaged in looking for motes in his brother's eye. Can we ever forget his ringing words: "Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye"? A vicarious conscience is a psychological puzzle. We devoutly pray that if we should ever go astray from the paths of rectitude, we may not fall into the hands of a judge who is of doubtful reputation; and we are glad from the bottom of our soul that at the last day we are to stand before One who is absolutely without stain or touch of sin. Purity and tenderness go together. Only the victors who have overcome in the conflicts of life are able to feel a deep and holy compassion for those who are vanquished and borne down. —Christian Advocate (Nashville).

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

The children are going to read something. Our splendid system of public and private schools has taught them all to read, and they will read almost anything they get their hands on. This tendency and taste should be encouraged, but carefully directed. That children love to read is hopeful, but it is a dangerous habit, unless the books are selected with care by older heads. Many a misspent life dates the first wrong step back to the time when the first bad book was read. Many a great man and woman dates the beginning of a new and higher life back to the time when some thoughtful friend placed in his or her hands a good book. Look well into what your children read See that they have a bountiful supply of good books. A little thought and care on this point may change the whole future of your children. A carefully-selected book may awaken new emotions and ambitions, and result in a career of great prominence and usefulness of the children now around the hearthstones at home. Look after the children's reading.—Texas Christian Advocate.

THE OLD-TIME RELIGION.

A great deal is being said lately about "the old-time religion," in contrast with that of a more modern type, and generally to the disparagement of the latter. The fact is, religion is not limited by dates or boundaries. It is the same always, everywhere, and in all human hearts where it is known and felt. The same religion that enabled Enoch to walk with God, way back in the gray dawning of time, is essential in every age to that elevated communion of the human spirit with the divine. Being a supernatural product, it is not affected by the lapse of time, the changes of human opinion, or the progress of human society. Those who contend that the religion of the gospel is left far behind by this age of advanced thought (?) as unequal to meet its lofty and imperious demands, know not whereof they affirm. Christianity is the promoter of all true advancement, of the highest forms of culture, civilization, and human development. It is more than that—it is their prime cause, so that where it does not exist they do not exist. Instead of a movement forward, there is, in its absence, a constant retrogression. The history of the race demonstrates this. Those who speak of Christianity as outgrown, and not up-to-date, forget that the very growth and progressiveness that suggest the criticism are the immediate product of the religion they discredit. — The Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate.

THE NEW MEMBER.

We are happy to know that so many bright revival fires have been burning in our Conference within the last few months. Many hundreds of souls have been brought into the kingdom. We trust that our pastors have kept in mind that their most serious work began when they gave the right hand of fellowship to the new members, and commended them to the love and care of the brethren. The new member needs food: Give him the Bible, the Discipline, and the church paper. Draw him to the preaching service and prayer meeting, and give him the "sincere milk of the Word." The new member needs exercise. Send him into the harvest field. Make him a worker in the Sunday-school and Epworth League. Teach him that he has found Christ, not simply that he may be prepared to die, but that he may be prepared to live. Teach him that to live best is not to enjoy most, but to give most of his life's resources to his fellow-man. Show him that to crave the richest blessings of God without desiring to empty them upon his neighbor is to be guilty of intense selfishness. When we hear the reports of so many conversions, there comes to us the question, Where are the converts now? Where will they be this time next year?—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

BISHOP FOWLER IS RIGHT.

The General Missionary Committee of the M. E. Church, at its recent annual session in Philadelphia, granted the request of Dr. Goucher to furnish $40,000 to be used in establishing with the M. E. Church, South, a Publishing House in China. Bishop Fowler is said to have opposed the grant because union means "everlasting trouble." Bishop Fowler is right if he means the union of the two white Episcopal Methodisms in the United States. But if this is a move simply towards a practical federation, it is time the M. E. brethren were taking it. We have had enough talk of it, and the M. E. Church, South, has gone far enough until the party of the other part goes some.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

LETTER FROM KENTUCKY.

BY DR. S. A. STEEL.

MR. EDITOR: I have just returned home from a pleasant swing around the circle. My route took me down through Mississippi and over to Virginia. I made numerous stops on the way, enjoying the hospitality and good fellowship of the brethren in various parsonages, putting up at detestable hotels, working hard, and having a good time generally. My present position allows, and indeed requires, me to travel a good deal in the interests of my school. I especially enjoyed my trip through Mississippi. I spent a Sunday at Hines' Chapel, where I lived as a boy, where I was licensed to preach, and around which many sacred memories cluster. I was delighted to find that it is in a prosperous condition. Rev. B. P. Jaco, the earnest pastor, has done a good work, both there and in Hernando, where he occupies a neat, new parsonage. I am not sure, however, that it is wise to put a town like Hernando in a circuit. With a little encouragement I believe a wide-awake young man could make Hines' Chapel a self-sustaining charge.

I looked in on Dr. Murrah's school at Jackson. One seldom sees a finer body of students than that at Millsaps College, and it is not every institution where the student body will be assembled at noon of a mid-week day to listen to the gospel. Rev. W. M. McIntosh, president of Grenada College, preached a very earnest sermon, which was heard with evident attention. The future of our country is bright when Christian colleges like Millsaps are filled with the youth of the land.

My trip took me to Hattiesburg, Lumberton, Poplarville, and Columbia, in the southern part of Mississippi. I found that part of the State very prosperous, and was especially glad to note the interest taken in religious and educational work. I am indebted particularly to our young friend, Mr. Marvin Morehead, principal of the school at Lumberton, for courtesies that made my visit both profitable and pleasant. Bro. Rayner also laid me under obligations. At Hattiesburg, Prof. Woodley showed me much kindness. Rev. W. W. Simmons, the presiding elder, spent a half hour in genial chat—a battle-scarred veteran he, with whom it is refreshing to talk. Rev. D. Scarborough, of East Hattiesburg, cheered me with kind words. At Columbia, Bro. Williams treated me well. I must tell you a good joke on me—or Williams. Some time ago I was at the Mississippi Conference, and delivered an address on "The Pioneers of Methodism in America." Williams heard it, and it stirred him up; stirred him immensely, it seems. So when he got home nothing would satisfy him but to name his new baby after the orator who made that speech. But Mrs. Williams refused to enthuse. She was calm and cool, and made some inquiries about the man who bore the name her enthusiastic husband insisted on imposing on her baby. She would not have her baby named after an unknown roving orator. Williams did his best, but I missed it. All of that comes of Williams not taking his wife to Conference. However, the baby missed Proctor. I have a namesake in Louisville; a bright little fellow who answers to the name of Paul. Somebody teased him by telling him his name was spelled "aleal." Paul's dander was up in a minute, and they found out that however it was spelled, it meant "high mettle."

What a great State Mississippi would be if we could get rid of the negroes. The negro is a failure. The only hope for him was in the industrial training Booker Washington is giving at Tuskegee, which is precisely what he got in slavery, plus a little book learning, which is of doubtful economic advantage. We were all proud of Washington and his work, because we hoped it would produce a better type of negro. And now Washington has sold his birthright for a mess of White House pottage, and we are in doubt again about the new negro. A man never lost a finer opportunity to put his cause forward than Washington did. Had he declined President Roosevelt's invitation out of deference to the sensitive sentiment of the South, it would have given him a hold on the confidence and esteem of the Southern people that would have been of immense advantage to his work, and lost him nothing at the North. But he has lost his grip in Dixie. The social recognition of the negro, with its logical corollary of miscegenation, is abhorrent to every rational mind. Better annihilate one or the other of us than mix and ruin both. The white people of the South will neither mix nor submit to annihilation. So the best policy for the negro is to accept the situation, and be content to remain separate. It is a great problem—moral, social, and economic. And the chief danger is on its economic side. The presence of the negro keeps a more intelligent class of rural laborers out. If we could transport the negroes from Mississippi, in two decades the State would blossom as the rose from Chickasaw Bluffs to Gulfport. But you can do nothing with the negro the North has made. We didn't make the negro of to-day. He is the progeny and protege of our friends up North—the result of "Sherman's march to the sea" and Grant's "Fight it out on this line, if it takes all Summer." Booker Washington has now set him the example of aspiring to social equality, and that dooms him.

I am asked, as I go around, where the big preachers are that Vanderbilt ought to have turned out by this time. Well, where are they? Preachers, I mean, not scholars loaded with lore nobody understands, but men who put preaching first, and last, and above everything, and have power with God, and shake assemblies with the energy of heaven. I remember the battle of the giants, McTyeire and Pierce, over theological schools; McTyeire for and Pierce against them. I was on McTyeire's side. But I am not so sure now that Pierce didn't have the strongest side. At any rate, Vanderbilt has not yet vindicated McTyeire's position. Yes, they are cultivated; I'll admit that. I attended an Annual Conference recently, and heard one of the Vanderbilt preachers. "A coming man," they said. "He's a Vanderbilter," they said. He appeared in scrupulous attire, and with copious manuscript, and was faultless in the technique of his art—attitude, gesture, inflection, etc. He regaled us with iridescent sentiment, wove garlands of rhetoric, told us a lot of things about ethical obligations, and all he said had a sort of rosy mist about it, and the scent of flowers. But I hungered for an original thought, born of deep meditation amid the eternal sublimities of the gospel. I longed to see him hurl a thunderbolt of truth, forged in the depths of his own soul, out of the infinite materials of revealed wisdom, blazing hot with the earnestness of a mind on fire with the passion of preaching. What are 'ethics' to religion? What is the toy arrow of amateur archery to the burning bolt shot from a heart moved by the Holy Ghost? Dr. Matthews will pardon me—he is one of ten thousand; but I regard the increasing tendency to use manuscript in the pulpit as a sign of the decline of preaching among us. What we gain in culture we lose in power. I am not against theological education in the schools, but I am watching to see if it is going to give us such mighty preachers as Bascom, and Kavanaugh, and Marvin. We are going daft about culture, but this age needs Elijahs who handle the lightnings of the sky. Of one thing I am pretty sure: that our ministry will not gain anything in spiritual power by our young preachers going to Chicago to study. They return inoculated with sentiments foreign to our civilization, and often with opinions at variance with the evangelical Christianity it is the supreme business of the Methodist Church to propagate. Am I an old fogy? No; what do you mean? But I am old enough to know where the main channel is in the river of life.

A CRYSTAL WEDDING.

REV. W. M. AND MAY B. M'INTOSH.

Very seldom do such joyous occasions occur as that which, on the eighteenth of November, 1901, celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of the marriage of the persons whose names stand at the head of this article. Ample preparation was made for the occasion. The homely old proverb, "May willing hands make work light," was never better illustrated than on the afternoon of that day, when a veritable army of light-hearted maidens, divided off, for convenience sake, into sections, prepared halls and parlor, library, chapel and dining-room for the approaching festival. The invitation to the whole North Mississippi Conference had led us to expect a much larger number of guests than came, but the rain, the near approach of Conference, and various unexpected events, prevented many who would otherwise have been here from coming. Those who could not come, however, caused themselves to be remembered by such pleasant devices as notes, telegrams, or sparkling souvenirs, that the regrets occasioned were to some extent modified. Quite a number of towns sent representatives, and there were preachers enough to add dignity and orthodoxy to the occasion. There was no dining-room in the State capable of seating all the guests at once; so, by the kindly thought of Mrs. McIntosh, two wedding-feasts were spread—one, a "six-o'clock dinner" for the nearly one hundred girls, to whom the occasion had been a "royal good time;" and one at ten P. M. for the remainder of the guests. There were plenty of good things besides "coffee and repartee" at both "spreads." I can testify that one, at least, was a feast, not only to the palate, but to the eye, and that at both there was literally "a feast of reason and a flow of soul."

The college chapel, beautiful in its holiday attire of white and green, was comfortably filled with guests when the notes of the "Wedding March," played by little Miss Jenie McIntosh, oldest daughter of the house, announced that the time for the ceremonies of the evening had arrived. Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, the pastor, entered first from a crimson-curtained alcove in the rear of the chapel platform, taking his stand near the front. He was followed by Dr. and Mrs. Richardson, father and mother of the bride; Miss Edgar Richardson, her sister, and Miss Nannie McIntosh, of Florida, a niece of the groom of the evening. Then came the two little "maids of honor," Misses Kathleen and Willie May McIntosh, and following them the central figures of the ceremony, the two who, fifteen years ago, had joined hands and promised to be faithful, each to the other, "until death us do part." In an address of unusual beauty and felicity of diction, Rev. Mr. Ramsey then spoke of the fifteen years of happy wedded life that had been vouchsafed to the couple before him; years of usefulness, covering happy work; labors that had been crowned with success, making the world happier and better that this man and this woman had lived and wrought together. At the close of the ceremony the little bridesmaids, by pulling white ribbons connected with a lovely floral ball overhead, let down a shower of rose-petals on the bridal party beneath the floral arch. After this the many guests crowded to the rostrum to extend congratulations to those who had so happily passed another mile-stone in the journey of life. It was twelve o'clock P. M. before the guests at the dinner-table arose from their enjoyable sitting. The interval between courses was enlivened by the sentiments given and toasts drank in pure cold water. Mr. J. W. Buchanan, editor of the Grenada Sentinel, acted as toast-master. The first toast, "To the Bride and Groom," was offered by Senator B. C. Adams, of Grenada, and was responded to in a most felicitous style by Rev. W. M. McIntosh. Prof. Powers, of the Grenada High School, spoke beautifully in his "Congratulations." The sentiment, "To the Faculty of Grenada College," was offered by Rev. W. G. Harbin, of Water Valley, and responded to by Mrs. M. I. Hoskins, of the college. Miss Mary V. Duval gave to "Our Guests," and was responded to by Mr. William Dubard, of Grenada.

The many handsome presents given and sent on the occasion made a beautiful display spread out upon the long library table, and the eager interest in the lovely workmanship of "curiously-wrought" crystal was manifested by the crowd which invariably gravitated in that direction.

The evening passed away most delightfully, and no one present will fail in after years to recall how happily sped the hours of the "crystal wedding" at Grenada College.

MARY V. DUVAL.

NO ROMANISM.

From the third to the twelfth centuries various writings mention deaconesses and their work. During the middle ages this institution suffered, as did the true faith, in many respects, Romish innovations gradually taking the place of primitive Christianity. During that period the deaconess degenerated into the nun. The modern deaconess of Protestantism resembles the Roman Catholic nun just as the other Protestant institutions resemble those of Catholicism. It is a reformation. To appreciate this fact, it must be understood that the error of Roman Catholic sisterhoods lies not in the work done by nuns, nor in their uniform or other details, but in the doctrine which underlies the whole system. This doctrine, taught and held before Catholic women as an inducement and incentive, is that the nun is in a special sense the bride of Christ. Their vows in consecration are regarded as marriage vows; hence the requirement of celibacy.

The women of the M. E. Church, South, would, doubtless, disclaim all sympathy with such doctrines. One thing, at least, must be said for the Catholics. When a Roman Catholic woman wishes to devote her life to her church, she knows where to go. Can the women of the Methodist Church, South, say as much? The proposition brought before our church is intended to be practical, not doctrinal. It may be safely asserted that the laying on of hands is the last thing for which any contention will be made. Such a ceremony will seem vital only to those who believe in apostolic succession, and in the imparting of the Holy Ghost through the laying on of a Bishop's hands.

The problem before the Woman's Home Mission Society is how to put in the field the largest number of workers at the smallest cost. After working at this for several years the society has become convinced that a comprehensive system is needed, with the influence of the whole church behind it.

While the deaconess movement did not originate with the W. H. M. S., it was endorsed by the society as, in their opinion, the best plan to meet the need. This society will do what it can, but it can not cover the home mission field as the church might. It is to be supposed that a movement which reaches the whole church will win a support which no one of the societies within the church has received or can expect to receive.

If the proposition is to receive dignified consideration, two questions indicate the appropriate direction of inquiry and argument: First, What does the proposition contemplate? Second, In view of what it contemplates, does our church need it?

Those upon whom the settlement of the question devolves will, doubtless, acquaint themselves with the facts. NELLIE N. SOMERVILLE.

"BAPTIZO" AND $1000.

In the ADVOCATE, of Nov. 7, I notice that the Baptist Chronicle still trots out its offer of $1000 on "bapt'zo." It has changed the wording of the offer from "meaning" to "translated." After the Chronicle's discomfiture of a year and a half ago, it is amazing how they still persist to try to bluff the public with a great, swelling noise about the offer of $1000 for a passage of Scripture or classic Greek where "baptizo" means sprinkle or pour.

It will be remembered by ADVOCATE readers that this proposition was made to me eighteen months ago, and was promptly accepted. But, lo! it was Dr. T. T. Eaton, of Louisville, Ky., who made the offer, and not the Chronicle. To Dr. Eaton I then applied, and sent him four passages — two from classic Greek and two from the New Testament. He disputed the meaning of the word, as I expected, whereupon I challenged him to deposit his money in the First National Bank of Alexandria, La., and designate the Chronicle's editor and assistant as his agents, and we would appeal to the courts. Of course, he backed down with a few reasons of "artful dodging," one of which was that the money was not his, but was the offer of a wealthy layman in Kentucky. So the matter was duly tracked down, and found to be nothing but brag and bluff.

There are plenty of passages in the Scriptures where "baptizo" means sprinkle or pour, and the Chronicle outfit either should "put up or shut up."

After trying to get Dr. Eaton to come to the scratch, I published the result in the ADVOCATE, of Sept. 21, 1900, in an article entitled "Baptist Bluff,' and the Chronicle outfit were as silent as the grave. Where they had been pitching into me as they are now doing in regard to the articles of "A Circuit Rider," but when "Baptist Bluff" came out, they were like the little boy the sheep ran over: they had nothing to say. Silence at that time was golden. It saved their gold.

Respectfully, H. S. JOHNS.

Itching Skin

Distress by day and night—

That's the complaint of those who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with Eczema or Salt Rheum—and outward applications do not cure. They can't.

The source of the trouble is in the blood—make that pure and this scaling, burning, itching skin disease will disappear.

"I was taken with an itching on my arms which proved very disagreeable. I concluded it was salt rheum and bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. In two days after I began taking it I felt better and it was not long before I was cured. Have never had any skin disease since." MRS. IDA E. WARD, Cove Point, Md.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss.

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

The Home Department.

The Home Department of Sunday-schools is intended for that class of people, always large in any community, who do not attend the regular sessions of the school. It is simply an enlargement of the Sunday-school itself. The community is organized into districts, over each of which presides a visitor. The duties of the visitor is to distribute the lesson quarterly, collect whatever voluntary contributions may be given, and to perform such other duties as a consecrated heart may see will spiritually uplift those under its care. Those who join the Home Department are simply required to study the Sunday-school lessons half an hour each week, and the object of the department is to promote Bible study. Surely that should receive encouragement from every member of the church and from all others who desire to flee from the wrath to come.

There is a woful lack of Bible knowledge everywhere, and even among the members of the church are too many who are strangers to its pages. Would to God we had the pen and tongue of a Paul, or a Wesley, or a Whitefield, that we might rouse our people to the importance of this subject. A Bible-studying laity make a spiritual church, and increases its power and influence a hundredfold, and better upholds the hands of the ministry. Yes, more; it fosters brotherly love and that "charity that suffereth long and is kind;" it sees in distress the brotherhood of Christ, and does more than any other single agency to bring our children to his feet. The influence of Bible reading on individual character and personal life is great and lasting. The Bible is the Word of God and the sword of the Spirit, and it is the great weapon of offense and defense in the Christian warfare. Without a knowledge of its truths none can wage a successful warfare, or overcome the world, or develop the spiritual life.

God grant that our people may become a Bible-reading people, and one of the best means to accomplish this result is the Home Department of the Sunday-school. Let them be organized in every school.

Four years ago a gentleman in Colorado conceived the idea of getting the young people of his church to pledge themselves to be on time in meeting their engagements and prompt in keeping their word. His plan succeeded so well that it was adopted by others, and the outcome was the formation of the Ou Timer's Tribe, and adoption of the pledge as follows: "In signing this pledge, I hereby become an Ou Timer, agree to wear the O. T. pin, and to meet all my engagements, sacred and secular, on time, unless unavoidably hindered." Registry books were opened, and all signers of the pledge were duly registered at the headquarters at Denver, Col. Nearly 12,000 young and old people have enlisted in the ranks of the Ou Timer's Tribe, and thus a practical method of correcting habits of tardiness has been the means of doing much good in many communities. It has been adopted by Sunday-schools and other organizations, and is proving a real blessing.—Evangel.

Dr. Robert G. Seymour, in speaking of the work of the American Baptist Publication Society, says that an important service to the Sunday-schools organized by the society is the institutes that are regularly conducted. In opening up new territory the Sunday-school missionary must work with such material as is accessible. He is able, as a rule, to induce earnest Christians to serve as teachers, but it frequently happens that the readiness to undertake the work is greater than their capacity. Some are deficient in knowledge, and many have no aptitude for teaching. To remedy these defects, the institutes have been organized, which prepare the teacher for his work. More than five hundred of these are held every year, with the result that the teachers become familiar, not only with the lessons, but with the best pedagogic methods of imparting knowledge. The holding of the institute has become an important branch of the Sunday-school missionary work, and it has proved so effective an aid that the Publication Society has now under consideration a proposal to establish a National Institute, which shall direct the studies of teachers orally or by correspondence, and grant diplomas for proficiency. This is one step in the direction of solving the much-discussed problem of providing trained teachers for the Sunday-school.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WOODVILLE, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Our church at Woodville has been moving along with steady improvement this year. Congregations have been growing larger and more attentive, the Sunday-school has been maintained with unabated interest, the Epworth League has been somewhat active, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has increased its contributions, and the Ladies' Aid Society has manifested a commendable activity. Chiefly through the persevering energy of the Aid Society a handsome new pipe organ has been purchased and placed in the church, the catalogue price of which is $1,200. During a temporary absence of the pastor in the Summer the pulpit was ably and satisfactorily filled by the Rev. T. W. Brown.

Our presiding elder has been with us at the appointed times, and given general satisfaction by his strong and edifying sermons. Our object has been to convict and convert sinners, and to encourage the children of God in all righteousness, promoting a vigorous and growing life.

On Thanksgiving Day our Jewish friends united with us in a most delightful service, at the close of which the collection amounted to $66 85, which was divided between us, and our part sent to the Orphans' Home at Water Valley.

The communion service, last Sunday, was a precious season.

Our collections for all purposes will be in full.

We have had a year of peace and of some prosperity, for which we would record our thanks.

WESSON CHARGE.

DEAR DR BOSWELL: We have had 163 accessions to our church this year, and we have baptized 121 infants. Our Conference collections are nearly $70 in advance of last year, and they are paid in full. This will appear as a good work when we remind you that some of the best, or rather some of the ablest, payers have moved away this year. We are hopeful that the stewards will come up all right, too. We are endeavoring to get subscribers to the ADVOCATE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

PONCHATOULA CHARGE.

MR. EDITOR: In reporting the Ponchatoula charge, I wish to say that in some respects it has been the most difficult field of labor I have had in fourteen years of itinerant life; but if we should be spared to labor seven days more, will go to headquarters and report and receive orders. While we feel sad over meagre results, yet we know that our labor has not been in vain. I have been blessed with efficient help in my protracted services in Brothers W. W. Drake, F. M. Keen, J. H. Montgomery, and E. E. Riggs. The latter is with me now at Hammond, where we will probably hold until we start to Conference. Six conversions and four accessions to date. In summing up, we find for this year forty-three baptisms, thirty-nine accessions, assessments all in excess, which lacks only thirty-nine dollars and eighteen cents of balancing with the sum total for Conference collections for the past seven years. During that period the Minutes show for foreign missions $38, against $55 this year alone.

W. J. PORTER, P. C.

PINEVILLE, LA.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: We have just closed our last meeting, which was a great success. We have had some very fine meetings this year on our work. The good Lord has done great things for the Pineville circuit for which we are very thankful. There have been a number of conversions and about 90 additions to the church—nearly all on profession of faith. The work is in good condition, spiritually; finances coming up fairly good. We were successful in getting the very best help in the district to hold our meetings. We were assisted by the Revs. W. H. Benton, W. T. Woodward, N. J. Roberts, Geo. D. Anders, J. P. Haney, C. C. Miller, S. J. Davies, Geo. Jackson, Jno. F. Wynn, of Crowley, and our presiding elder, Rev. J. D. Harper; all doing good and efficient work by the power of the Holy Spirit.

With best wishes for you and the ADVOCATE, I am,

Yours in the work,

L. L. ROBERTS, P. C.

Resolution.

Whereas, The ministerial connection with this church of our beloved pastor, Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, is brought to a close by to-night's services; And, whereas, We have found Bro. Ramsey to be truly a man of God, of the most refined, tender, intelligent and lofty sensibilities, always master of his very best faculties, devoted and zealous in his work, his sermons being baptized with the fire which cometh from above, and showing a beauty of expression and depth of thought almost unequaled; therefore, be it Resolved, By the M. E. Church, South, at Grenada, Miss., that it is with regret that we part with Bro. Ramsey, and that we assure him of our love, our prayers, and our sympathy wherever he may go, and that we commend him to the church in his new field as a man full of the love of God, and as a preacher of very great ability and purity of character.

Despondency

Is often only a symptom of dyspepsia. In dyspepsia there is a loss of nutrition which is felt by brain as well as body; the mind grows morbid as the body loses vigor.

Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures dyspepsia and other diseases of the stomach and associated organs of digestion and nutrition. It enables the proper nutrition of the body and restores mental cheerfulness as well as physical strength.

"For about two years I suffered from a very obstinate case of dyspepsia," writes R. E. Secord, Esq., of 13 Eastern Ave., Toronto, Ontario. "I tried a great number of remedies without success. I finally lost faith in them all. I was so far gone that I could not bear any solid food on my stomach for a long time; felt melancholy and depressed. Could not sleep nor follow my occupation. Some four months ago a friend recommended your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' After a week's treatment I had derived so much benefit that I continued the medicine. I have taken three bottles and am convinced it has in my case accomplished a permanent cure. I can conscientiously recommend it to the thousands of dyspeptics throughout the land."

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for diseases of the stomach, blood, and lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets stimulate the liver."

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1901.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY.

The thirty-second session of the North Mississippi Conference met in Winona, Miss., Dec. 4, 1901, with Bishop H. C. Morrison presiding. The devotional exercises were conducted by the Bishop, who, in addition to the reading of the Scriptures and leading in prayer, delivered a short and appropriate address. This was Bishop Morrison's first visit to the Conference as president, but he was no stranger, having been with us before when he was Missionary Secretary. He had heretofore made a favorable impression on the brethren, and he was heartily welcomed as General Superintendent. He is in fine health, and conducted the business with deliberation. There was no hurrying.

The roll-call showed an unusually large number of preachers present the first day, and about the usual number of lay delegates. Visitors and brethren connected with the various Conference Boards were present in force. The doors of Winona's citizens were wide open, and Christian hospitality abounded, the members of various denominations joining with their Methodist brethren in entertaining the visitors. The preachers and others enjoyed the occasion.

Rev. T. W. Lewis was elected secretary, and as usual his work was well done. He had as assistants, Revs. J. M. Bradley, R. M. Evans, and J. R. Countiss. Rev. G. W. Bachman was elected editor of the Conference Minutes.

The following standing committees were appointed:

Public Worship: J. C. Mitchell, J. C. Park, and D. L. Sweatman.

District Conference Records: J. G. Hamilton, Dr. A. S. Yarbrough, J. M. Barnes, S. B. Myers, Q. A. Oats, J. G. McGowan, B. B. Sullivan, Dr. J. Y. Murray, R. S. Bell, J. F. Milburn.

Observance of the Sabbath: W. M. McIntosh, W. G. Sykes, R. P. Jaco, P. E. Duncan, J. W. Treadwell, D. L. Cogdell, W. C. Harris, N. W. Bouten, B. P. Fullilove.

Spiritual Interests of the Church: T. Cameron, R. G. Porter, J. C. Lowe, E. Johnson, E. P. Craddock, J. W. Ramsey, W. F. Rogers, J. A. Poe, H. P. Crowe.

Books and Periodicals: T. C. Wier, E. S. Lewis, R. A. Ellis, R. W. Jones, R. I. Allen, S. T. Harkey, J. M. Bradley, J. W. Dorman, J. T. Murrah, B. L. Smith.

Bible Cause: J. E. Cunningham, W. L. Anderson, H. M. Young, L. D. Worsham, G. W. Strickland, H. T. Gaines, R. Wilkinson, R. M. Evans, and J. H. Rogers.

Temperance: A. H. George, F. A. Critz, O. L. Savage, R. F. Cole, G. W. Gordon, S. A. Brown, W. G. Burks, A. W. Langley, T. H. Dorsey.

Conference Relations: H. C. Morehead, D. W. Babb, J. R. D. King, W. D. McCullough, J. M. Deavenport, S. L. Pope, W. A. Bowlin, K. A. Jones, J. W. Price.

On Admissions: J. W. Honnoll, R. M. Davis, W. S. Shipman, H. T. Cunningham, M. D. Fly, H. S. Spraggins, J. D Cameron, J. H. Smith, L. M. Lipscomb.

On Memoirs: Amos Kendall, J. D. Cameron, S. M. Thames, H. T. Cunningham.

Communications were received and referred as follows: From Barbee and Smith, Book Agents, Annual Report of the work of our Publishing House, referred to Committee on Books and Periodicals; from Sunday-school Secretary, referred to Conference Sunday-school Board; from NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, referred to Committee on Books and Periodicals; from Millsaps College, read and referred to Board of Education; from the Board of Missions, referred to Conference Board of Missions.

Dr. H. M. Hamil, connected with the General Sunday-school Department, was introduced, and made a short, introductory statement. In the afternoon he addressed the Conference at length in regard to Sunday-school work. Dr. J. D. Barbee, senior Book Agent, was introduced, and addressed the Conference in regard to the interests of the Publishing House. His remarks were timely and well received, and made a favorable impression.

Question 20: Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration:

The names of C. N. Terry, J. M. Hampton, W. R. Rainey, S. A. Ellis, J. W. Poston, A. P. Leech, A. P. Sage, J. B. Stone, T. G. Freeman, J. T. Cunningham, and J. D. Newsom were called, their characters passed, and referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the superannuated relation. The character of G. H. Jacobs was passed, and his name referred to the same committee.

The characters of W. S. Lagrone, J. W. Bell, J. H. Mitchell, T. W. Dye, W. T. J. Sullivan, W. W. Woollard, W. M. Young, N. G. Augustus and J. E. Thomas were examined and passed. These brethren, presiding elders, reported great spiritual prosperity in their several districts, many hundreds of conversions, and an aggregate of 2,750 additions to the church.

Rev. J. E. McCulloch, representative of the Mission Board, was introduced to the Conference, and made a short talk in behalf of the new missionary paper, Go Forward, and the recent book, Missionary Issues of the Twentieth Century, published by the Board of Missions.

The hour of adjournment having arrived, announcements were made, and Conference adjourned with benediction by Rev. J. M. Hampton.

SECOND DAY.

Conference opened at the time appointed, Bishop Morrison in the chair. The Minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved. On motion, the calling of the roll was dispensed with for the remainder of the session.

Question 1 was called: Who are received on trial? W. M. Campbell, R. A. Clark, L. W. Felder, J. H. Ingraham, R. P. Neblett, J. A. Goad, R. W. Evans, E. W. Jones, Thos. R. Brownlee, coming properly recommended, and having passed a satisfactory examination, and having been approved by the Committee on Admissions, were received on trial.

A communication from Grenada College was presented and referred to the Conference Board of Education.

Question 20 was resumed, and the characters of the following members were passed: E. H. Rook, S. M. Thames, D. M. Geddle, W. M. McIntosh, J. W. Malone, W. S. Harrison, J. H. Rogers, J. M. Huggin, C. H. Pittman.

Question 2. Who remain on trial? J. G. Huggin, A. A. Martin, W. G. Harbin, H. W. Whitnell, J. A. Hall, V. C. Curtis, J. B. Randolph, T. J. Wilson, B. C. Trigg, character passed, and having stood an approved examination, were continued on trial.

Rev. H. C. Edmundson, a transfer from the White River Conference, and Rev. G. D. French, District Superintendent of the American Bible Society, were introduced.

A communication from the Epworth League Board and one from the Board of Education were presented, and, without reading, were referred to the proper committees.

Question 4. Who are admitted into full connection? W. E. M. Brogan, T. H. Porter, John T. Lewis, Wm. D. Pinson, R. S. Lawson, were passed, and, having answered the disciplinary questions in open Conference, were received into full connection.

Question 7. Who are the deacons of one year? J. H. Holder, E. C. Sullivan, W. R. Williams, E. A. Tucker. J. R. Wilson, not having been before the Committee of Examination, was continued in this class.

On motion, a committee of five was appointed to whom all memorials to the General Conference shall be referred: Amos Kendall, W. B. Murrah, J. W. Boswell, R. M. Standifer, and J. W. Honnoll.

Question 12. What traveling preachers are elected elders? W. F. Rogers passed in character, and having stood an approved examination, was elected elder. W. J. Burt not having been before the committee, remains in this class. Richard Wilkinson, of this class, is already an elder.

Question 20 resumed. J. C. Park, H. T. Cunningham, E. Johnson, R. I. Allen, R. A. Burroughs, B. B. Sullivan, W. L. Anderson, W. D. McCullough, W. C. Harris, W. C. Lester, G. W. Bachman, were passed.

Rev. G. D. French addressed the Conference in behalf of the Bible cause.

Question 20 again resumed. J. H. Smith, J. H. Shumaker, G. W. Gordon, R. E. Duke, T. C. Wier, R. H. B. Gladney, H. M. Young, J. W. Treadwell, J. C. Lowe, J. M. Deavenport, B. P. Patterson, W. B. Murrah, T. W. Lewis, E. P. Craddock, P. E. Duncan, E. S. Lewis, J. D. Cameron, R. A. Meek, J. M. Wyatt, J. M. Barnes, J. H. Bass, R. M. Evans, T. L. Foster, S. L. Pope, W. A. Clarke, J. A. Randolph, J. A. Leech, W. A. Bowlin, Q. A. Oats, R. O. Brown, J. Ritchie, S. A. Brown, J. W. Ramsey, K. M. Harrison, H. C. Morehead, J. W. Raper, J. A. Bowen, H. S. Spraggins, H. T. Gaines, D. C. Foust, A. J. Foster, J. M. Bradley, were examined and passed. W. D. Burroughs passed, and his name was referred to Committee on Conference Relations for the superannuated relation. R. A. Tucker, K. A. Jones and B. P. Fullilove were examined and passed.

Chas. A. Porter, a local preacher, having withdrawn from the ministry and surrendered his ordination papers, they were deposited with the Conference.

On motion, the time for election of delegates was fixed for to-morrow, immediately after the reception of the class into full connection, which class will be received at 10:30 A. M.

THIRD DAY—MORNING.

Conference met at the hour appointed, Bishop Morrison presiding. The Minutes of yesterday's session were read, and, after slight correction, approved.

S. Q. Bass, a local preacher, appealed from the action of the Quarterly Conference of Corinth station. The appeal was presented by Rev. T. W. Dye, who stated the action of the Quarterly Conference, and the grounds of the appeal. The appeal was allowed, and the following committee was appointed to try the appeal, viz.: K. A. Jones, J. M. Wyatt, D. L. Cogdell, G. W. Gordon, D. W. Babb, J. W. Anderson, Amos Kendall, J. T. Murrah, and L. M. Lipscomb.

Question 20 was resumed. J. W. Dorman, M. D. Fly, J. A. Poe, J. W. Anderson, R. M. Davis, A. W. Langley, J. W. Boswell, S. B. Myers, T. H. Dorsey, J. T. Murrah, J. J. Garner, J. W. Price, R. M. Standifer, D. L. Cogdell, J. J. Brooks, J. W. Honnoll, H. P. Crowe, J. M. Moose and J. R. Countiss were examined and passed.

Question 10. What local preachers are elected deacons? W. N. Duncan, Geo. G. Evans, Thos. E. Marshall and J. D. Boggs were elected.

H. C. Lewis, from the M. E. Church, having been recommended by the Durant District Conference, was recognized as a local deacon in our church.

Question 14. What local preachers are elected elders? None.

Joseph H. Ingraham, from the Free Methodist Church, coming as an elder, was recognized as an elder in our church.

Question 1 was resumed. W. C. Carlisle, coming properly recommended from the Free Methodist Church, was received into full connection after taking our ordination vows, and certifying his agreement with us in doctrine and discipline.

Question 5. Who are re-admitted? E. E. Langford, coming properly recommended, was re-admitted.

The names of W. J. Burt and K. M. Harrison were referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the superannuated relation.

The hour of the day having arrived, the Conference proceeded to the election of delegates to the General Conference. J. W. Dorman and R. Wilkinson were appointed tellers for the clerical body, and J. R. Bingham and W. G. Sykes for the laity. On motion, the two members receiving the highest number of votes on any ballot next to the principals were declared to be the alternates, both for clerical and lay members.

On first ballot for lay delegates Dr. R. W. Jones and J. R. Bingham were elected. The first ballot for clerical delegates resulted in the election of J. W. Boswell and W. B. Murrah.

The second ballot for lay delegate there was no election. On third ballot F. A. Critz was elected.

The second ballot for clerical delegate was taken, but, for lack of time, the count was not announced.

Question 19. What preachers have died during the past year? J. F. Evans, J. S. Oakley, and M. H. Honnoll.

The report of the Orphans' Home Board was read and received, and J. A. Bowen and J. B. Streater were re-elected as managers.

On motion, 10 A. M. to-morrow was declared the order of the day for memorial service.

A resolution by E. A. Tucker, calling for a more equitable assessment on the districts for the various benevolences, was referred to the several Conference Boards for consideration.

Dr. J. D. Hammond, Secretary of General Board of Education, was introduced.

Conference was dismissed, after moving to adjourn to meet at 3 P. M., with benediction by Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan.

THIRD DAY—AFTERNOON.

Conference met pursuant to order, with Dr. J. W. Price in the chair by appointment of Bishop Morrison. Opening prayer by Jas. Porter.

Minutes of the morning session were read and approved. Dr. J. D. Hammond addressed the Conference at length in behalf of the work of Christian education.

At the close of the address Conference adjourned.

FOURTH DAY.

Conference convened at the appointed hour, with Bishop Morrison in the chair. Religious services were conducted by Rev. Amos Kendall. The Minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

The second ballot for clerical delegates was announced. No election. The action by which the tellers were to retire to count the vote was reconsidered, and the election was completed in open Conference.

The third ballot for clerical and the fourth ballot for lay delegates were ordered. There was no election. On the fourth ballot W. T. J. Sullivan and John H. Mitchell were elected clerical delegates. Fifth ballot for lay delegate there was no election. On the sixth ballot Dr. W. G. Sykes was elected, thus completing the election.

Under the action of the Conference, T. W. Lewis and T. W. Dye were declared the clerical, and Dr. J. Y. Murray and M. V. Connell, the lay alternates.

The order of the day having arrived, Conference proceeded with the memorial services. W. R. Williams read a memoir of M. H. Honnoll, Dr. J. D. Cameron of J. S. Oakley, and J. T. Cunningham of J. F. Evans. These memoirs were followed by loving tributes from many brethren. The report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

The Joint Board of Finance called for a collection for two of the claimants on the Conference Fund, and received about $215. Bishop Morrison called for a collection for a needy preacher, without calling his name, and received about $60.

The report of the Epworth League Board was presented, and read by C. H. Pittman, and, after discussion, was adopted.

Holly Springs and Tupelo were nominated as place for next session of the Conference. After consultation, Holly Springs was withdrawn, and Tupelo was unanimously selected.

The Committee on Appeal of S. Q. Bass reported. The action of the Quarterly Conference in expelling the appellant from the ministry and membership of the church was affirmed.

The report of the statistical secretary was read.

W. S. Harrison was referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the superannuated relation. Conference adjourned with benediction by J. M. Hampton.

FIFTH DAY—MONDAY MORNING.

Conference opened at 9 o'clock, Bishop Morrison presiding. Religious exercises conducted by G. W. Gordon. Minutes of Saturday's session were read and approved. W. M. Campbell was elected to deacon's orders. The names of W. J. O'Bryant and Amos Kendall and J. W. Honnoll were referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the superannuated relation.

Committee on Sabbath Observance reported through the chairman, W. M. McIntosh. The report was adopted.

The report of Sunday-school Board was read by R. G. Porter, and after amendment providing for an agent, and nominating G. W. Bachman for the place, was adopted.

Report of Committee on Books and Periodicals was read and adopted.

Report of Board of Education was read, and, after slight amendment, was adopted.

Committee on Memorials to General Conference was presented and read by Dr. W. B. Murrah, and, after amendment, was adopted.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on Temperance was read by A. H. George, and adopted. Report No. 2 was presented and adopted. This report embodied a resolution highly complimentary to Rev. R. Wilkinson for his work in securing prohibition in Monroe county.

The report of Joint Board of Finance was read, and the distribution of funds made to the various claimants. The report was adopted.

Committee on District Conference Records was read and adopted.

On motion, Conference adjourned to meet this evening at 7:20 P. M.

FIFTH DAY—EVENING SESSION.

Conference opened at 7:30 P. M., Bishop Morrison presiding. The Minutes of the morning were read and approved.

Conference took a short recess, and the body convened in capacity of Ministerial Relief Association, with Rev. J. D. Cameron in the chair. Report of secretary and treasurer was read, showing that on Assessment No. 17 the amount of $328 had been received, and appropriated to Mrs. J. S. Oakley.

This is a worthy and much-needed association, and yields timely help to the widows and orphans of a deceased member. The present officers—Dr. J. D. Cameron, president, and J. C. Park, secretary and treasurer—were elected for the ensuing year. New members were called for, and twenty-four names were enrolled.

Conference business was resumed, and the report from the Board of Missions was presented and read by Rev. J. H. Shumaker.

The report of the Board of Church Extension was presented and read by J. R. Bingham and W. C. Harris.

Resolutions of thanks to the citizens of Winona for their hospitality, the various churches and railroads, to the pastor, Rev. J. C. Park, and to Miss Lonie Dunstan, who kindly acted as postmistress for the Conference, and to the Winona Democrat and Times for publishing Conference proceedings in their daily issues.

The report of the Committee on Spiritual Interests of the Church was read by A. H. George, and adopted.

The Bishop announced the following brethren as having been received by transfer: A. H. Williams, H. C. Edmundson, and L. W. Cain.

The report of the Committee on the Bible Cause was read by R. M. Evans, and adopted.

On motion, it was resolved that, after the reading and approval of the Minutes of the evening session, and answering Question 46, the Conference adjourn.

SUNDAY AT CONFERENCE.

Sunday last at Winona was a gloomy day. It was dark, and threatening rain well-nigh all the time, and late in the afternoon the rain began to come down. At the close of the evening service the streets were flooded. Notwithstanding, great crowds attended public worship, especially at the Methodist Church, which is always the center of attraction on Conference occasions.

At nine o'clock A. M there was love-feast, conducted by Rev. Jas. A. Bowen, who seems specially endowed by nature and grace for such a service. He throws into it his whole soul. The meeting was largely attended and richly enjoyed.

At eleven o'clock Bishop Morrison preached to a crowded house. He was at his best, and we have not seen an audience for a long time so well pleased. The sermon afforded food for thought, and the hearts of the people were greatly moved. Bishop Morrison greatly endeared himself to the Conference. He is accompanied on this trip South by his wife, who adds pleasure to every social circle she enters.

In the morning Dr. W. B. Murrah preached at the Presbyterian Church, and Dr. Howard Taylor at the Baptist. Dr. Murrah had a fair audience in size, and delivered a strong and thoughtful discourse on St. Peter's words, "Unto you, therefore, which believe, he is precious."

In the afternoon there was a children's service at the Baptist Church, and a service for ladies only at the Presbyterian Church. There was preaching also at the same hour at the Methodist Church, followed by the ordination of an elder. Other services were held, but of them we heard no report.

In the evening we attended our church, where our old friend and Conference class-mate, Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, preached, it seemed to us, with as much energy and freshness as at any time in his life. There are no indications of age in his thoughts or manner of expression, and yet, according to the almanac, he has been in the itinerancy forty-two years. We stood side by side before Bishop Andrew in November, 1859 and answered the disciplinary questions which were asked then on being received on trial, instead of at the end of two years' probation. The Doctor's sermon was followed by the Lord's Supper, administered in a solemn and impressive way by Rev. H. C. Morehead. The service was delightful and profitable in every way.

Besides the Sunday services, there was much good preaching. We were fortunate in hearing Rev. Amos Kendall, Rev. H. P. Crowe, Rev. Richard Wilkinson, and Dr. J. D. Barbee—all of whom preached the Word, in which was the true ring of the gospel. The people are still ready to hear the gospel.

PERSONAL.

First Church, Jackson, Miss.—Rev. W. C. Black, pastor—has received a hundred and thirty-five members during the year.

Mr. W. F. Norseworthy, of Jackson, La., would be pleased to correspond with a young man who understands printing, and desires to attend Centenary College.

The manager of the ADVOCATE hereby extends thanks, and makes acknowledgment of the receipt of a letter from an unknown friend, containing twenty dollars in currency. The same will be applied, as we understand directions, $10 to foreign missions and $10 to the Bible Society.

Mrs. M C. Huntley, mother of Rev. W. H Huntley, died at her home in LaGrange, Ga., on the morning of Dec. 2. Her two sons and daughter attended her obsequies, joined by a loving community, at the First Methodist Church. She was the oldest member of that congregation, for forty years a Sunday-school teacher, teaching childrens' children. Bro. LaPrade was once her pastor, and, with the brethren of the Mississippi Conference, will give sympathy and prayer to a son who has lost for a while the best of mothers.

Home Circle.

The Confederate's Gentleman.

"Let me hear you say that again, that's all! I'll show you whether I'm a gentleman or not!"

"How!"

The boys started, in great surprise. The old soldier who had uttered the quiet word had come upon the boys, on their road home from school, but they were shouting in such angry tones that they heard nothing except their own voices. There was a big quarrel between Edwin Brandon and Cecil Hayes; they explained it in tones still loud enough to be heard in the adjoining county, to Major Drury, as he walked with them.

The Major was a visitor in their neighborhood, and the object of much interest and speculation among the boys. They had heard great stories from certain kinsfolk of his about his life as a Confederate soldier, and there was not a boy in the neighborhood who was not on tiptoe to get some of those stories from his own lips. But to-day they were to hear a story of a different kind.

"How did you say you were going to prove yourself a gentleman, my boy?"

Edwin's cause of complaint somehow dwindled under the glance of those merry, kindly old eyes.

"What ought a fellow to do when another says he isn't?" the boy asked.

The old Confederate's face brightened. "I'll tell you," he said, "of how a man I knew once proved himself a gentleman in about three minutes and a half."

The boys were all attention; this was not to be a war story apparently, but the old soldier's voice had a fine ring to it.

"It was just after the war, boys, and I had been sent North on business, to look after some affairs connected with re-establishing express lines. I had a letter of introduction to a rich man in the city, and when I presented it, he asked me to dine with him.

"I had no idea that he was asking me to anything but a family dinner, and I went in the same suit of clothes that I had traveled in; but if I had been told I was to meet the Prince of Wales, I could have done nothing else, for it was the only suit of clothes I had in the world. My Confederate gray was hanging in rags when I got home from Appomattox, and my mother went to her loom and took out a web of home-made woolen jean, cut out a suit of clothes, and made them for me herself.

"The wool had been taken from the backs of our own sheep; carded, spun and woven in the farmhouse, and colored in the plantation dye pot. Can you imagine how the young rustic looked when he rang the door bell of the stylish city mansion, and was ushered in by a serving man in spotless black, low cut vest and spike-tail coat?

"I saw at once that it was a dinner party, but my back was up, and I intended to see the thing through. It struck me as a little odd that the host was not present to receive me, but the cordiality of his wife left me nothing to wish for, and if her eyes rested a single instant on my home made jeans, I could not detect it.

"In about three minutes and a half the master of the house stepped into the room and gave me the heartiest welcome a man could ask.

"Boys, he had on a business suit of brown tweeds! The ladies' shoulders were gleaming white above their evening dresses, and the men all looked like undertakers in their solemn black, but my host had somehow caught sight of me as I ran up his steps, and had made up his mind that the young Confederate should not be the only man in working clothes. I doubt if he had ever made as rapid a toilette before in his life!

"They were all kind and friendly to me, and made me talk about my great captains, Lee and Jackson and Stuart and the rest. But I give you my word, every time I looked at that brown coat at the end of the table, something like a sob gripped me at the throat, and I wanted to speak out and say that there wasn't a finer gentleman in Dixie than this Yankee millionaire!" — Sunday-School Visitor.

R·I·P·A·N·S

One said I had chronic dyspepsia, others claimed I was suffering with nervousness and kidney trouble. The last doctor told mother to take me away to the country. I could not eat nor sleep. My aunt, where I was staying, persuaded me to try Ripans Tabules. The fifth 5 cent box relieved me a little. I was so glad I kept on taking them. In all I had taken nine boxes. God bless Ripans Tabules! May they be spread abroad to those that are afflicted as I was. They have done for me what doctors could not do.

A Little Bird Told Him.

Little Mrs Bird built her nest in the apple-tree near the kitchen door, and before her children were half grown, Mr. Thomas Cat ate them every one. Mrs. Bird fluttered among the leaves of the apple-tree and cried for a whole day. Then she went down into the corner of the orchard, and built another nest. But Master Tommie Spratt found it, and took all the eggs away. Mrs Bird cried over the empty nest all day. Then she went far, far away into the woods, and built another in a thorn tree.

One morning, while she was sitting peacefully on her eggs in the nest in the thorn-tree, she heard footsteps on the stones below. She looked over the edge of the nest with startled eyes. At first she did not know whether to be afraid or not The creature she saw had on a very short dress, but it also wore a small, round straw hat and short hair. Mrs. Bird did not know whether it was a girl or a boy. Girls were harmless creatures, she knew. Suddenly the creature jumped over a log, and whopped wildly.

"Oh me! oh me! It is a boy!" shrieked poor Mrs. Bird. She sprang from the nest and darted through the branches around and around her nest, screaming and scolding furiously.

Foolish Mrs. Bird! Why, almost any boy in the world would have been sure, from the noise she made, that she had a nest hidden there But this boy did not know it. He was a very young boy, far too young to be wandering in the woods alone. To tell the truth, he had run away, and, although he did not know it, he was quite lost.

The boy walked on past the tree, and, after a little, Mrs. Bird lost sight of him, and settled quietly down again. After a long time she heard a queer noise, and, peeping over the edge of the nest, she saw the boy coming back again. His hat was gone, his feet were covered with mud, his hands and face scratched with briars, and he had discovered that he was lost, and was sobbing bitterly He was so tired and blinded with crying that he tottered as he walked, and, when he reached the tree where Mrs Bird had her nest, he dropped in a weary, muddy little heap on the dead leaves, and fell asleep.

Mrs. Bird screamed and scolded and darted about the tree, swooping so low that her wings almost brushed the boy's head, but he did not hear her.

Presently poor, distracted Mrs. Bird heard other strange sounds. She heard voices calling, "Harold! Harold! Harold!" and the echoes caught up the words, and tossed them back and forth until the trees and rocks seemed to be crying, "Harold! Harold!" too.

But Harold did not hear. He was too sound asleep.

Soon two figures appeared in the distance.

"More boys! more boys!" shrieked Mrs. Bird. "Oh, my poor eggs! What shall I do?"

They were very large boys. We should have called them men, but Mrs. Bird did not know the difference. She was afraid of anything that wore trousers and short hair, and a small, round straw hat.

Suddenly one of the men stopped, and caught the other by the arm.

"Listen, Charlie!" he cried. "Do you hear that bird scolding down yonder in the thicket?"

"Yes. What of it?" said the other.

"Something has disturbed her. It may be the boy. Let us see"

"P-papa, how d-did you know where I was?" asked Harold, sleepily, when he awoke a moment later to find himself in his father's arms.

"Oh! a little bird told me," answered papa, laughing.—Sunday School Times.

What Ruth Had.

"Oh, there's that Ruth Knolls and her brother again! Do you know, Miss Merton, she is just awfully dull in school, and we girls laugh at her so much. She hasn't a particle of brilliancy."

Viva chatted this speech out as she walked along the street beside Miss Merton.

"She has something far better than brilliancy," said Miss Merton.

"What!" said Viva, her cheeks flushing uncomfortably; for she felt that she had made a mistake, and she was very anxious to stand well in Miss Merton's opinion.

"She has a courteous manner. That is a grace that is very great, but far too rare. I know Ruth quite well, and her kindness and courtesy are unfailing in company or at home. She is going to grow into a lovely womanhood."

"I am sorry I spoke so," said Viva. "I really don't know anything about her except that she stumbles so dreadfully in her lessons."

"No doubt she is very sorry about it. It is a fine gift to be quick and bright in understanding things; but you know, my dear, that it is far more important to be kind-hearted and gentle. When you go out in the world no one will ever ask or know whether you got good grades in algebra and Latin. If you have done your best, it is wrought into you whether your best is very good or only mediocre. But be sure of this: Every one who meets you will know, without putting you through an examination, whether you are a gentlewoman or not. It isn't practical to quote Greek or discuss psychology or read Shakespeare with every one you meet; but you can always speak kindly and listen courteously, and quietly look out for the opportunity to do the little deeds of kindness that make our lives so much more worth living."—The Union Signal.

The Humming-Bird.

In St. Nicholas, for October, Henry Hales writes of the ruby-throated humming-bird.

The humming-bird builds on the upper side of a branch, a branch generally about the size of the nest. The nest is beautifully felted with fine white vegetable down, and studded on the outside with fine lichens and minute specks of bark like the branch itself.

They do not seem to retire to secluded places to build; they are as eccentric in their choice of a nesting-place as in their nature and habits Some suppose their nests are near the gardens or vines they visit; but that is not often the case. A few magic vibrations of the wings, and they are far away in a few seconds.

The last nest I found was on the outer end of a branch of silver poplar that hung over a public road; every carriage-top that passed under it was within a few feet of the nest—the last place in the world where I should have expected to find such a nest. I should not have seen it except that I was accidentally looking up into the tree, and I saw, protruding over the side of the nest, the long, fine bill that happened just then to stir. The nest might have been passed hundreds of times, and been taken for a small knot, unless thus betrayed.

These birds lay but two eggs—tiny white morsels. The young birds, when first hatched, are curious little things, and feed by inserting their bills in the mouths and throats of their parents. As the food of the parents is composed of nectar and fine insects, it is easily made ready for the little one's tiny stomachs.—Presbyterian.

The Maple's Visitor.

"Whew!" whistled the birch, with a shiver that shook off a great handful of leaves. "Winter is coming!"

"Why should you sigh over that?" said the jolly, rosy maple. "The garden will be so clean and white—and then the icicles! How they will sparkle on the tips of our fingers! You know they are ever so much brighter than these gold and crimson leaves that everybody likes so well."

"But the robins will be gone," sighed the birch shaking her head, "and the phœbes and bluebirds!"

"Never mind; we shall have plenty of company," said the maple, and just at that moment a squirrel ran along her branches, and, peeping into a hole in her trunk, asked if he might come in.

"Certainly," said the maple. "Stay all Winter if you like."

The squirrel seemed pleased with the invitation, so he stored in the maple's spare room all his baggage, which consisted of one hickory nut. He soon brought another, however, and another and another, till the room was almost full. Then he curled himself up comfortably in the warmest corner.

"I told you we should have company," said the maple. "Now I have some one to talk to on dull Winter days."

And sure enough, in stormy weather we always hear her rattling her branches and talking very fast in her fashion. But I am afraid that the squirrel is not a good listener, for to tell the truth, he is sound asleep.—Youth's Companion.

COLD OR HOT.

Cold or hot, my friend? Feel your spiritual pulse and see. Put the Bible thermometer under your tongue. Search your heart and see how much love for Christ is left there. If, after such an honest examination, you find that the temperature has run low, very low—what then? Should you quit the church and throw up your Christian profession? No! a thousand times no! The Holy Spirit's message to you is, "Be zealous, therefore, and repent." The only way to repent of sin is to quit it. The only way to warm a chilled frame is not to throw yourself into a snow bank, but to hasten to the fire. Come back to a deserted Savior! Instead of erasing your blurred name from the church registry, seek a reconversion.

Simon Peter's best work was done after he was reconverted. Do not stop with lamenting your neglect of the place of prayer. Open again the door of devotion, and go in and throw yourself down at the Master's feet, and cry out, "I have sinned; I am no more worthy to be called thy servant." Set up again your altar, and on it lay the sacrifice of a contrite heart. At the earliest moment lay hold of some blood-stirring Christian work; it will warm you up. It may take some time to get the blood into full, free circulation again, and to recover your lost ground and lost health; but when you do get a fresh tide of Christ's love pouring into your heart, and a fresh glow of his likeness on your countenance, you will feel as Lazarus must have felt when he shook off the grave clothes and leaped into life again.—T. L. Cuyler, D. D.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

GEORGE KENDALL was born May 2, 1835, and died at his home in Rankin county, Miss., May 31, 1901. He was a son of the Rev. Louis Kendall, once a useful member of the Mississippi Conference. Jan. 2, 1879, Bro. Kendall was married to Caroline L. Wimberly, with whom he lived happily until his death. To them were born nine children—eight girls and one boy. Bro. Kendall was for many years a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South. He was a faithful, unassuming Christian. In life he lived at peace with all men, filling his station in life humbly, yet faithfully. His neighbors respected him as a good, honest, upright man. Prior to his death he was sick for many months—a victim of that insidious disease, consumption. He expressed himself as being prepared to meet the last enemy, and when the end came he "feared no evil." May comforting grace abound unto the bereaved widow and children! PAUL D. HARDIN.

MARY ELIZABETH ANDREWS was born in Texas, July 22, 1873. Dec. 20, 1899, she was married at Holly Springs, Miss., to Rev. Joseph R. Wilson, of the North Mississippi Conference. After this happy union had lasted less than two years, she passed away at Coffeeville, Miss., at 3:15 A. M., Oct. 7, 1901. Mrs. Wilson was a woman of great amiability of character. She was likewise greatly interested in her husband's work. Her lovely disposition and this interest in her husband's work combined to make her a model wife. Her goodness, gentleness, and interest in her church work gave her rare adaptability to the varied and often difficult surroundings of a pastor's wife. It seemed to the writer that there could have been no more congenial and suitable marriage than that ended by the sad death of Lizzie Andrews Wilson. Amiable, congenial, devoted to each other, and wholly given to a united service of God and the church, they appeared to the observer a merried pair whose earthly union should only terminate after a long continuance. The short duration and tragic ending of such a suitable and beautiful union is a deep and puzzling mystery, for whose ultimate solution faith must look up through clouds and darkness to the loving heart of God. After going through a long series of Summer revival meetings with her husband, she was taken with fever Sept. 15, and after three weeks of severe illness and suffering she entered into rest Oct. 7, 1901. Her useful, beautiful young life is ended here. It is well with her. She neither needs nor claims our sympathy. But our hearts go out in grief and sympathy for our noble and afflicted brother in his irreparable and abiding loss. May God bless and keep him in his dark trial! N. G. AUGUSTUS.

WILLIAM GRIMES was born in Plymouth, Washington county, N. C., Oct. 4, 1811, and on Jan. 1, 1831, he came to Louisiana on horseback, and for some years resided in Alexandria, where he conducted a mercantile business. In 1841 he bought Grimes Bluff, on Red river, in Avoyelles parish, where he lived until God called him home to a brighter world. As a business man, Bro. Grimes was very successful, accumulating considerable property; as a citizen, he was honored by all who knew him; as a friend and neighbor, he was like the Good Samaritan, helping those on the way, making for himself friends among the rich and poor alike. So kind was he to others that some of his old servants remained with him until death. These were kindly remembered while closing up his business in his last days. As a Christian, those who knew him best testify to his unfaltering zeal and courage in the Master's cause. He was untiring in his efforts to build up the church of God, which he loved and served almost all of his life, giving his time and means for its advancement. We can say of him (what seems to us the grandest monument that could be erected to anyone's memory), He was a good man. While it was our privilege to know him only the last three years of his life, we can say of a truth, He was the preacher's friend. His home was always open to the weary itinerant. In 1839 Bro. Grimes was married to Mrs. Tilman Lanier (nee Sarah Ellis), who, for fourteen years, has been basking in the sunlight of God's love, waiting at the beautiful gate to welcome home the one she loved. There remain on earth three children, sixteen grandchildren, six great-grandchildren, and a host of friends and relatives, to whom we extend our sympathy and prayers. L. L. ROBERTS.

LEVY A. MILLER, a faithful soldier, laid aside his armor at De Ridder, Calcasieu parish, La. He was born in Marion district, S. C., Sept. 18, 1830, and died Nov. 9, 1901. He was twice married; first to Miss Lydia M. Jones, by whom were born to him eleven children. She and two of them preceded him to the Elen of rest. His second marriage was to Miss Martha Harred, who still lives to mourn his loss with nine of his children, seven brothers and sisters, and a host of friends and kindred. Bro. Miller joined the M. E. Church, South, Sept. 28, 1849, under the preaching of Thomas A. Beaty, while the hymn was being sung, "And let the warfare be over," and lived not only an honorable, but a useful one, serving as Sunday-school superintendent for fifteen years, or more; as steward, president of the Board of Directors, and other prominent offices. Oh, how we miss him; but the world is better because of his hallowed life.

J. S. RUTLEDGE.

The Dry Creek (La.) Sunday-school, over which he presided so long, adopted suitable resolutions presented by a committee composed of J. S. Rutledge, J. A. Grace, and Miss L. Kent, which resolutions were recorded in the Minute Book of the school. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

J. S. RUTLEDGE, Pastor.

Whereas, The All-wise has seen fit to remove from our midst Bro. Levi A. Miller, our old and highly esteemed superintendent for fifteen years, or more, and while we shall miss his wise counsel, we will try to emulate his example; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Dry Creek Sunday-school, will kindly remember him, and that we will place resolutions upon the Minute Book of our Sunday-school, and send a copy of same to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

WHAT WOMEN NEED.

The work and worry that attends the life of the average woman are so trying on the system that at times it seems impossible to stand up under the strain. She becomes nervous, irritable and cross, and has an indescribable feeling of heavy-heartedness that seems impossible to bear. It is a generally "run-down" condition that causes this feeling, and neglect at such times brings on many forms of chronic disease. A general tonic is what is needed.

G. F. P. IS JUST SUCH A TONIC.

It is a tonic that was intended to reach just such cases. It builds up the system of woman as no other medicine can do. That it reaches such cases as described above is proven over and over by the thousands of grateful letters received from women who have been relieved of distress and cured of disease by its use, even after all other means had proven failures. G. F. P. will relieve all catarrhal conditions of the womb and ovaries and acts as a general tonic on the genital organs of woman. Don't delay in commencing the use of this greatest of all Female Tonics. Get a bottle to-day. Price $1.00.

The Christmas Dinner.

In spite of the fact that the word dyspepsia means literally bad cook, it will not be fair for many to lay the blame on the cook if they begin the Christmas Dinner with little appetite and end it with distress or nausea. It may not be fair for any to do that—let us hope so for the sake of the cook! The disease dyspepsia indicates a bad stomach, that is a weak stomach, rather than a bad cook, and for a weak stomach there is nothing else equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. It gives the stomach vigor and tone, cures dyspepsia, creates appetite, and makes eating the pleasure it should be.

The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine.

The article in the December issue of The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine that is likely to attract the widest attention is a "Famous Hymn Writer" contribution, dealing with the author of "Nearer, My God, to Thee." It contains much fresh information, obtained directly from her London friends, and establishes a connection with the Mississippi Valley. Mrs. Adams' uncle, Richard Flower, was one of the Albion settlers in Southern Illinois, where he died forty years ago. The illustrations reproduce family photographs specially loaned for the purpose.

The opening article, entitled "McKendree's Legacy to the West," by James Main Dixon, brings together Charles Dickens, the patriot Hooker, Abraham Lincoln of the Springfield days, Peter Cartwright, and the excellent Bishop, and makes a strong appeal for the worthy perpetuation of his cherished educational enterprise.

The Rev. Chas. F. Wimberly contributes a bright and readable description of "The Crescent City," accompanied by illustrations of New Orleans.

"Mrs. Ward on the Problem of Italy," by J T. D., is an exhaustive discussion of that writer's "Eleanor." The illustrations include portraits of leading Italians from Cavour to Crispi.

The Christmas features are not confined to a varied, attractive and profusely decorated Home Circle. A translation in verse, by May Simonds, of Fanoois Coppee's "The Star of the Shepherds," has marginal illustrations by Maud Walker, and a fine portrait of the great French academician.

Fiction is represented by H. M. Pinckney's "Lois," a Colorado story, and the second installment of Susie Bonabelle Wight's "Why Not?—A Georgia Love Story."

The thirty-fourth chapter of the "Illustrated History of Methodism" is a complementary survey of the church's missionary enterprises, entitled "From the Yellow Sea to the Baltic." Among the departments, "Book Reviews" has the most prominence.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY.

The eighty-eighth session of the Mississippi Annual Conference was called to order at 9 o'clock by Bishop H. C. Morrison, who conducted the religious exercises.

The daily sessions were held in the opera house, as the seating capacity of the church was found to be insufficient.

The roll was called by the secretary of the last Conference, Rev. J. A. B. Jones. One hundred and twenty-four preachers answered to their names.

Rev. J. A. B. Jones, after feeling reference to his long experience as assistant secretary of the Conference and as the secretary of the last Conference, asked to be excused from further service.

Revs. A. F. Watkins and T. W. Adams were placed in nomination, and Rev. A. F. Watkins was elected.

The following were appointed assistant secretaries: H. G. Hawkins, George H Galloway, M. L. Burton, G S. Harmon, H. M. Ellis.

The following standing committees were announced:

Public Worship: B. F Jones, J W. Chambers, I Hibert.

Memoirs: J. G. Cammack, J. A. B. Jones, T. B. Cottrell, J. M. Weems, D. C. Langford, H. W. Featherstun, J. P. Drake.

State of the Church: L Carloy, F. A. Grimes, N. B Harmon, F B Ormond, R S. Gale, D. Scarborough, J. W. Chambers.

Bible Cause: W. J. Ferguson, E. A. Enochs, G. M. Hull, D. P. Bradford, P. L Blackwell, T. J. O'Neil, R. Bradley.

Sabbath Observance: W. J. Bell, W. L. C. Hunniontt, J. D. Ellis, H. Mellard, W. M. Womack, W. W. Cammack, I. L. Peebles.

Publishing Interests: H. R. Singleton, J. E. Carpenter, R L. Bennett, R. H. Barr, W. H. Saunders, B S. Rayner, C. W. Crisler.

District Conference Records: M. M. Black, J. R. Jones, J. C. Cavett, S. B. Watts, M. L White, L. E. Alford, H. C. Brown.

Conference Relations: V. D Skipper, A. D. Miller, W. C. Black, L. B. Brown, W. D. Dominick, J. M. Morse, C. McDonald.

Temperance: H. L. Nortoo, T. W. Sullivan, H. J. Moore, T. P. Bell, J. A. Lindsey, J. S. Parker, J. T. Leggett.

The hours for the daily session were fixed at 8:30 A. M. for meeting, and adjournment at 11:30 A M.

Reports were read and referred to appropriate committees on missions and on church extension. These reports showed a highly gratifying advance along this line of work.

The following connectional officers were introduced to the Conference: Rev. Drs. P. H. Whisner, secretary of the Board of Church Extension; J. D. Barbee, agent of the Publishing House; G. D. French, agent of the American Bible Society; W. R. Lambuth, Missionary Secretary; H. M. DuBose, editor Epworth Era; E. E. Hoss, editor of Nashville Christian Advocate.

The report of the agents of the Publishing House was read and referred.

Dr. E. E. Hoss addressed the Conference in the interest of the Nashville Christian Advocate.

The twentieth question was called, "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" The names of the following were called, they were passed in examination of character, and were referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the superannuated relation: J. A. Vance, R. A. Sibley, L. P. Meador, R. B. Downer, J. W. Harmon, H. R. Caldwell, J. H. Evans, D. G. W. Ellis, T. W. Brown, W. W. Hurst, J. H. Holland, W. G. Backus, P. Howard.

Dr. G. D. French addressed the Conference in the interest of the American Bible Society.

Dr. J. W. Boswell, editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, was introduced to the Conference.

After the usual announcement of committees the Conference adjourned for the day.

SECOND DAY.

Conference was opened at 8:30 o'clock, Dr. P. H. Whisner conducting the devotional exercises.

The secretary read the Minutes of yesterday, and several communications were received from different Boards and referred to the proper committees.

The Bishop resumed the call of the twentieth question, "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" and the following ministers were called and made their reports:

Rev. E. H. Monoger, presiding elder of the Vicksburg district, made his report, showing that about 300 accessions to churches in his district; that all the pastors have been faithful in their work, and that his district was in a prosperous condition, some churches having been built, and finances in advance of last year.

Rev. T. B. Holloman, of the Jackson district, reported in his district fourteen pastoral charges, embracing four counties, and a gain in membership of about 700; eight new churches built and three new parsonages, with considerable improvement on the district parsonage at Jackson. Finances in advance of last year, and $800 collected on the Twentieth Century Fund for education.

Rev. T. L. Mellen, of the Forest district, reported 1 300 accessions this year in his district, with all foreign, domestic and Conference claimants' assessments paid in full; two new churches built, and improvement along all lines.

The presiding elder of the Seashore district, Rev. W. W. Simmons, made the banner report, with all assessments paid in full, 1,200 accessions, six new churches and one parsonage built. This is the piney woods section, and a few years ago was all a missionary territory, and now is one of the best districts in the Conference.

Rev. B. F. Jones, of the Brookhaven district, reported nearly 1,000 accessions to the church in his district, with finances well up, but not full. A large sum had been spent in repairing churches, and one new church had been built and presented to the church by Mrs. Easterling, of Bogue Chitto.

Rev. G. A. Guice, of the Meridian district, reported that ten charges in his district had paid all their assessments in full, and the other charges were well up, the district being far in advance of any other year, with good revivals all over the district, and 1,000 accessions.

Rev. T. W. Adams, of the Natchez district, reported 500 accessions, two new churches, two new parsonages, and finances well up.

The class of the second year was called, made their report, and J. R. Jones, J. W. Campbell, W. L. Hightower, L. E. Alford and J. J. Golden were elected deacons, and advanced to the class of the third year.

Revs. J. E. Gray and M. A. Thurman were continued in the class of the second year.

W. A. Terry, T. J. O'Neil and H. A. Gatlin passed their examinations, and were advanced to the fourth year.

G. S. Harmon and R. L. Phillips were continued in the class of the third year.

The class of the first year was called, and H. B. Watkins and C. N. Guice were advanced to the second year, with J. E Williams, C. C. Gibson, W. L Blackwell, E C. Grice, J. L. Reid and J. M Corley remaining in the first year.

The class of the fourth year was called, and L. E. Alford, R A. Sibley, Jr., and H. J. Moore passed their final examinations, and were elected to elders' orders. George B. McKeown, C. M. Crossley, J. H. Foreman, G. W. Huff and H. T. King were continued in the third year.

Dr. J. D. Barbee addressed the Conference in reference to the work of the Publishing House, which showed a very prosperous year, with a total business from all sources amounting to $388,256.93; increase in sales over last year, $16,954.36; total gain in assets, $45,123 28 with total assets of $964,867.71. The church has established a Publishing House at Dallas, Texas, and a missionary Publishing House in Shanghai, China.

Dr. Barbee made some statements in the talk about the criticisms of certain Conferences as being malicious. The Bishop stopped him, and commanded him to confine his remarks to the statements made in the report. This little episode created quite a stir in the Conference.

The report from Millsaps College was read, which showed the college to be in the most flourishing condition of all its history, with 230 students enrolled and thirty young men studying for the ministry. Twenty-five of these young men are the sons of ministers. The conduct of the student body has been most excellent this year, and they have the largest Y. M. C. A. they have ever had.

Dr. J. W. Boswell, editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, addressed the Conference in the interest of the paper.

W. W. Murray, a local preacher, was elected to deacon's orders.

The twentieth question was resumed, and the following ministers made their reports, and their characters passed: H. R. Singleton, H. D. Howell, J. G. Cammack, M. M. Black, H. L. Norton, V. D. Skipper, W. H. Lewis, W. J. Ferguson, R. F. Witt, L. S. Jones, W. C. Black, C. F. Emery, H. P. Lewis, R. Selby, G. M. Hull, M. H. Moore, G. H. Thompson, N. B. Harmon, J. N Ware, J. D. Ellis, J. D. Crymes, W. B Lewis, C. C. Evans, T B. Cottrell, J. A. Moore, H. M. DuBose, B. F. Lewis, W. D. Dominick, P. D. Hardin, D. C. Langford and R. S. Gale.

N. A. Mott was elected a member of the Sunday-school Board, and R. E. Rutledge a member of the Board of Education.

Revs. J. H. Mitchell, J. C. Park and G. W. Bachman, members of the North Mississippi Conference, were introduced to the Conference.

A resolution was adopted by a rising vote expressing the sorrow of the Conference for Rev. D. P. Bradford, who is kept away from the Conference on account of his son having been killed in Alabama.

The committee announced that Dr. P. H. Whisner would address the Conference to-night.

The Conference then adjourned, with the benediction by Rev. R. B. Downer.

The missionary service last night was very interesting, and a very large congregation greeted the speakers. In fact, the large opera house, where the Conference is being held, was filled to overflowing. The secretary of the Board of Missions read the report, which showed that there were twenty-five charges that had not reported; yet the collections for missions was $1,340.69 greater than last year. Dr. Lambuth then addressed the Conference in a very learned and helpful way, and the congregation was greatly impressed with the work that the Mission Board was doing.

THIRD DAY.

The religious exercises of this morning were conducted by Rev. R. D. Norsworthy.

The Minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved.

The Conference elected a Committee on Memorials to the General Conference, consisting of the following ministers: C. W. Crisler, H. W. Featherstun, J. M. Weems, J. E Carpenter, W. B. Lewis, H. R. Singleton, and R. L. Norsworthy.

Rev. G. E. Gray was elected to local deacon orders, and N. E Alford to local elder orders.

The Bishop then resumed the call of the twentieth question, and the following ministers made their reports and their characters passed: W. W. Morse, W. J. Dawson, J. W. Crisler, M. L. White, L. J. Jones, W. M Sullivan, R. D. Norsworthy, W. L. Linfield, W. H. Saunders, H. W. Featherstun, L. R. Roberts, H. W. Van Hook, J. G. Galloway, J. S. Parker, G. H. Galloway, W. W. Cammack, B. S. Rayner, W. M. Williams, J. M. Morse, D. Scarborough, H. B Vandenburg, C. W. Crisler, E. F. Edgar, J W. Chambers, J. P. Drake, G R. Ellis, R Bradley, J. T. Leggett, R. J. Jones, H C. Brown, J. A. Moore, W. G. Forsyth I. L. Peebles, F. M Williams, C. McDonald, J. W. Sandell, A. F. Watkins, M. L. Burton, W. T. Griffin, J. M. Weems, J. T. Nicholson, F. B. Ormond, P. H. Howse, W. W. Moore, J. C. Ellis, and D. P. Bradford.

The report from the East Mississippi College was presented, showing the college to be in greater prosperity than at any time of its history.

Whitworth College reported through the Board of Trustees, that the college is in a prosperous condition, with a much larger number of boarding pupils than last year, and doing the real work of a college.

The report of Port Gibson Female College was read, showing an increase in the number of students, an improvement in the property, and great success under the management of Rev. L. S Jones, the president.

Dr. H. M. DuBose, the editor of the Epworth Era, addressed the Conference in the interest of the Epworth League.

Rev. James Atkins, secretary of the Sunday-school Board, addressed the Conference on the Sunday-school work.

Dr. W. B. Murrah, president of Millsaps College, addressed the Conference. The report from Millsaps College shows the largest attendance of any year of its history.

Rev. J. T. Nicholson was referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the superannuated relation.

The pastor to the Choctaw Indians in this State reported a large increase in membership this year, and that they had built a new church and dedicated it Cammack Chapel, in honor of the first Methodist minister among them.

Rev. I. L. Peebles broke the record in the number of children baptized, having baptized at Wesson this year 121. Bishop Morrison said that he used to have the distinction of having baptized more children in one year than anyone else, but that Dr. Peebles had won the record.

The Conference decided to hold an afternoon session to elect delegates to the General Conference, and to meet at 2:30 P. M.

The morning session adjourned with the benediction by Rev. F. M. Williams.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The religious exercises of the afternoon session were conducted by Rev. H. R. Singleton, and the Minutes of the morning session were read and approved, and the Conference went into the election of delegates to the General Conference. The first ballot for laymen resulted in the election of two delegates, R. W. Millsaps and L. P. Brown. In the first ballot for clerical delegates 116 votes were cast. Rev. A. F. Watkins having received a majority, was declared elected. The next four ballots for laymen resulted in no election. On the second clerical ballot Rev. W. C. Black was elected. The third ballot resulted in no election. The sixth ballot by the laymen resulted in the election of W. M. Thornton, with R. L Bennett and Judge J. R Enoch, alternates. The third clerical vote resulted in the election of T L. Mellen, with H. M. DuBose and T. W. Adams, alternates.

The Committee on Public Worship announced that there would be a meeting of the Conference Brotherhood to-night at 7:30, and the Conference adjourned.

FOURTH DAY.

Rev. C. W. Crisler, of Brookhaven, conducted the devotional services of this morning's session.

The Minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved.

The Conference adopted a resolution requesting Dr. J. W. Boswell to publish in pamphlet form his essay, recently read before the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting, on the relation of baptized children to the church.

The call of the twentieth question was resumed, and the following ministers made their reports and their characters passed: J E Carpenter, J T. Abney, J. W. Brown, H. Mellard, R. E. Rutledge, H M. Ellis, V. V. Boone, W. H. Huntley, B. W Lewis, B. H. Rawls, I B. Robertson, W. G. Backus, F. A Grimes, J. A. B Jones, J. W. McLaurin, H. G. Hawkins, W. L. C. Hunniontt, C. D. Cecil, and A. D. Miller.

Revs. I. B Robertson, W. G Backus and W. L. C. Hunniontt were referred to the committee for the superannuated relation.

Rev. J. W. McLaurin was referred to the committee for the supernumerary relation.

A memorial to the General Conference was read and referred to the proper committee, asking that the order of deaconess be created in the church.

The directors of the Orphans' Home made their report, and recommended the Rev. W. T. Griffin to be appointed manager of the Home. Rev. A. F. Watkins and W. M. Thornton were elected directors of the Home.

Rev. T. L. Mellen occupied the chair for a while in the absence of the Bishop.

Rev. N. B. Young was referred to the committee for the superannuated relation.

The class for admission into full connection in the Conference, consisting of the following young ministers: J. W. Campbell, J. R. Jones, W. L. Hightower, J. J. Golden and E. L. Alford, was called before the Conference, addressed by the Bishop, took the vows, and were unanimously admitted.

The Conference adopted a resolution requesting Bishop Galloway to prepare a memorial volume on the life of the beloved Dr. C. G. Andrews, member and former secretary of this Conference.

The Bishop called Question 5, "Who are readmitted?" and the name of Rev. M. J. Miller was presented, and after considerable debate he was readmitted.

The regular announcements were made, and the Conference adjourned.

FIFTH DAY.

This was the last day of the Conference. The weather was bright and cold, and everybody was in good spirits.

The devotional exercises of this morning's session were conducted by Rev. C. McDonald, and the Minutes of Saturday's session were read and approved.

The Bishop announced that Rev. M. H. Munger, of the Indian Mission Conference, and J. W. Lewis, of the Louisville Conference, had been transferred to this Conference.

The following Boards and committees made their reports: On Publishing Interests, Memorials to the General Conference, District Conference Records, Board of Conference Endowment Fund, Sunday-school Board, Committee on Bible Cause, Reports Nos. 1, 2 and 3, Board of Education; Joint Board of Finance, Sabbath Observance.

The Committee on Conference Relations recommended J. A. Vance, R. A. Sibley, L. P. Meador, R. B. Downer, J. W. Harmon, H. R. Caldwell, J. H. Evans, D. G. W. Ellis, T. W. Brown, W. W. Hurst, J. H. Holland, H. D. Howell, J. T. Nicholson, N. B. Young and P. Howard for the superannuated relation, and J. W. McLaurin for the supernumerary relation.

Other reports were received as follows: Church Extension Board, Woman's Home Mission Society, Epworth League Board, Committee on Temperance.

The Conference adopted the report asking the General Conference to establish the order of deaconess.

A collection was taken up to build a monument over the grave of Rev. J. V. Penn, amounting to $26.65.

Dr. W. B Murrah, Dr. A. F. Watkins and Rev. L. S Jones addressed the Conference on the subject of education.

The Conference adopted a resolution asking the governor of Mississippi to recommend to the next Legislature the necessity of adopting State prohibition.

G W. Hively was discontinued at his own request.

The Conference took a special collection for Rev. J. T. Nicholson, who was placed on superannuated relation, amounting to $76.

The Conference adopted resolutions of thanks to the good people of McComb City for their kindness shown, the Protestant Churches of McComb City for the use of their churches, the various railroads in the State for favors shown, the New Orleans Picayune, Times-Democrat, Jackson News and Clarion-Ledger, and to the McComb City papers, for full reports of the Conference, and to the Rev. J. W. Chambers, Conference host, for his untiring efforts for the comfort of the Conference.

A resolution was adopted thanking Major R. W. Millsaps, of Jackson, Miss., for the donation to Millsaps College of the very excellent property, consisting of grounds and buildings immediately adjoining the college, and valued at $35,000.

A resolution was offered condemning the practice of intercollegiate games.

This resolution brought forth a lively discussion, participated in by Rev. T. L. Mellen, Rev. A. F. Watkins, Hon. T. M. Evans, and many others. Bishop Morrison spoke very strongly in favor of the resolution, and condemned the intercollegiate foot-ball games. The vote was finally taken, and resulted in 89 for and 12 against.

The statistical report is as follows: Local preachers, 96; members, 40,840; net gain, 1,971; infants baptized, 1,176; adults baptized, 1,229; Epworth Leagues, 64; members, 2,045; Sunday-schools, 394; scholars, 19,250; Conference claimants, $6,028; foreign missions, $8,518; domestic missions, $3,332; church extension, $2,422; Bible cause, $557; presiding elders, $9 417; pastors, $69,060; Bishops, $1,427; number of societies, 478; houses of worship, 426; value of same, $480,390; parsonages, 115; value of same, $115,460.

The Conference assembled at 7:30 P. M. to hear the appointments, and after a very touching address by the Bishop the Conference sang, "Blest be the tie that binds," and the Bishop announced the following appointments, and the Conference adjourned sine die:

CHARGING GOD FOOLISHLY.

BY REV. L. S. JONES

When will men cease charging God with acts that he could not commit, nor will to be done by others, without violating the law of his own being? God is holy, and could not will an unholy act, and whatever he wills to be done is holy, and the doing of what God wills is holiness unto the Lord. The wicked deeds of ungodly men could not, from the very nature of God, be the will of deity. The assassination of our late President was not the will of God, nor did our holy God have anything to do with that foul deed; yet men, in talking about it, persist in saying, "It was the will of God, and, therefore, the will of God be done." What nonsense! Ought not the will of God be done? And do we not pray, Thy will be done? If the killing of the President was God's will, then it was right for it to be done, and the man who did it committed a holy act, and instead of being executed as a criminal, should have been honored by all men for doing what God willed to be done. Admit that the man's deed was in accord with the divine will, and you admit that his execution was a national murder, and a crime against a man who was simply doing the will of Heaven. A few days ago a young man was accidentally killed by his dearest friend, whereupon a minister said, "What was not man's will was God's will, or it could not have happened." Think of the dead boy's mother, of the grief that tore her heart-strings, of the sorrow that hardened her heart when she heard of her boy's death, and see if you can charge God with it. Think of the young man who did the accidental deed, almost wild with grief, and think of the agony of his loved ones as they watch for the final effect upon the boy's mind, and see if you can think of God willing such misery and anguish of soul. Such an idea of God would destroy my faith in his holiness and trust in his tender mercies. That God can overrule the assassination of the President and the accidental killing of the young man for the good of all concerned, we do not doubt; but that our holy and merciful Heavenly Father willed these things, we absolutely deny. If the woman who could not straighten herself, whom Christ healed, had lived to-day, some divine, doubtless, would say for her comfort, "It is the will of God, my sister, and, therefore, you ought to be submissive." But He who came to undo the work of the devil said, "Ought not I to have loosed this woman whom Satan hath bound, lo! these eighteen years?" Now, do you suppose if God had willed her captivity, that Christ would have interfered with his Father's will? No, not he, for he came to do the will of the Father, and not to antagonize it. Some say that God could have prevented the murder by the assassin, and that, because he did not do so, he, therefore, willed it.

How little do those who thus talk understand either the nature of man or God! God made man a free agent, capable of doing right and free to do wrong. Now, admitting that God could have prevented that and all other wicked acts, would not the arbitrary exercise of such power destroy free agency and reduce man to an automaton? I can not see it otherwise. We, therefore, conclude that God, in order to preserve free moral agency, must not, and can not, compel men to do right and to leave the wrong undone. Besides, God is himself under law, and works according to law. When he made the human body he was under legal necessity to make it just as he did. If he had made it different, it would not have been a human body, but would have been something else. The human body is made under law, the violation of which is death. The same is true of man's moral and intellectual nature. Therefore, when the assassin fired the bullet, according to the law of moving bodies, it went direct to the President's heart, and, as the result of free agency and the violated law of man's physical being, the President was killed. Could God have prevented the firing of the pistol, or changed the direction of the ball, or overcome the effect of the missile of death? Yes, but he would have been under the necessity of destroying the assassin's free agency, or of performing a miracle. Because he did not do it, who dares to say God willed it? He suffered it to be so, and will, no doubt, overrule it to the good of this nation: but that he willed, I can never believe. The same reasoning holds good with reference to the crucifixion of Christ. Establish the fact that God willed it, and you must confess that it was right, and those who took part in it were God's servants, doing the righteous will of a holy God. From this conclusion there is no escape.

BISHOPS ENOUGH.

BY A PASTOR.

Already the question of strengthening our episcopal corps at the next session of the General Conference is being discussed. This scribbler is one of those who think we have as many Bishops as the interests of the church demands. At present we need no additional force in that department of our officiary. Why no new ones?

1. Because we have Bishops enough to do all the work which, in its nature, is distinctively episcopal. There are 49 Conferences and 10 active Bishops. Bishops Wilson and Candler have the greatest number of Conferences, each having to preside over seven Conferences. For this work Bishop Wilson has from July 24 to Oct. 17, and goes to China, Korea, and Japan. Bishop Candler has seven Conferences over which he must preside, one of which is in Cuba. For this he has about 15 weeks. Bishop Duncan is next in abundance of work, having six Conferences to be held in about 15 weeks. Bishop Galloway's work has been connectional. Other Bishops have from two to five Conferences to hold, the sessions of which cover a period of from 4 to 37 weeks. The question of time occupied in holding these Conferences gives no just conception of the labor and travel bestowed upon the work. Still, no one is overworked, nor do any of them complain.

2. Even those of the Bishops whose work is lightest do not "travel through the Conferences over which they are to preside." Twenty-five years the writer has attended District Conferences in his Conference, and away from a Bishop's home. He has not seen one at a District Conference. He has attended twenty-seven District Conferences, and a Bishop has been present at only two of them. We can not hope to have Bishops enough to attend all our District Conferences, and it is of no use to elect new ones for that reason. Beside, the statutory work of a Bishop, if I understand it, is to "Preside at the Annual Conference, station the preachers, ordain ministers," etc., and "travel during the year, as far as practicable, through the presiding elders' districts which may be included in his episcopal district, in order to preach and to oversee the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church." This is episcopal work, and as there are only 49 Conferences and missions to be presided over by 10 Bishops, and from two to eighteen or twenty districts in a Conference, certainly we have Bishops enough to at least touch each presiding elder's district in the church. Would more Bishops do the work better? If so, how and when?

SOME HISTORICAL DATA.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

The following quotation from Sozomen's Ecclesiastical History, B. VI., c. 26, a writer of the fifth century, not only substantiates the opinion that immersion was unknown to the church of the earlier centuries, but that it was regarded by many in his day as an "innovation." Sozomen says that the mode was believed by many to have originated with Eunomius (born A. D., about 315), but it is probable, from other historical data at hand, that the "innovation" was practiced some earlier. The quotation is valuable, at least, in showing how immersion was regarded in the fifth century.

"About this time (A. D. 375) Eunomius, who had succeeded Elensius in the bishopric of Cyzicus, and who presided over the Arians, devised another heresy, which some have called by his name, but which is sometimes denominated the Anomoean heresy. Some assert that Eunomius was the first who ventured to maintain that baptism ought to be performed by immersion, and to corrupt, in this manner, the apostolical tradition which has been handed down to the present day. He introduced, it is said, a mode of discipline contrary to that of the church, and endeavored to disguise the innovation under the cloak of a grave and severe department. . . . But whether it was Eunomius, or any other person, who first introduced heretical opinions concerning baptism, it seems to me that such innovators, whoever they may have been, were alone in danger, according to their own representation, of quitting this life without having received the holy rite of baptism; for if, after having received baptism after the ancient mode of the church, they found it impossible to re-confer it on themselves, it must be admitted that they introduced a practice to which they had not themselves submitted, and thus undertook to administer to others what had never been administered to themselves. Thus, after having laid down certain principles according to their own fancy, without any data, they proceeded to bestow upon others what they had not themselves received. Now, according to their opinion, those who have not received the rite of baptism in conformity with their mode of administration are unbaptized; and . . . they rebaptized all who join their sect, although previously baptized by the Catholic Church."

Doubtless, the reader, in perusing the latter paragraphs, could not help thinking of some tenets and history of modern Baptists. They, not only in England and America, are administering to others that which they did not "receive" from any source authoritative, but it is a matter of historical record, admitted even by their own historians, that the Baptist Church, both in England and America, had its origin by the immersion first being administered at the hand of a layman.

The English Baptists originated thus in 1633. Mr. Helwisse, a layman, immersed Mr. Smyth, and Mr. Smyth, in turn, immersed all the rest.

The American Baptists originated thus in 1639. Ezekiel Holliman, a layman, immersed Roger Williams, and Roger Williams returned the compliment by immersing Ezekiel Holliman.

"They rebaptize all who join their sect," etc. How like our modern immersion friends!

Doubtless, whether Eunomius was the first to originate immersion, or some one else, he was a good Baptist; but as his sect baptized infants, our modern immersion friends may not claim him.

"THE COMING CONFERENCE."

MR. EDITOR: With much interest I read the article in your issue of this week bearing the above title, and from the pen of that intelligent layman, Brother T. A. Holloman. Doubtless, his points are all well taken. I have no contention with him, because I have neither experience of Bishop, presiding elder, nor steward.

For more than forty years I have been closely related to the itinerancy; part of this time as wife of pastor, and for a while the "widow" in the beloved's home. While the time in this relation has not been as long as that in the relation of pastor's wife, the impressions have been the most lasting. The weather is cold and dreary, and a long journey must be made to meet the next Quarterly Conference. Others may count it a matter of indifference whether or not they attend, but the P. E. must be on hand; a ride of thirty, or more, miles in the face of Winter's worst to meet the faithful pastor and, perhaps, one or two stewards at the local church. Quarterly Conference is a mere matter of form, for empty benches have neither ears to hear nor memory to recollect whatever of exhortation he may have to give.

Monday night, or more often Tuesday, he comes in tired and worn to find his desk piled with letters from Bishop, other presiding elders, and stewards (also occasionally one from some good sister); all asking questions and making suggestions concerning the needs of church or preacher, and occasionally an almost pre-emptory demand that "We must have another man," notwithstanding his firm convictions that the man in question ought to return. Literally, with "groanings which can not be uttered," I have seen him, in seeming despair, lay aside these weighty communications.

Oh, the agony in the night season! Certainly Loomis nor Robinson ever presented such problems, nor brought forth such groans. In the midnight hour I have heard the deep sigh and suppressed groanings, only to receive the reply to my anxious question, "What's the matter?" "Oh, my brother! my brother! That wife, those little ones! Why may he not return? I'm sure he is a good man." Then why not return him? Oh, the church demands another! Thus for weeks before the coming of Conference he spends his anxious nights. Post Oak circuit demands another man, or the man from Post Oak circuit demands another place.

I am convinced, from the means of information which I have, that the charge sometimes made that the presiding elders are men indifferent to their brethren's comfort and interests is not true. Of course, womanlike, my curiosity leads me to find out all I can, and it is presumable that I get hold of things not intended for me; but I have learned how to look innocent and ask few questions.

Already, Mr. Editor, I have allowed myself betrayed into saying more than I intended; but I felt like having my say.

Yours in behalf of the "beloveds,"

ELDER'S WIFE.

REVIVAL NEWS.

DEAR DOCTOR BOSWELL: If space will allow, and your judgment will admit, please publish this round of meetings with the brethren.

I was with W. C. McCullough at Acona, Miss., where we had a fine revival in the church, quite a number of reclamations, and some accessions.

Next with Bro. Strickland at Potts Camp, where we had a good meeting in the church and some valuable accessions. Bro. Strickland is gaining favor with his people, and advancing the Master's cause in their midst. If the Presbyterians have any more like him to spare, we would be glad to have them.

From there I went to Bro. Browning. Assisted him at New Hope, near Winona. Everybody seemed to be ready for a revival. Browning had his people in fine working order. We had immense congregations, frequently as many out of doors as in the house; the house filled as long as there was sitting-room. Notwithstanding the large congregations, we had the most profound attention; not a thing to mar the peace or impede the progress of the Master's cause. We erected a pulpit in the door; preached to them in the house and out; had an old-time Holy-Ghost revival; penitents at the altar pleading for salvation; young people, middle-aged and old, took great delight in church work; conversions and accessions at every service. Commencing the meeting on Sunday, at eleven o'clock, we closed on Friday night at high-tide, having received 57 or 58 members. How many joined other churches, I do not know. The Conference need not be afraid to risk this godly young man, with his tact and talent, and his consecrated wife as a helper.

From this point we traveled northward until we stood in the midst of Mars Hill, where we met young Lawson and his people. We commenced our meeting Sunday, at eleven o'clock, preaching twice a day until Thursday, contending with rain and mud, with some sickness to hinder; yet we had a good meeting, good congregations for the weather, good attention, frequent displays of the divine power, with a few old-time shouts. We were rained out. Here we received 8 or 10 members into the church. Bro. Lawson is moving along with his work and people. I hope these good people may help him, and his report may be good in finance and the salvation of souls at the Conference.

From this point westward to Bethel, where we assisted W. W. Williams, spending a week with this godly man and a host of old friends; had a pleasant stay. We found Bro. Williams companionable, consecrated and communicative. We had evidences of divine power, and, I trust, much good was accomplished here. Bro. Williams is doing a good work among his people. May the Lord abundantly bless the pastor and people at Bethel!

I went back to assist Brother McCullough in a meeting at Black Hawk. Bro. McCullough did some fine preaching. This scribe exhorted, sang and prayed. We continued the meeting for a week, and I hope much good was accomplished. Most everybody here in Black Hawk belongs to the church. Many of the members were revived and strengthened, while others were somewhat indifferent. Bro. McCullough is appreciated by his people, and doing a good work.

Next we were at Cherry Hill, in the Delta, where we assisted in a meeting for a week. We had a very interesting meeting. I trust much good was accomplished. Many of the members were built up and strengthened; congregations were good, quiet and very attentive; the people were generous, large-hearted, and kind. Bro. Brogan is highly appreciated by his people. He is becoming acclimated, and highly pleased with the Delta. He is destined to do great good in this country, and has a bright future.

Next to Rolleville, where we assisted Bro. J. J. Garner. Had a good revival in the church; quite a number of the people formed new resolutions to live better, and do more for God and humanity. Bro. Garner is very highly appreciated by this good people. We had about 8 or 9 accessions to the church at Rolleville. The preacher has a new parsonage about completed, which will be a comfortable home for the preacher. He is moving forward on all lines of church work. His consecrated wife renders valuable assistance, and stands by the preacher in all his labors of love. Bro. Garner is a good case. We had with us also at this place the wide awake, up-to-date colporter, Rev. G. W. Bachman, who did some good preaching and rendered valuable help in song service.

May the Lord abundantly bless the brethren in their labors of love; also the good people they serve, and help them to send a fine list of subscribers to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE!

With best wishes and prayers for the prosperity of the editor and spread of the ADVOCATE, I am,

Fraternally, W. J. O'BRYANT.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

REPORT OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL BOARD.

The Board recommends the following appropriation for the Conference year: $100 to needy schools, to be used in the discretion of the treasurer of the Board on the recommendation of the pastor of the schools; $125 for the purchase of Children's Day programmes, to be purchased and mailed under the supervision of the treasurer of the Board. For necessary incidental expenses such a sum as in the discretion of the Board shall be necessary. We ask the permissible use of not exceeding $35 in or for each presiding elder's district for the procurement of suitable help to do Normal and Institute work among teachers and officers. This money to be expended under the supervision of the chairman and local member of the Board.

Only about half of the pastors have filled out and returned the statistical blanks furnished them. These blanks were mailed to all of the preachers several weeks before Conference. The information sought by them is necessary to an intelligent prosecution of the work. Diligent effort was exerted, and some money was expended during the past year, in securing efficient normal teaching for the teachers. Owing to untoward circumstances, the success was not great. But that real progress lies along this line all agree. All capital laid out on the teacher pays heavy interest to the pupil and to the church.

While we may draw upon extraneous help for new ideas and plans, we realize more and more that the ancient fable of the lark and the farmer must not be forgotten. Great and abiding progress, and the execution of well-matured plans, must rest with the pastor and teacher. By this alone we shall conquer.

Weekly teachers' meetings are an absolute necessity to the best success in Sunday-school work. There is no dissent from this proposition among the most competent judges. A fixed resolve by the pastor and superintendent to hold weekly teachers' meetings guarantee a successful issue. Such a meeting will not grow over night, nor in a month, nor in a year. Years of persistent effort will alone prevail. The pastors' report shows that only nine regular teachers' meetings are held in the Conference.

The pastor can not surrender this grave problem to the superintendent. They two must conspire together, work together, pray together. The pastor who in this day abandons the systematic instruction of the children to the superintendent needs a wider view.

To the end of permanently helping the teacher in his arduous labor, the Board recommends the immediate adoption of the Bible Teachers' Study Circle as designed and recommended by the General Board. The exemplification of its ends and use by Prof. H. M. Hamill, D. D., superintendent of training work, at this session of the Conference, was edifying and instructive to all. But its profitable use as a teacher's help rests at least with the pastor superintendent. We recommend the weekly teachers' meeting as the place to develop the Bible Teachers' Study Circle. No additional church meeting will then be required, and the teachers' weekly assize will be doubly profitable.

We quote from the report of this Board at the last session: "To better equalize the teacher's work and duties, it is recommended by the Board that at the close of each Conference year the newly nominated superintendent, in consultation with the pastor, select a corps of teachers whose term of service be positively limited to the succeeding Conference year, and subject to removal or suspension at any time for inefficiency or sickness. Let the teacher understand that he does not own the class, but is the appointed overseer of the class for a single year, provided he does his work well, just as the superintendent or overseer of the school."

The recommendation contained in that quotation is again made. We further recommend that a public installation of the teachers and officers, when selected, be had in the presence of the school or congregation.

While the most urgent need is the improvement of the quality of the work done in our Sunday-schools, we deem it not amiss to call attention to the matter of attendance. Our enrollment is only about half of the membership of our church, while the Wesleyan Methodist Church is considerably larger than their church membership—in fact, almost twice as large. Density of population and other causes may partially account for the difference; still the comparison must necessarily teach us that there is great room for increase in the number of those attending our Sunday-schools. There has been an occasional decline in recent years that should cause us to stop and consider.

We again commend the Sunday-school literature issued by our Publishing House, and especially the Magazine, the Children's Visitor, and the Young People's Hymnal, Nos. 1 and 2. GEORGE J. LEFTWICH, Chairman.

The above report was amended by appointing Rev. G. W. Bachman as Sunday-school Agent, and that $150 be appropriated by the Board for his support.

REV. T. Y. RAMSEY.

At a regular meeting of the Argonian Literary Society, Saturday evening, Nov. 30, at Grenada College, Miss., a committee was appointed to draft resolutions relative to the removal from our midst of Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, one of our honorary members. The committee met and adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in the removal of Bro. Ramsey our school and society have lost a strong, devoted, unwavering friend, whose attendance on our meetings always added to the interest and pleasure of the same.

2. That in the removal of his family our school sustains a loss that can not be repaired.

3. That we commend Bro. Ramsey and his family to the good people of Monticello, Ark., and to the watchcare of our Heavenly Father, praying that wherever they may go, they may be led by the divine hand, and that their labors may be abundantly blessed.

Pains in the Back

Are symptoms of a weak, torpid or stagnant condition of the kidneys or liver, and are a warning it is extremely hazardous to neglect, so important is a healthy action of these organs.

They are commonly attended by loss of energy, lack of courage, and sometimes by gloomy foreboding and despondency.

"I had pains in my back, could not sleep and when I got up in the morning felt worse than the night before. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and now I can sleep and get up feeling rested and able to do my work. I attribute my cure entirely to Hood's Sarsaparilla." MRS. J. N. PERRY, care H. S. Dr. Pierce's Medicines Do Cure.

We must either believe that a large percentage of the population lie deliberately, and premeditatedly, and without any motive other than a love of mendacity, or else we must believe in the many and remarkable cures effected by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and "Favorite Prescription."

For these cures are testified to by hundreds of thousands of men and women, scattered over every State in the Union. These are the men and women who are the backbone of the country. Their word is good with the merchants with whom they trade, with the neighbors and friends who are of the community in which they live. It is equally good when they tell the story of cures achieved by the use of Dr. Pierce's medicines.

Think of the matter in this light. Here are hundreds of thousands of creditable witnesses who, without conference or collusion, testify independently to a common series of facts. Such testimony as this from only two or three persons would be adequate to determine a matter of life or death in any court of law in the land. What can be said when, instead of two or three witnesses, hundreds of thousands testify that Dr. Pierce's medicines do cure the diseases for which they are prescribed and recommended? We come back to our starting-point. We must either believe this multitude of witnesses, or we must believe that men and women who are as we are morally and socially, will go out of their way to write a monstrous falsehood, damaging to themselves and perilous to the public which it is designed to deceive and delude. Such an opinion would be a disgrace to the lowest class of human intelligence.

The covetous person lives as if the world were made altogether for him, and not he for the world; to take in everything and to part with nothing. —Robert South.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Conducted by N. A. MOTT, Yazoo City, Miss

To Whom All Communications for This Department Must Be Sent.

The Work of the Year.

Before this reaches our readers our three Conferences will have been held, and the work of the Conference year brought to a close. The reports of our Sunday-schools will have been handed in, and there will be a short breathing-spell before taking a fresh start for the work of the coming year. It is well to pause and reflect, and survey the past, that we may avoid its mistakes, that we may profit by its failures, and improve upon its successes.

Can our Sunday-schools report progress during the past year? Have we improved in knowledge and methods? Have we been fruitful? And, above all, have we brought any of our pupils to Christ? These are serious questions, and let us answer them seriously and prayerfully. Unless we can answer some one of them in the affirmative, our work for the year has been a failure. But if we can answer "Yes" to either of them, it is an evidence that we have improved our talent and are walking "worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called."

We trust the reports will show material progress in membership and collections. They are an evidence of prosperity, but the vital success of a school lies behind the reports, and does not appear among the figures at all. A school may even show a decrease in attendance and collections, and yet have accomplished a great work for God and humanity. It is the quality of work done, the spirituality produced, the conversion of the children and young people, and the strengthening and building them up into the body of Christ, that makes the largest success. For such a work in all our schools we hope and pray.

AN APPRECIATED "AMEN."

MY DEAR BRO. MOTT: Please let me add my "Amen" to the good things you have been giving us from time to time in the Sunday-school Department. Just such work is needed. I also want to say that if we, as Sunday-school workers, have fallen short in our influence, let us now attempt to correct one point, and secure more efficient and proficient teachers. This can be done by securing a set of the reading course provided by Dr. James Atkins and Dr. H. M. Hamill for our teachers, and then seeing to it that the Study Circles are carried on regularly and systematically. The books are now about from the press, covering Bible study, church history, and normal teacher training. $1 per set, from Barbee & Smith, Agents, Nashville, Tenn.

Yours in the work,

A. M. MAYO.

Lake Charles, La.

We understand that there is a feast of good things in store for the readers of our Sunday-school Magazine the coming year, not the least of which will be an outline history of the Wesley family and of Methodism. There will also be an exchange department for the Study Circle. Those in authority are bending every energy to train the Sunday-school workers of our church along four lines of study: The systematic study of the Bible; the study of the Sunday-school in its history and methods; the study of the church, especially of our Methodism, in its history, polity, and doctrine; and the study of the work of the teacher. It is essential, in order to do good work, that every worker in our schools have some knowledge of these four lines of study.

The best-conducted schools of Southern Methodism see the need of a Study Course, and are sending in their orders for books and their lists of names for the Study Circle. If they need it, what must be the need of those schools that are not doing efficient work? Let every school in our whole connection rally to the support of the Sunday-school Board, and of Dr. Atkins and Prof. Hamill, in their efforts to improve the methods and increase the knowledge of our teachers. Teaching is an art, a profession. We trust that every Sunday-school teacher will "study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

Organize your Study Circle at once, and be ready to begin Jan. 1. The true officer or teacher wants to know how to do the best work.

From Watson, La.

DEAR BROTHER BOSWELL: The undersigned, on this, Thursday, the twenty-eighth of November—Thanksgiving Day—enjoyed the brotherly greeting and cordial handshaking of many of his former neighbors, and who are still his warmest friends and Christian brethren, at the lovely and commodious Live Oak Church of Livingston parish, La. Many good people of the neighborhood assembled at the church at an early hour for the purpose of returning thanks to the Ruler of the universe for his countless blessings to the citizens of our State, and for his parental care of our people as a nation. The writer, by invitation, preached, and took David's words, "O give thanks unto the Lord," for his text. The lesson being over, we all repaired to the beautiful grove, where we enjoyed a bountiful repast, and spent some time in social conversation.

In the afternoon we had a delightful song and experience service, in which almost everyone in the house joined, expressing their thanks for blessings received during the past year.

Yours in Christ,

W. H. CAROLL.

Havnesville La.

MY DEAR BROTHER: We have closed our second year at this place. There has been a forward move in more than one way. The church is on a higher plane, spiritually, and there is a decided change in a material way. We now have a nine-hundred-dollar parsonage property in place of a property that we sold for one hundred and fifteen dollars. Also, we have sold two old church robes that had gone out of use for six hundred dollars, and will replace them with one at a cost of twelve hundred and fifty dollars. We have three Sunday-schools and an Epworth League of thirty-five members that promises greater returns than any investment we have made yet. And now we have our goods packed and marked for the regions beyond. So you will see that we are in the procession and succession.

W. A. CLARKE.

Nov. 25, 1901.

God's condescension is nowhere more conspicuous than in his hearing of prayer. No ponderous intellectual machinery is needful to its dignity—no learning, no art, no genius. In its very conception, prayer implies a descent of the divine mind to the homes of men. Bruised reeds, smoking flax, broken hearts, the slow of speech, find a refuge in the thought of God. He whom the heaven of heavens can not contain has come down and placed himself in the centre of the little circle of human ideas and affections, as if for the purpose of making our religion always the homestead of common feeling.—Austin Phelps.

Spiritual power is to be had today, just as it was had by the disciples of old. There are no new roads to its attainment. The results of pentecostal and apostolic days were not accidental. Plain, scriptural principles were obeyed, and the results came as naturally as the sun dispels the darkness. Think of a whole church assembled together with one accord, and in one place, for a ten days' prayer meeting! That was what happened before Pentecost. What would the people think and say if such a prayer meeting were proposed to-day? Some people tire of an hour's service once a week.—Southern Churchman.

Up, and be doing. The Heavenly Master is on his journey, and the talents for use or abuse are now in our hands. Oh, let us not have to mourn, when too late, forfeited opportunities. The talents, ours today, may be demanded by the owner to-morrow.—Maodiff.

Empty hours, empty hands, empty companions, empty words, empty hearts draw in evil spirits, as a vacuum draws in air. To be occupied with good is the best defense against the inroads of evil.—William Arnot.

BACKACHE

Is only one of many distressing symptoms which point to the presence of womanly diseases. If women thoroughly understood the relation of the local womanly health to the general health, they would understand that backache, headache, nervousness, sideache, dizziness, faintness and similar feminine ailments, cannot be cured until the womanly health is established.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures diseases peculiar to women. It establishes regularity, dries the drains which weaken women, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness. In curing these local diseases, it cures the ailments which they cause; backache, headache, sideache, dizziness, faintness, nervousness, and other ills peculiarly feminine.

"I wrote you for advice February 4th, 1900," writes Mrs. Loma Halstead, of Claremore, Cherokee Nat., Ind. Ter. "I was racking with pain from the back of my head down to my heels. Had hemorrhage for weeks at a time, and was unable to sit up for ten minutes at a time. You answered my letter, advised me to use your valuable medicines, viz., Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and 'Pleasant Pellets,' also gave advice about injections, baths and diet. To my surprise, in four months from the time I began your treatment I was a well woman and have not had the backache since, and now I put in sixteen hours a day at hard work."

Weak and sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Common Sense Medical Adviser, 1008 pages, is given away. Send 21 one-cent stamps, the expense of mailing only, for the book in paper covers, or 31 stamps for the volume bound in cloth. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dlstrlct Conferenee Records: H. W. Rickey, W. Schuhle, P. O. Lowery.

Audlting Committee: W. G. Evans, W. W. Drake, H. R. Sin-gleton, Jr.

Committee on Sunday Observ-ance: R. J. Harp, C. C. Miller, T. S. Sligh.

The hours for meeting and adjournment were fixed at 9 A. M. and 1 P. M.

Rev. G. D. French, agent of the American Bible Society, was introdnced, and made an interest-ing talk on the Bible. Mr. French will leave for another Conference to-morrow.

After Mr. French's address the Conference sang, "Waft, Waft, Ye Winds, the Story."

Rev. H. C. Arthur, of tho Pres-byterian Chnrch, was introduced. Bishop Fitzgerald stated that it was foreordained that the Pres-byterians and Methodists love each other. Mr. Arthur wel-comed the Conferenee in the name of the Presbyterian Chnrch in New Iberia.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson stated to the Conference that he would represent the Missionary Review.

Question 20 was called by the Bishop, and the first name called was that of Rev. S. S. Keener, presiding elder of the New Or-leans district, who rendered an excellent report on the state of the church in his district.

The following names were called, their reports given and their characters passed: F. N. Parker, W. W. Drake, W. H. La-Prade, R. H. Wynn, C. D. Atkin-son, K. W. Dodson, J. F. Foster, P. H. Fontaine, J. B. Kent, I. T. Reames, F. G. Hocutt, Thomas Carter.

Rev. F. S. Parker, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge district, reported an advance along all lines. The missionary collec-tions, he thought, would be in full.

Question 20 was resumed, and the following made their reports: E. N. Evans, N. F. Johnston, R. Randle, W. J. Porter, R. M. Blocker, T. J. Upton, J. I. Hoff-panir, P. M. Brown, J. H. Mont-gomery, A. J. Cobnrn, H. W. Rickey, H. W. May, J. B. Cass-ity, H. B. Carre, G. P. White, I. W. Cooper, J. H. Northcut.

Rev. C. W. Carter, presiding elder of the Crowley district, stated that things were in good shape on his work, and that the preachers had done good work.

Reports from the following were received: J. J. Kelley, C. C. Wier, A. C. Smith, R. W. Vaughn, W. Schuhle, C. T. Munholland, R. C. Grace, R. W. Tncker, J. A. Miller, H. S. Johns, F. N. Swee-ney, A. W. Turner, T. H. Mc-Clendon.

Rev. W. G. Evans announced that the Auditing Committee would be pleased if the preachers wonld give in their written re-ports as soon as possible.

The Alexandrla district was next called, and the presidlng elder, Rev. J. D. Harper, re-ported his dlstrict in a flourish-ing condltion, about 800 conver-slons being reported.

The following reported and their characters were passed: C. C. Miller, W. T. Woodward, D. E. Kelley, J. A. Parker, J. W. Lee, J. G. Sloane, J. S. Rutledge, J. P. Hancy, R. S. Isbell, G. D. Anders, W. H. Benton, L. L. Roberts, T. K. Faunt LeRoy, W. G. Roberts.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson was elected railroad secretary.

Bishop Fitzgerald announced that the presiding elders would meet him at the residence of Judge Foster.

After announcements the Con-ference adjourned, with the dox-ology and benediction.

SECOND DAY.

The day's session of the Lonisi-ana Conference was opened with religious exercises, conducted by the Bishop, who called on Rev. J. D. Hammond, Secretary of Educatiou, who offered a fervent prayer.

The secretary of the Confer-ence, Rev. F. S. Parker, read the Mlnutes of yesterday's ses-sion, and they were approved. On motion, the roll eall in the fnture will be dispensed with.

Question 20 was resnmed, and the name of Rev. J. T. Sawyer, pre-sldlng elder of the Shreveport dis-trict, was called, and the doctor reported his district in very fine condition, with the missionary collection in full.

The characters of the following preachers were passed: Revs. W. T. Bolling, R. J. Harp, M. G. Jenkins, J. O. Bennett, J. L. P. Sheppard, J. C. Sligh, W. G. Evans, J. E. Patterson, W. H. Bowman, Elton Wilson, T. S. Randle, R. P. Howell, G. D. Purcell, H. B. Thomasou, E. L. Cargill, J. M. Alford, J. M. Brown, W. Moore, N. S. Cornell, C. F. Staples, L. F. Hoffpanlr and A. S. Lutz.

Dr. E. E. Hoss, editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, was introduced to the Confer-ence, and made a most excellent address. The Doctor made a happy impression on the Confer-enee.

Rev. J. D. Hammond, Secre-tary of Education, was next in-troduced, and made a short and able address on the great cause he represents.

Rev. Elton Wilson has been transferred to the North Ala-bama Conference.

The name of Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard was referred to the Committee on Conference Rela-tions for superannuation.

The following resolution was nnanimonsly adopted:

"Resolved, That we, the mem-bers of the Louisiana Confereuce, do, so far as practicable, observe Thanksgiving Day, and make an especlal effort to raise the collec-tions for Conference claimants on that day, or for an Endowment Fund for that claim.

"C. C. WIER,
"W. H. LAPRADE,
"J. A. MILLER,
"J. J. KELLEY."

Rev. Robert Vaughn reported at this point that through the liberality of Mr. Stephen J. Hale, the debt on the parsonage had been wiped out. The congrega-tion sang the doxology.

Qnestion 20 was again taken up, and the Arcadia district was reported by the following: A. J. Notestine, W. F. Henderson, W. A. Clarke, B. T. Crews, W. E. Akin, H. J. Boltz, J. M. Franklin, J. B. Williams, H. O. White, H. R. Singleton, T. M. Wafer, T. J. Martin, H. M. Banks, B. H. Shep-pard, B. Wright, J. H. Brown, H. W. Ledbetter, W. L. Hamil.

Rev. J. M. Henry, presiding elder of the Monroe district, re-ported his work in good condi-tion. The rest of the preachers in the district reported, and are as follows: J. R. Moore, S. H. Whatley, S. J. Davies, J. E. Den-son, R. A. Davis, W. H. Hatfield, A. S. J. Neill, D. C. Barr, W. R. Harvell, P. O. Lowrey, S. S. Bogan.

The following having stood a satisfactory examination, were admitted into full connection: Revs. H. N. Brown, C. D. Atkin-son, J. G. Sloane, Wiley G. Roberts.

J. H. Montgomery was con-tinued in the Class of the Second Year.

Rev. G. P. White was con-tiuned in the Class of the First Year, and having been a deacon for four years, he was elected to elder's orders.

L. L. Roberts and H. B. Carre were advanced to the Class of the Second Year. Rev. H. B. Carre was elected to local elder's orders.

Rev. N. F. Hoffpauir was con-tinned in the Class of the First Year.

THIRD DAY—MORNING.

The session was opened with religious exercises conducted by Rev. J. A. Miller, one of the old-est ministers in the Conference. Bishop Fitzgerald appeared strong and ready for the arduous dutles of the day. The secretary read the Minutes of yesterday's session, which were approved.

It was announced that the statistical secretary, Rev. W. G. Evans, was ill, and A. M. Mayo was appointed to fill his place.

E. P. Mackie and J. D. Riley were placed on the Joint Board of Finance.

The following were located at their own request: J. B. Kent, T. M. Wafer and W. A. Clark.

W. H. Benton, H. W. Ledbet-ter, P. H. Fontaine, J. M. Alford and F. N. Sweeney were contin-ued in tho Class of the Fourth Year.

H. B. Thomason and A. S. J. Neill were elected to elders' orders.

When the name of Rev. A. S. Lutz was called, considerable dis-cussion was looked for on account of his having stood his examina-tion before the Institute in Ten-nessee, and in a letter from Mr. Lutz he hoped that this examina-tion would be honored by the Louisiana Conference. By vote of the Conference he was ad-vanced to the Class of the Fourth Year.

Thomas Carter, not having been before the committee, was continued in the Class of the Third Year.

W. T. Woodward, G. D. Pur-cell, M. Hebert and B. Wright were advanced to the Class of the Fourth Year.

Rev. Mr. Vaughn, of Crowley, La., a member of the Baptist Church, on vote of the Confer-ence, after many kind expressions was received in the Louisiana Confereuce.

As the names of the superan-nuated preachers were called, these old veterans of the cross told of their experiences during the year. As they told of their trials and triumphs, many eyes in the congregation were dimmed with tears. The superannuates are: James L. Wright, M. C. Manley, George Jackson, R. S. Trippett, J. M. Johnston, J. F. Scurlock, A. D. McVoy, B. F. White, H. Armstrong, J. F. Wynn.

An interesting letter was read from R. S. Trippett, who is now re-siding in England. Dr. Hoss stated that he met Mr. Trippett in England, and that he was an honor to Southern Methodism.

Rev. C. C. Kramer, the rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church at New Iberia, was intro-duced to the Conference by Bishop Fitzgerald. Dr. Kramer made a most felicitous speech and heartily welcomed the Con-ference.

At this point the Bishop an-nounced the transfer to this Con-ference of the Rev. C. B. Carter.

H. M. Banks was located by the action of the Conference.

A. S. Holcombe, J. E. Meth-ville, H. U. Carter, W. D. Kleiu-schmidt, E. C. Bott, J. D. Nesom, J. S. Rutledge, E. L. Cargill, W. H. Jordan and J. W. Reed were admitted on trial in the Lonisi-ana Conference.

The followiug were called be-fore the altar and were received into full connection: C. D. Atkin-son, H. N. Brown, J. C. Sligh, L. F. Alford, J. G. Sloane, W. G. Rob-erts. The Bishop propounded the usual questions, commenting on each, and the candidates giv-ing satisfactory answers, by vote they were received. The Bishop's address to the class was instruct-ive, and was charged with a heart full of love for these young brethreu.

The Conference here began voting for clerical and lay dele-gates to the General Conference to be held in Dallas, Tex., in May, 1902.

On the first ballot for lay del-egates to the General Conference, S. B. McCutcheon and W. B. Thomson were elected. On the first ballot for clerical delegates, Rev. C. W. Carter was elected. The hour for adjournment of the morning session having arrived, the Conference adjourned.

THIRD DAY—AFTERNOON.

The afternoon session of the Conference was opened with services conducted by Rev. George Jackson. The Confer-ence immodiately resumed tho election of delegates to tho Gen-eral Conference, and Colonel I. D. Wall, of Clinton, was elected as lay delegate. On the second ballot J. T. Sawyer, was elected clerical. W. L. Doss and H. N. Pharr were elected alternate lay delegates. S. S. Keener, was elected clerical delegate on the third ballot. F. S. Parker and J. M. Henry were elected alter-nate clerical delegates.

The next session of the Con-ference will be held in Alexan-dria.

A report was read from the Legal Board, which showed that a gift of $500 was given by a lady in Lonisiana to the Conference Claimant Fund.

A memorial was read from the New Orleans district, the object of which was to secure a larger representation at the District Conference. The measure created considerable debate, and, after amendment, was adopted.

The evening session was closed with the benedictiou by Dr. Tigert.

FOURTH DAY.

The last day's session of the Louisiana Conferenee was opened with religious exercises, conducted by Rev. J. A. Parker. Bishop Fitzgerald was in the chair. The Minutes of the Saturday after-noon's session were read and ap-proved.

The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That memorials, resolutions, reports and all other papers submitted to the Confer-ence this morning be put to vote without discussion.

"J. D. HARPER,
"W. F. HENDERSON."

The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That in order to the establishment of a Preach-ers' Institute for the Louisiana Conference, the following be ap-pointed as a Committee of Ar-rangements to fix a suitable time and place, provide for public lectures and make all other nec-essary preparations for the hold-iug of an Institute during this Conference year, viz.: J. M. Henry, W. H. LaPrade and C. C. Miller.

"Resolved, further, That the members of each of the Examin-iug Committees conduct the stud-ies of the Institute in the books for which they are appointed to examine, and that the following be appointed a committee to map out a course for post-graduate study, and conduct the studies in the same: F. S. Parker, J. A. Parker, W. W. Drake, C. W. Carter, J. M. Henry and R. H. Wynn."

The following is the statistical report:

A report was read from the Committee on Church Publica-tions, which was adopted.

Rev. P. H. Whisner, Secretary of Church Extension, delivered an address.

The Committee on Bible Cause reported.

At this point a collection was taken for a needy preacher. The amount raised was $65.

The credentials of Rev. E. T. Denson were surrendered.

The report of the Committee on Education was received, which showed Centenary and Mansfield Colleges to be in excellent condi-tion. Rev. F. W. Cooper, presi-dent of the Centenary College, ably represented the college.

The Temperance report was adopted.

A motion made not to admit any applicants for admission who used tobacco was laid on the table.

Mrs. F. A. Lyons was intro-duced and represented the Home Mission Society.

Rev. R. J. Harp read the re-port of the Committee on Sab-bath Observance.

A memorial urging the prompt filing of reports at the next Con-ference was adopted.

Rev. H. W. Rickey read the report of the Committee of Dis-trict Conference Records.

A hearty resolution of thanks signed by C. C. Miller, W. B. Thomson and W. T. Woodward was adopted by a rising vote, thanking the citizens of New Iberia for their unbounded hos-pitality, the Picayune and Times-Democrat for full and accurate reports, and the railroad com-panies for reduced rates.

A motion to adjourn until the Joint Board be ready to report was lost, and the affairs of that board will be entrusted to them.

The Minutes of the day's ses-sion were read and approved.

The large congregation sang "And Let Our Bodies Part," and after a few appropriate re-marks by the Bishop, the follow-ing appointments were announced:

Violet Leaves for Cancer.

In speaking of the recent press reports of an English lady being cured of cancer by the use of Violet leaves, Dr. D. M. Bye, who is stopping at the Windsor Hotel, said: 'We frequently hear of some startling innovation in the treatment of this terrible disease, but when we come to trace the report to its foundation, we find there is no basis for the claim. I am not prepared to dispute that this case was genuine, but the indications are that it was an inflammatory condition which was relieved by the poultice like action of the Violet leaves." Dr. Bye is the originator of the Combination Oil Cure for Cancer. His treatment has been used with entire success for eight years. He is just now in the city looking after the branch office established by his company at 175 Main St.—From Dallas (Tex.) News, Dec. 2

THE CONFERENCES.

Our report of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences is unsatisfactory, and we fear, in some instances, inaccurate. The two were held at the same time, nearly two hundred and fifty miles apart, and the editor being compelled to attend both sessions, could not, in person, make a good report, and at the same time look after the business of the ADVOCATE. We have depended on the daily papers, the Times-Democrat and the Picayune, both of which went to much pains and expense to give the proceedings. We acknowledge our indebtedness to these journals. After being in a strain for two weeks, we returned home worn-out and sick. Shortcomings in our report we hope will be forgiven and forgotten.

Two days were pleasantly spent at McComb City, the seat of the Mississippi Conference, under the presidency of Bishop Morrison. The Conference was largely attended, and the preachers, without exception, as far as we could see and hear, were in good health and spirits. The year just closed had been one of great success, spiritually and financially. The preachers were better paid than usual, and their reports as to conversions and additions to the church and collections for the various benevolences were beyond anything realized in recent years, showing an increase in membership (if the printed statistics are correct) of 3,556; and in collections for missions, the handsome sum of $1,729.

The homes of McComb City were open, and the brethren were well entertained. Rev. J. W. Chambers, the pastor, gave himself untiringly to the business of looking after the comfort of his guests. What we say of Brother Chambers we say also of Rev. R. W. Vaughan, our host at New Iberia, in entertaining the Louisiana brethren. Saturday and Sunday we spent at New Iberia. Great crowds attended the Conference and the religious services, and notwithstanding the disagreeable weather, everybody appeared to be happy.

The Louisiana brethren, like those of Mississippi, had been blessed with success during the year, and they were full of hope. Louisiana is a peculiar and difficult field, and the men who cultivate it are heroic and faithful. The figures given by many of them, which indicate their success, are sometimes painfully small, but, as we heard one brother say: "The net increase of one member in the church in some places in Louisiana is equivalent to ten or a dozen in Mississippi." Large sections are entirely dominated by Romanism, and in places Protestantism has barely a footing—in some places, none at all. New Iberia, for example, is a town of 8 500, yet for the year 1900 we had only 214 members reported. The Presbyterians and Episcopalians are no better off, numerically, than we are. The Baptists, one of the churches of the people, are not represented at all. Other sections are fully as much under the influence of Romanism. This makes the work of Protestantism exceedingly difficult. All honor to those noble workmen.

Bishop Fitzgerald presided over the Louisiana Conference. Though not in robust health, he was able to meet the demands of the occasion, and his presidency gave very general satisfaction. He is greatly beloved, and many earnest prayers were made for the restoration of his health and the continuation of his usefulness.

Here we must stop. The printer says the paper is full. More anon.

The Epworth Organ helps the preacher

When the singing has sparkle and snap and power in it, the preacher finds it easier to preach. There is nothing like good rousing music to put the people in a listening spirit.

The Epworth organ has a sweet, strong, sustaining voice. It reaches the people back by the doors and helps make the whole congregation join in. The singers like it because it's so easy to sing with.

The organist likes it too, because it's so easy to play. The touch is responsive, and the pedals work easily.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Have You Rheumatism? Do You Have Bladder or Uric Acid Trouble?

Pain or dull ache in the back is unmistakable evidence of kidney trouble. It is Nature's timely warning to show you that the track of health is not clear.

If these danger signals are unheeded, more serious results are sure to follow; Bright's disease which is the worst form of kidney trouble may steal upon you.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of the world famous kidney and bladder remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. A trial will convince anyone—and you may have a sample bottle free by mail.

BACKACHE AND URINARY TROUBLE.

Among the many famous investigated cases of Swamp-Root the one we publish this week for the benefit of our readers speaks in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy.

DR. KILMER & CO., Binghamton, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:—When I wrote you last March for a sample bottle of Swamp Root, my wife was a great sufferer from backache, rheumatism and urinary trouble. After trying the sample bottle, she bought a large bottle here at the drug store. That did her so much good she bought more. The effect of Swamp-Root was wonderful and almost immediate. She has felt no return of the old trouble since.

Oct., 1901. F. THOMAS

427 Best St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Lame back is only one symptom of kidney trouble—one of many. Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are, obliged to pass water often during the day and to get up many times at night, inability to hold your urine, smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, catarrh of the bladder, uric acid, constant headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, irregular heart-beating, rheumatism, bloating, irritability, woeful feeling lack of ambition, loss of flesh, sallow complexion.

If your water when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

In taking Swamp Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Swamp Root is the great discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist. Hospitals use it with wonderful success in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients and use it in their own families, because they recognize in Swamp-Root the greatest and most successful remedy.

To Prove What SWAMP-ROOT, the Great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy, Will do for YOU, Every Reader of "Christian Advocate" May Have a Sample Bottle Absolutely Free by Mail.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you free by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book of wonderful Swamp Root testimonials. Be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

If you are already convinced that Swamp Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

Home Circle.

Nannie's Chance.

Nannie had to run home at recess to have her new dress fitted; so she did not know of the trouble in her playhouse. Her two dollies lay on their faces in the sunshine, although she had left them sleeping on a bed of leaves under one of the great old trees. A closet that she and her friend Trudie had built, with bricks and boards, and that had held the best china, was torn down, and the china scattered about in the dirt. In fact, everything belonging to Nannie was in confusion. The truth is, Louise Barrows had "moved in" to her playhouse, bag and baggage, and set her luncheon table under the very tree where Nannie's china closet had stood, and placed her doll carriage where Nannie's bed of leaves had been.

"She isn't going to have this nice big tree for her house any longer!" said Louise. "It is the best tree in the yard, and she seems to think just because her grandfather used to own it she has a right to it. Fanny Adams and I want this place ourselves."

So, before the bell rang, all the mischief had been done. Some of the boys had looked on and laughed.

"There'll be fun when Nannie gets back!" Stephen Brush said. "I guess Louise Barrows' things will go out from under that tree quicker than they went in. Nannie had that place for her playhouse long before her grandfather gave this grove for a schoolhouse."

Three minutes after school was dismissed that afternoon Nannie stood looking at her spoiled playhouse. How her brown eyes flashed! She had sprung forward ready to tip over Louise Barrows' table and tumble her dolly into the dirt. Some of the boys who were watching her called out: "Go it, Nannie! tumble out her things; it will serve her right."

But Nannie didn't; she stood still.

"Shall we help you to pull down her stove and dishes and everything?" asked some of the girls, who were eager to see mischief begin.

"No," said Nannie. "I'm not going to touch her things; let her keep the tree. Come on, Trudie; let's take that tree over by the spring and build up our closet again."

So two little girls went to work tugging bricks and boards and dishes and setting up again a ruined home. Louise came rushing out, expecting trouble, but nobody had disturbed her. Two or three boys were looking on astonished.

"Say," said Stephen Brush, who was older than Nannie, "what made you give up to Louise Barrows that way? We boys thought you would fight."

"It was on account of Isaac," said Nannie, who went to the same Sunday-school that Stephen did.

"On account of what?" said Stephen.

"Don't you know about Isaac? He kept giving up the wells his father had dug, so as to have peace, you know. And then there's the golden text: 'Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.'"

Said Stephen, "You're a queer little chick!" Then, after a minute: "Your name isn't Isaac!"

"No," said Nannie, softly; "but I promised grandmother I would try to be one of the 'children of God.'"—Presbyterian.

How Rover Saved Punch.

BY ANNA GUILBERT MAHON.

Kathleen stood at the window looking down at the snow. It was the biggest snow-storm she had ever seen; she was sure it was going to be a blizzard such as she had heard her father and mother talk about. The wind was blowing a terrific gale, hurling the snow into high drifts in some places and leaving the ground almost bare in others. She wished with all her might she could be out in it, plunging through the soft drifts with her little rubber boots and feeling the soft, cool flakes on her face. But Kathleen had a bad cold and a sore throat, and the doctor said she must stay in the warm bedroom.

"Well, I declare!" exclaimed the little girl, "if there isn't Punch! How in the world did he get out?"

Punch was about as small as it is possible for a black spaniel to be. He was Kathleen's great pet, and was very much spoiled in consequence. He had the prettiest bed to lie on and the daintiest food to eat; he scorned what an ordinary dog would like, and he thought himself twice as good as any other dog in the neighborhood.

Next door the boys had a big Newfoundland, and he and Punch were sworn enemies. Punch growled fiercely if Rover even walked past the house, and if he could snap at the big dog's heels and then run to a safe distance, he felt very proud indeed. Rover treated his little neighbor with very lofty scorn, although once, when Punch was very annoying, he caught him and gave him such a shaking that the little dog was thoroughly frightened and did not venture near him for many a day.

"Mother! Mother!" called Kathleen; "Punch is out; call him in!" But there was no response from the kitchen.

Meanwhile Punch was enjoying himself to the fullest extent, climbing over mounds of snow and shaking the flakes from his back. But his fun was soon to end, for, as he started to cross the street, he stepped suddenly down the curb into a huge drift of snow and went down, down, until there was no little black dog to be seen.

Kathleen turned pale with fright.

"Mother!" she screamed, but her mother was too far away to hear.

Kathleen looked up and down the street. There was no one in sight. What should she do? The doctor said she must not leave the room and her mother had expressly forbidden her to go into the cold hall. Punch would be buried in the snow bank and there was no one to save him!

Just then a big black object came running up the street and went straight to the place where Punch had disappeared.

"Rover!" cried Kathleen, and watched breathlessly the big dog as he commenced to scratch at the snow bank. How fast he worked, first with one big black foot and then with the other; clods of snow flew in all directions.

The minutes seemed hours to Kathleen, but finally the big dog's efforts were rewarded and a small black ball rolled out, and Punch, very cold and frightened, shook himself and crept slowly toward the house, with Rover jumping up and down beside him, wagging his great tail and barking joyfully.

Rover and Punch are now the best friends it is possible for two dogs to be. The great black Newfoundland and the tiny spaniel are often seen walking and playing together, and any one in the neighborhood can tell you how the big one saved the little one from freezing to death in the snow bank.—Lutheran World.

A Perfect Home.

The most perfect home I ever saw was a little house into the sweet incense of whose fires went no costly things. A thousand dollars served as a year's living for father, mother, and three children. But the mother was the creator of the home; her relations with the children were the most beautiful I have ever seen; every inmate of the house involuntarily looked into her face for the keynote of the day, and it always rang clear. She always has been and always will be my ideal of a mother, wife, and home-maker. If to her quick brain, loving heart, and exquisite taste had been added the appliances of wealth and enlargements of wide culture, hers would have been absolutely the ideal home. As it was, it was the best I have ever seen.—Helen Hunt Jackson.

Secret of a Long Life.

You sometimes see a woman whose old age is as exquisite as was the perfect bloom of her youth. You wonder how this has come about. You wonder how it is her life has been a long and happy one. Here are some of the reasons:

She knew how to forget disagreeable things.

She mastered the art of saying pleasant things.

She did not expect too much from her friends.

She made whatever work came to her congenial.

She retained her illusions, and did not believe all the world wicked and unkind.

She relieved the miserable and sympathized with the sorrowful. She never forgot that kind words and a smile cost nothing but are priceless treasures to the discouraged.

She did unto others as she would be done by, and now that old age has come to her and there is a halo of white hair about her head, she is loved and considered. This is the secret of a long life and a happy one.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

R-I-P-A-N-S

One said I had chronic dyspepsia, others claimed I was suffering with nervousness and kidney trouble. The last doctor told mother to take me away to the country. I could not eat nor sleep. My aunt, where I was staying, persuaded me to try Ripans Tabules. The fifth 5 cent box relieved me a little. I was so glad I kept on taking them. In all I had taken nine boxes. God bless Ripans Tabules! May they be spread abroad to those that are afflicted as I was. They have done for me what doctors could not do.

The Five-Cent packet is enough for an ordinary occasion. The family bottle, 60 cents, contains a supply for a year.

"White Man Heap Lazy."

The American Indian is not noted for his fondness for hard labor, but, like a great many other people, he likes to see other folks work industriously. The white man who works hard is to them the "heap good white man." A Western paper relates that a group of braves sat in the shade one day watching a group of laborers who were constructing a grade for a branch railroad in Montana. They were commenting upon the workmen and their work, when a bicyclist, the first they had ever seen, came riding along the newly completed grade. He had got off the train at the last station, and was going to the fort, a little farther on.

The Indians watched the wheelman without a word until he passed beyond a knoll, which hid him from view; then they expressed their sentiments concerning him.

"No good white man," one remarked. "No," answered another, with great scorn, "heap lazy white man—sits down to walk."—Presbyterian.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

Bro. P. B. Myers, the father of our esteemed Bro. S. B. Myers, of the North Mississippi Conference, was born in Shelby county, Ala., Dec. 29, 1824, and moved to Mississippi in 1844, and died in great peace at the home of his daughter, Mrs. M. P. Whitten, in the town of Cold Water, Miss., Nov. 15, 1901, after a week of severe illness from pneumonia. Bro. Myers professed faith in Christ and joined the Protestant Methodist Church at the age of fifteen, but soon after coming to Mississippi he joined the M. E. Church, South, in which he lived a consistent and faithful member till God called him from his labor and suffering on earth to his reward above. Bro. Myers was married three times. The name of his first wife and the date of his second marriage are not at my command. He was first married in October, 1844; he was last married in 1866 to Miss Jennie Wesson, of Hudsonville, Miss., who preceded him to the better world about a year and a half. He was the father of six children, seven of whom survive to mourn his death. He was a tender husband, a kind father, a good citizen, and a devout Christian. P. B. Myers' name stands on the Quarterly Conference records as an official member, where he served faithfully for more than thirty years. He was large-hearted and hospitable. He loved his church and preachers, and gave liberally to their support. Doubtless, all the pious and breathing elders that served Old Shady Hill" Church remember with pleasure the warm reception they always received at Bro. Myers' home. Besides having a large family of his own to support and educate, he had an invalid widowed mother and three old sisters that hung heavily upon his hands for maintenance for many years. All these, with the many reverses of business with he had, made the duties of life press hard and heavily upon him at times; yet, with unwavering faith in God and with a fixed purpose to meet the duties of life bravely, he never gave up. Five years ago the wife of his bosom was stricken with consumption, and confined to her room and bed till God took her from him. In this he displayed the spirit of a Christian as he set nothingly by her couch laid, spared neither labor nor money to relieve her of her sufferings. In this naturally depressed of mind, and with old age upon him, unfortunately had one of his legs, under the bodily pain it gave him, was a great affliction, as it rendered him, as he afterward said to me, to provide and wait upon his dying wife. "For all this sinned not, nor charged God foolishly," it said, "I will serve him, though he slay me." In the language of his dear preacher and friend "He had a hard fight with the forces of hell, but in all things he maintained his integrity." I knew Bro. Myers well. I visited his home frequently when I was a boy, and afterwards had the honor of being his pastor. I loved him for his noble spirit and the loftiness of his purpose. A good man has gone to his reward.

J. W. ANDERSON.

Bro. PETER COLLINS was born in Butler County, Ala., Aug. 11, 1838, and died Nov. 18, 1901, aged sixty-three years three months and seven days. He came to Louisiana in 1845, and has been a loyal citizen of this State his home ever since. He was a faithful soldier for four years in the late War. Bro. Collins has been in Onachita parish ever since the war. All agree in saying that his integrity had no blemish. Bro. Collins raised a large and honored family. They have the life of society where they live. One son, Samuel M., is an A. M. of Vanderbilt University; and also, a graduate of Centenary, Jackson. He has been a member of the Methodist Church, South, from boyhood. He carried the church, attended worship, and many preachers have found rest in his pleasant home? He took sick with something like grippe, and lingered for several days. At this time, seeming to know that death was at hand, he revealed his life to loved ones and friends. He said that he had often felt like praising God in church when he did not. He seemed to regret this. But all was clear. He left clear and undoubted testimony of salvation. We commend his dear ones to the Lord. May the children emulate their father's noblest virtues!

LAWRENCE SEARS was born in McComb City, Miss., Sept. 11, 1869. He came South many years ago, and on Jan. 6, 1901, was married to Miss Nancy D. Birch, of Kentucky. In October, 1901, just a few weeks before his death, he was baptized and received into the Methodist Church. He did not, however, join the profession because of [illegible]

Mrs. MARGARET CURTIS LYNCH departed this life on the thirtieth of November at the residence of her son, Capt. Hugh Lynch, in Franklin, La., at the age of eighty-seven years. She was the oldest member of the Methodist Church in Patterson, La. She lived here for many years before the war. In 1859, when I first knew her, she was then in the prime of life, and faithful in all church duties. She was a noble Christian woman, a pillar in the church. A more consecrated Christian woman I was never associated with. She was "the salt of the earth." Many will rise up in judgment and call her blessed. She was beloved by all who knew her. She was afflicted for many years, but was always patient and cheerful, and rejoicing in hope of her reward at the end. Her funeral was attended by a very large congregation from the church in Patterson, Sunday evening, at three o'clock. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

JNO. A. MILLER.

LILY LUCILE DAVIS, little daughter of Pomplan and Alice Davis, was born April 27, 1899. She was an exceedingly bright and beautiful child. She could sing before she could walk, and was always delighted when the children would have their little "protracted meetings," and was anxious to take part in the singing. She was indeed a token of God's love, bringing sunshine and joy into the home of the loud young parents. But she was too pure to stay in this earthly home, for the death angel came and took her on Sept. 17, 1901. We are sure that little Lily is now in the kingdom of heaven, and beckoning father and mother and brothers and sisters to come home. We would say to the sorrowing ones to weep not. The Lord doeth all things well, and, no doubt, God took her to heaven to draw earthly friends closer to him. And let us live true to God, and soon we will all join in the blood-washed throng.

ADELIA MURPHY.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, God, in his infinite wisdom, has moved from her earthly home Mrs. EVIE RULE, who has been an active member of our Ladies' Aid Society at Ruleville, Miss., since its organization; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Mrs. Rule the Ladies' Aid Society has lost one of its most faithful and beloved members, and that we will miss her from among us.

2. That while we sadly deplore the loss of our friend and sister member, we humbly submit to the will of Him who "doeth all things well."

3. That we imitate her virtues, double our diligence to advance the cause of Christ, and pray that her mantle and a double portion of God's spirit fall upon our society.

4. That we extend to the bereaved husband, little daughter, aged father, and devoted sister, our deepest sympathies, and point them to the promise of a new life, where parting shall be no more.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the bereaved family, put upon the Minutes of the Ladies' Aid Society, and sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Committee: Mrs. Lily Garner, Mrs. Evelyn Campbell, Mrs. Mary Langston, Mrs. S. A. Marshall.

SAVES LIFE

Willard, Ill., August 1, 1900.
I was in bad health this spring and could not sit up in bed for four weeks. When I was confined my child died. When I began to sit up I felt so weak and had such terrible pains in my back and hips. I had kidney trouble and falling of the womb. I also had hysterical spells. I was in a bad condition when I received your "Ladies' Birthday Almanac" and read the advertisement of Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught. Since April 20th, I have taken four bottles of Wine of Cardui and three packages of Thedford's Black-Draught. I feel like a new person now. I can do all my work and can walk out to see any of my neighbors. I believe I would have been in the grave had it not been for Wine of Cardui. IT SAVED MY LIFE.
Mrs. ALICE DAVIS.

It is well that women are more patient than men. Few men could bear the bitter pangs, the agony and distress that women endure. Thousands of women have come to look upon suffering as a duty of their sex. But there are many instances of this heroic fortitude which now renders unnecessary. Women need no longer suffer for modesty's sake. Wine of Cardui brings relief to modest women in the privacy of their homes. Many of the best homes in this city are never without this great medicine. It cures whites and failing of the womb and completely eradicates these dragging periodical pains. Mrs. Davis' cure shows you conclusively what you may expect if you follow her example and take Wine of Cardui. Thedford's Black-Draught aids Wine of Cardui by regulating the stomach and bowels. When you ask your druggist for these medicines, be sure you get them. It was Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black Draught that saved Mrs. Davis' life. Never take a substitute.

WINE OF CARDUI

Catarrh and Consumption

I have spent nearly 30 years in the treatment of the above named troubles and believe I have effected more permanent cures than any specialist in the history of medicine. As I must soon retire from active life, I will, from this time on, send the means of treatment and cure as used in my practice, Free and post-paid to every reader of this paper who suffers from these loathsome, dangerous and disgusting diseases. My treatment will positively give prompt relief and cure in the worst cases. This is a sincere offer which anyone is free to accept. Address, PROFESSOR J. A. Lawrence, 114 West 31st St., New York.

EWS OF THE WEEK.

The Federation of Labor will meet next year in New Orleans.

Much damage was done to live stock in Texas by the cold wave.

Rivers are rising rapidly near Pittsburg, causing much loss to shipping.

The German Emperor thinks the German workman drinks too much beer.

Public men generally denounce the verdict of the Schley court of inquiry.

It is reported that American authorities anticipate a general uprising in Luzon.

Edison, the inventor, discredits the report that Marconi had succeeded in telegraphing without wires across the Atlantic.

British shipping suffered severely from the storms along the coast of England.

War between Chili and Argentina is probable. Chili will not make concessions.

The Maryland friends of Rear Admiral Schley will seek to vindicate him in Congress.

An Anglo-Spanish steel corporation has been organized to fight the United States Steel Trust.

Devastating floods are causing widespread damage in the Lehigh Valley, Pennsylvania.

Americans in the Philippines are taking steps to crush the insurrection in Batangas province.

The Northeastern Railway of England ordered twenty-six locomotives of American manufacture.

The British blue book shows an enormous death rate among Boer prisoners in South Africa.

The last obstacles in the way of the United States purchasing the Danish West Indies have been removed.

Senator Foraker (Rep.), of Ohio, said the verdict of the Schley court of inquiry was "disgraceful and shameful."

Secretary Hay has accepted the invitation to address Congress on the occasion of the McKinley memorial exercises.

Mrs. Helen Post, a Christian Scientist, was arrested at Jacksonville, Fla., for obtaining money under false pretenses.

Many persons have been made homeless and property valued at $500,000 was destroyed by fire at Salem, W. Va.

A corporation, capitalized at $600,000, has been formed to establish an Irish National Museum at the St. Louis World's Fair.

Mgr. Chapelle has discussed with the President conditions relative to the property of the Roman Catholic Church in the Philippines.

The President has declined to accept Andrew Carnegie's offer to give $10,000,000 of the Steel Trust's stock to establish a university at Washington.

Gen. Nelson A. Miles, Commanding General of the United States Army, said he was willing to take Admiral Dewey's judgment regarding the Schley verdict.

A resolution was introduced in the Senate thanking Admiral Schley and the officers and men under his command during the battle off Santiago July 3, 1898.

Secretary Long, at the request of Admiral Schley, has consented not to approve the verdict of the Schley court of inquiry for the present and not to dissolve the court.

The Jessup party of Northern capitalists and promoters interested in a plan to establish docks and shipyards in New Orleans and Mobile spent a day on the river front looking over eligible sites and examining the Johnson Iron Works plants.

The judges in the Schley case have presented two reports. A majority report made by Benham and Ramsay condemns Schley on eleven points. He is censured for the retrograde movement, for disobedience of the department's orders, and the "Brooklyn's" famous loop, and for alleged injustice to Hodgson. The minority report signed by Admiral Dewey is favorable to Schley. Dewey says Schley moved with dispatch, his blockades were effective, and that he was the senior officer at Santiago, in absolute command, and is entitled to the credit.

Great Weather Calendar.

The Chattanooga Medicine Co., the manufacturers of McElree's Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught, have just issued the 1902 edition of the Cardui Weather Chart and Calendar. This calendar has sprung into universal prominence by accurately foretelling the Galveston flood and predicting the droughts and floods of the past summer, a year ahead of each occurrence. This office has just received one of these calendars, which consists of twelve sheets of paper, 13x20 inches in size, all fastened together with a gilt tin strip and a brass loop hanger. Each sheet contains the calendar for one month in large figures that can be read across the room. Under the figures patent weather signals indicating Prof. De Voe's Weather forecasts for every day in the year appear. We understand a few copies of it can be secured by sending 10 cents apiece in postage stamps to The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

The Commoner.

(Mr. Bryan's Paper)

The Commoner has attained, within six months from date of the first issue a circulation of 100,000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the discussion of political, economic, and social problems. To the columns of The Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts, and his review of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

The Commoner's regular subscription price is $1 per year. We have arranged with Mr. Bryan whereby we can furnish his paper and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE together for one year for $2.25. The regular subscription price of the two papers when subscribed for separately is $3 net. Where no distance is made by personally dropping ten cents extra will be charged to cover postage.

Glances at the World.

The Schley Court of Inquiry, consisting of Admiral Dewey, and Rear Admirals Benham and Ramsay, made report last week to Secretary Long, of the navy. There were, in fact, two reports—a majority report, signed by Rear Admirals Benham and Ramsay, and a minority report, signed by Admiral Dewey. The minority report was adverse to Admiral Schley on eleven counts, or on all the charges preferred except that of cowardice. His personal courage on the day of the great battle is commended. The report of Admiral Dewey favored Admiral Schley on every count, and even went so far as to say that Admiral Schley was the ranking officer on the day of the battle, was in entire command of the squadron, and entitled to all the honor of the victory. Without impeaching the integrity of the authors of the majority report, which, of course, will be received by the Naval Department as the official report, it will not be accepted by the American people as a just and impartial verdict, inasmuch as it leaves Admiral Schley under a cloud, and the people believe, after reading the testimony given before the Court, that the charges were not sustained. Admiral Schley's counsel filed exceptions to the report, and lodged them with the Secretary of the Navy, and they will be reviewed in connection with the report. What the final outcome will be no one can tell. The case may rest just where it is. Resolutions are before Congress, but many, among them some of Admiral Schley's friends, are of the opinion that the matter should not go before that body, lost a political turn be given it, and more harm than good result. Admiral Dewey's report will be accepted by the people. In their estimation it fully offsets the report of the majority, because he has had experience as a commander which the majority had not, and because they just naturally have more confidence in the intelligence and ability of Admiral Dewey than in the signers of the majority report. The country is with Admiral Schley. And if the Secretary of the Navy and President Roosevelt side with the majority, there is no telling what may be the outcome.

Postmaster-General Smith has resigned, and in his stead Mr. Roosevelt has selected Mr. Henry C. Payne, prominent in Republican ranks, as his successor. Mr. Smith will retire about the middle of January, and resume duty as editor of the Philadelphia Press. This is the first break in Mr. Roosevelt's Cabinet. The break, however, does not come as the result of any dissatisfaction, and the President desired to retain the whole Cabinet as Mr. Mckinley left it. The appointment of Mr. Payne, though, it is said, is significant, as it is thought to foreshadow the President's purpose, as occasion domands, to surround himself by his personal supporters. And, as Mr. Payne is a member of the Republican National Committee, and favors the cutting down of Southern Republican representation in the National Convention, giving the South representation in the convention according to the number of Republican votes cast, instead of population, it is thought that his selection indicates the President's views. If so, it is to be regarded as a serious blow to what is called "the Republican machine" in the South. Personally, we know nothing about the matter, and only give the statement for what it is worth. The retiring Postmaster-General has greatly enhanced the postoffice business of the country. It is to be hoped that his successor will be equally as diligent, and do as much good.

The United States Senate, on Monday, the sixteenth, ratified the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, and thus "opened the way for the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama by the United States. Senator Morgan's bill for the acquisition from Nicaragua and Costa Rica of the right of way via the Nicaragua route was authorized and favorably reported by the committee on isthmian canals. Senator Morgan later presented this report to the Senate, accompanying the return of the bill with a voluminous report upon the general subject of a canal across the isthmus." This action disposes of a matter that has been before the country for many years past. The construction of the canal will follow in due time, and will be greatly to the advantage of the trade of the United States. It will be under the exclusive control of our government.

Marconi, the great electrician, seems likely to eclipse Edison, the wizard of Menlo Park. He has, without doubt, succeeded in his wireless telegraphy for short distances. Now it is reported that he has, by the same method, established communication across the ocean. If this is true, it will so cheapen the transmission of messages as to practically break down the ocean cable business. Marconi has so far succeeded, and is so sure of his ultimate triumph that the cable monopolists are scared, and are making efforts to stop his work. He will, it is said, temporarily cease, and on the other hand, the Anglo-American Cable Company, in view of public feeling, will make large concessions. The world moves!

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

CLOSING MOMENTS.

BY REV. R. L. PHILLIPS.

The closing moments of the eighty-eighth session of the Mississippi Conference were sublime. Just on the eve of the announcement of appointments, Bishop Morrison led us in singing Hymn No. 751, "Blest be the tie that binds," followed by prayer, in which he prayed for "the man on the hard work," and for "the man who should fall on the field," and for all in "the close places." Tears flowed freely under the sound of his pathetic voice. Then followed a few preliminary remarks, in which he said: "When you go to a work, go to stay; and when you quit a work, quit it. Make the people love you. On my third charge a woman said she did not like me, but up to the last I told her she did, and, sure enough, she did. Two things I have desired to do, but have failed: First, to give each preacher a better appointment than the one he received; and, second, to give each charge a better preacher than the one it got. Brethren, set out your stakes. If your charges are not good, make them good. Mobilize your forces; put everybody to work. . . Quit turning over the barrel." In a few moments the appointments were read, and a new epoch in the history of many preachers, charges and individuals was ushered in; the benediction, and then "a swarm" on the Conference floor, a Babel of voices—two and two—exchanging plans, charges, parsonages. Like magic the change is wrought from a conventional movement of an assemblage to an intense personal individualism, this individualism to go in diverging lines to every part of the southern half of Mississippi, carrying with it the 'esprit de corps' of the body. What a system! What is equal in execution, in rapid change and mobilization of the Methodist itinerancy? Sickness, weariness and toil may afflict; want may come, loved ones die, vilnperation assail, mobs attack, and yet—yet under the power of Almighty God, when these messengers come in from the field, they are put in ranks and mobilized by the Holy Ghost, and returned with the zeal of seraphs and the courage of Spartans to press the battle to the gates against sin and Satan. Hail, ye sons of Wesley! Thus did thy great and holy fathers turn back the darkness of Britain. Yes, when despair had seized the saints but a few, those gospel knights of the eighteenth century, panoplied with the Methodist armor, stemmed the corrupt stream which had engulfed the very throne itself. Compare the spiritual condition of England in 1700 with England in 1800. God revealed to the world what he could do with Methodism then; shall we not permit him to do the same in the twentieth century? Why despair at the gathering of mighty evil forces around our horizon? What though Arians, Antinomians, Materialists, Deists, multiply into myriads? What though a Charles II. turn the palace into a brothel, and a Walpole arise to set an example of contempt for all integrity, honesty, and virtue in social and political life? Under God, what Methodism has done, she can do again. God bless you, my brethren, noble and brave as you are, and mighty as is the church we are in; we will be needed. The battle is on us; the last days are surely here. (II. Tim. iii, 1 8.) Study the picture. Multitudes will not now "endure sound doctrine." Study the Mormon map, the Christian Scientists, the anarchists, and the rapid congestion of wickedness in town, city, and country places. The revolver to intimidate, and the purse to entice, will be used in effort to deflect many a faithful pastor from duty. But, glory to God, my brethren, Methodism was God's heritage in the eighteenth century; let us be sure she remains in his hands—then what? Let her altars flame as they did in the Wesleyan age; let every vestige of her fibre be surrendered to the Holy Ghost, and America, China, and the world shall not be able to stand before her.

ROBERT L. PHILLIPS.

McComb City, Miss., Dec. 16, 1901.

THE BAPTISM OF NOVATIAN.

BY A CIRCUIT RIDER.

Many immersionists claim that the baptism of Novatian by sprinkling, A. D. 250, was the "first departure" from the primitive custom of baptizing by immersion. So says Dr. Ewd. Hiscox in his book, "The Baptist Short Method," and he makes the following quotation in support, taken presumedly from Eusebius, who wrote A. D. 313-340. The quotation is exactly as made by Dr. Hiscox. "He (Novatian) fell into a grievous distemper, and it being supposed that he would die immediately, he received baptism, being besprinkled with water on the bed whereupon he lay, if that can be termed baptism."

The above quotation, which Dr. Hiscox (and others) attributes to Eusebius, makes him question or doubt the validity of Novatian's baptism, when the truth is, the mode of his baptism was never questioned by any of the fathers. The sentence, "if that (sprinkling) can be termed baptism," is a misrepresentation in toto, admitted even by Baptists who are more honest.

The exact Greek words which Eusebius used can be furnished, and according to reputed scholars, Eusebius said as follows: "To him indeed the origin of his profession was Satan, who entered into and dwelt in him a long time; who, being assisted by the exorcists while attacked with an obstinate disease, and being supposed at the point of death, received it (baptism) in the bed on which he lay, by being sprinkled—if, indeed, it is proper to say that such (a wicked) person received it." (B. VI, c. xliii, p. 401, Sec. 15.)

A few additional quotations just here will help the reader to understand Novatian's baptism beyond a peradventure. One Cornelius, an opponent of his, wrote as follows to Fabius, Bishop of Antioch: "It was not lawful for any one that had been baptized in his bed in time of sickness, as he (Novatian) had been, to be admitted to any office of the clergy."

The reason is made plain by a canon of the church, which reads: "He that is baptized when he is sick ought not to be made a priest (for his coming to the faith is not voluntary, but from necessity), unless his diligence and faith do afterward prove commendable, or the scarcity of men fit for the office require it."

Cyprian also wrote (A. D. 260): "If any one think that they obtain no benefit, as having only an affusion of the water of salvation, do not let him mistake so far as that the parties, if they recover of their sickness, should be baptized again. And if they must not be baptized again, that have already been sanctified with the baptism of the church, why should they have cause of scandal given them concerning their religion and the pardon of their Lord?"

While the church, a couple or more centuries after apostolic times, went mostly after the trine immersion naked, the reader observes that even then sprinkling was practiced in the case of sickness, styled by such writers as Cyprian and others, sanctification "with the baptism of the church."

Even if Eusebius had penned the sentence as attributed to him by immersionists, it would only prove how thoroughly immersion had supplanted the practice of an earlier day, and how generally the fathers of that time went after the innovation.

CHANGE THE DATE.

The weather during the recent session of the North Mississippi Annual Conference was very disagreeable on account of continued rains. That is usually, if not always, the condition during the sitting of the Conference. To-day, Dec. 14, the ground is covered with sleet, and many of the public roads are well-nigh impassable. Some of our preachers are to-day on the road to their new appointments, with their wives and little ones.

Some of them will go into parsonages in not too good repair. They will find no fuel ready to make a fire, and nothing in the larder. The suffering, both in the flesh and in the mind, incident to these conditions, who can tell? No one! This is an experience that none can relate.

In view of these facts, why continue to meet at a time universally acknowledged to be unfavorable? Let the time for our annual meeting be changed to April. Besides having a more pleasant time for the session of the Conference, more pleasant weather in which, and better roads over which to move, there are other considerations that commend a change of date. The stewards and pastors will have the entire cotton season in which to look after the collections. The collections can all be gotten in hand and remitted to the treasurers of the various Boards in advance of the sessions. This will give the treasurers of the Boards time to meet with the Boards and take part in the executive work given into their charge. As it is, the treasurers must be absent from the sessions of the Conference, or from the meetings of the Boards, or absent from both, counting and depositing their funds; and then must sometimes sit up till twelve o'clock P. M. checking up their envelopes and getting off a trial balance, in an effort to "establish a parity" between the money in bank and the amount called for by the envelopes.

It will be a relief to our Bishops. One who has never tried it, but would like to (let delegates to our General Conference make a note of this), imagines that it is a great strain on the physical, mental, and sometimes moral, fiber of a Bishop to hold an Annual Conference. And when one Bishop has to hold three or four Conferences in immediate succession, it would seem that the strain would increase by leaps and bounds.

Mr. Editor, I move the reference of the foregoing considerations to a committee composed of all the members of the North Mississippi Conference, with the request that they report on the first day of our next annual session. May be if we begin the agitation now, a change can be effected by the opening of the next century.

AN APPEAL.

On the night of Dec. 13 a cyclone completely demolished the Methodist Church at Chester, Miss. We are going to rebuild, and ask you to help. Chester is one of the chartered points of a contemplated railroad. Friend, place yourself in our condition, and if you love and appreciate the church, help us. Send contributions to L. J. Weaver, Chester, Miss.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The following appreciative note we take from the Carrollton Conservative. The kindly sentiments expressed are highly appreciated.

The Conference at Winona last week was a great occasion. The Conference made a profound impression on Winona, and Winona made a most pleasing and favorable impression on the Conference. It was a frequent remark of delegates that the Conference had never been so handsomely entertained. The presidency of Bishop Morrison gave great satisfaction. His sermon on Sunday was a masterpiece of pulpit oratory—great in thought, felicitous in expression. The sermon of Dr. Barbee, of Nashville, was pronounced one of the greatest ever heard.

The reports made to the Conference showed good degree of prosperity during the past year. There had been thousands of conversions and additions to the church. In the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference, comprising half of the State, there are forty-five thousand members, served by one hundred and fifty pastors. Churches and parsonages have been repaired during the year, and many new ones built. There was also an advance in all the various benevolent collections during the year. Mr. Johnson was returned to Carrollton for another year, and with the co-operation of all the members, a successful year will result. He will preach to-morrow (Sunday), and hopes to see all the members present on the first Sunday of the new Conference year.

Carrollton made the best report on missions and Twentieth Century Fund of any church in North Mississippi.

The District Conference will convene here in the Spring or Summer of 1902, and it is hoped that Bishop Candler will preside.

ITEMS FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Our Conference secretary, Mrs. Nellie Somerville, sends forth a cheering note this quarter, and we gladly "pass it on." For the first time in her experience as Conference secretary all reports are in on time. Only one who has filled the office of Conference secretary can appreciate how very much this means. Unless the auxiliary secretary reports to the district secretary, and she in turn to the Conference secretary, the quarterly reports of the latter are necessarily delayed, and often even sent off without hearing from some of them. Promptness is a characteristic greatly to be desired in business of any kind, and it is also one in which many of our women are sadly deficient. But we are learning business habits, and this comes among others. We thank and congratulate the various secretaries for this improvement.

Progress has been made in Aberdeen, Columbus, Corinth and Grenada districts, and the Sardis district secretary considers her district in better condition than for several years. Sardis district excels all in the number pledged to tithing—quite an important item.

Grenada district reports most visits to sick and strangers—316. Winona district has more subscribers to Our Homes than any other district—38. This small number offers matter for reflection. How can we be interested in that concerning which we do not inform ourselves? How many members—yes, and officers—in our societies who do not subscribe for our own organ! Sisters, let us do better in this respect.

Holly Springs district does not send a report that is to be compared with the others, as there are only two auxiliaries in the district. The work of the Holly Springs local union is always good.

Pickens and Maben, in Durant district, both do good work. For district work, as shown by recent reports, Columbus district is best of all. The Week of Prayer was observed by all auxiliaries in Columbus district. There is more regularity in meeting, and much good local work is done.

On the whole, it is the opinion of our Conference secretary that, in point of real, home missionary work, this quarter surpasses all previous ones.

Our treasurer's report tells what is doing along financial lines.

We would be glad to have any items of interest pertaining to the work for publication. Without your help, we can not fill your column.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

From this date no attention will be paid to manuscripts that come to this office rolled. Let them be folded and put in an envelope. And please, brethren and sisters, use ink. Pencil writing, after passing through the mail, is often hard to read. We speak both for the printer and the editor.

A strange piece of news has been going the rounds of the papers to the effect that the Bishops of the M. E. Church, at their late annual meeting, authorized the deaconesses of their church to act as evangelists. If the announcement is true (we have not seen it contradicted), we suppose our uniformed sisters will also preach as well as visit and minister to the poor. We dare say that is what the movement is tending to. That is what some of the sisters desire.

We asked a wise brother a few days since why some men could so readily detect and denounce sins in others while they themselves were guilty of like heinous offences. "On the principle," said he, "that it takes a thief to catch a thief." To us it seems that a man who is jealous of the honor of the church and the Christian name ought to consider himself as much bound to maintain that honor as he is to see that others maintain it. To be indifferent is good evidence that his conscience is improperly educated and untrustworthy.

The Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate gives its readers some information on the proper use of the words "haste" and "hurry." This is well, and while at the work, it would not be amiss to give them a short lecture on several misused words; for example: "hustler," "posted," "meet," etc. We have known many fairly intelligent men to ask the Lord to "make us fit meat (meet) for the Master's use." We often hear of men being "well posted." Nothing is commoner than to speak of an energetic man as a "hustler."

If there are any good reasons why Southern Methodism should maintain its name and separate existence, and carry on its work in its own way at home, those same reasons ought to hold good for the same purposes in foreign lands. In the absence of legislation we do not understand how the interests of two churches, involving thousands of dollars, can be merged into one. Yet we learn that the General Missionary Committee of the M. E. Church, in session several weeks since, appropriated $40,000 for the purpose of joining our church in establishing a Publishing House in Shanghai, China. This is all we know about the matter. If we knew more, we would tell more.

THE OPENING YEAR.

The Conferences of which the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is the official organ have been held, and a new year is opening. We do not remember ever to have looked upon a body of preachers that appeared to be in better health or spirits than the preachers composing the Conferences in Mississippi and Louisiana. At the three sessions we saw but one sick man, and he was only temporarily indisposed, and not one who was despondent, or in anywise disposed to complain. One brother did fare badly, perhaps, through misfortune, rather than though any fault of his. He was transferred from one of the Conferences west of the Mississippi river to the North Mississippi, and from there to the Louisiana; thence back to the Conference from which he started. It is not always the best thing to transfer at a venture.

The reports of the preachers were more than encouraging—they were inspiring. True, all did not report success in all particulars. Some of them labored in drouth-stricken regions, and collections, both for the support of the ministry and for the various benevolences, were small. Such reports, however, were exceptional. On the whole, collections were above the average. In all three of the Conferences revivals blessed the labors of the brethren, and the increase in the number of conversions and members added to the church was beyond anything realized in recent years. The year was also one of great peace. There were no disturbances of any kind. The appeal of a local preacher from the action of his Quarterly Conference occasioned the only trial at either of the sessions.

The great success of the year is largely due to the faithful preaching of the Word. Our preachers believe the gospel and declare it with earnestness, and as in the days of old, souls are saved and added to the church. We hear much of the departure of the modern ministry from the simplicity of the gospel. We think it would be right hard to find a preacher in Mississippi or Louisiana against whom such a charge could be justly urged. If there is one such among us, his friends keep him in the background, or he has learned to keep himself quiet when other preachers are around. At any rate, we have not met him. We have heard a good deal of preaching during the year past in the field and at our Conference sessions, and we can truthfully say that while some of it would never set the world afire, all of it was sound, and much of it of a very high order. Our Conferences are blessed with several superior young men who will be heard from throughout the church in due time.

And let it not be forgotten that our preachers are sustained by a host of godly men and women, and that to them due credit is given. These men and women love God and the church, and they love their preachers for the work's sake, and nobly aid them in their labors, giving them their prayers and sympathy, and furnishing them the means of living. Many of them also are active in revival work, in singing, praying, instructing penitents, and in other ways helping in the cause. Our people are not idlers—"not hearers only, but doers of the word." They mightily strengthen our preachers.

We face the new year under most favorable circumstances. Perhaps everything is not just as every preacher would have it, or as every church would have it. Had the preachers been left to select their field, some of them would have gone elsewhere than to the places they were sent. Had the [illegible] selected their preachers, they might have chosen different ones from those they got. But we seriously doubt whether preachers or people would have done any better for themselves than the constituted authorities of the church have done for them. Let those who are mutually pleased see that they maintain pleasant relations all the year. And let those who are disappointed resolve, not only to bear with each other for a year, but to work together, and love each other as brethren in the Lord.

Loyalty to Christ and his church will go far towards helping a preacher put up with a poor appointment, and if he has the co-operation of his people, he will succeed, despite of what seems to be adverse circumstances. Loyalty will also go far towards helping a people put up with a poor preacher; and if pity is called for at all, it is called for in behalf of a people who are compelled, as loyal Christians, to endure the ministry of a poor preacher. And yet this endurance for Christ's sake has been the making of many great men who have blessed the church and the world. So, dear brethren, if your preacher is not past making, bear with him, pray for him, encourage him, sustain him.

The times in which we live demand activity in the pulpit and in the paw. The church is not yet tired of great preachers, but it demands active pastors. Both ought to go together. An active laity is also demanded. Without it the ministry is handicapped, so much so that all their work will come to naught. Let us all work together, and make the year the best of our history. The Lord is still with his people; therefore, let us call upon him, and trust him for his blessing.

BOOK AGENTS' REPORTS.

By reference to our Book of Discipline, it will be seen that Paragraphs 419, 420, 421 and 422 prescribe the duties of the Book Agents. At least two Conferences, the Tennessee and the Virginia, complain that the Agents fall short of their duty in one very important particular. The complaint is of such a nature that, were it believed by the church at large to be well founded, serious alarm would be justified. The Agents are charged with making such reports of the business of the Publishing House, as to give no definite information as to its condition and business.

Some people and some Conferences are hard to satisfy, but the question is, not whether the Agents have satisfied the Conferences, but have they complied with the law. Paragraph 417 says, "They shall make, (1) monthly reports to the Book Committee, showing the exact condition of the business of the Publishing House; (2) an exhibit to the several Annual Conferences at the beginning of each fiscal year, which exhibit shall be published in the Christian Advocate; (3) a full account of their work and of the business of the Publishing House to the General Conference."

Now, it is evident that the law requires no such report to be made to the Annual Conferences as are required to be made to the Book Committee, and to the General Conference. It would take six or eight issues of the Nashville Advocate, with nothing else in it, to give the report; and to read it would about consume all the time devoted to an Annual Conference. And after the reading the Conference would not be any better informed than after reading the usual annual exhibit, save that on a certain day John Adams was charged 20 cents for half dozen pencils, Faber No. 2; or Thos. Jones was credited with cash 33⅓ cents, etc., etc. The Agents do not go in debt—pay cash for labor and material, have no outstanding liabilities, money in hand and invested, and doing a constantly increasing and paying business, and we undertake to say that the annual exhibit gives all the information the church needs to have. The Agents have complied with the law.

Again, it is advised that the Agents employ an expert accountant, to go through the books, and make a report. Somebody has suggested "an impartial and cold-blooded accountant." This very thing has been done. The gentleman employed is known in business circles as an expert. Were we, as an individual, to certify to the brethren that the accountant employed is an expert, and then ask them to take a look at the gentleman as he sits at his task, they would be ready to certify that "according to their knowledge and belief" he is "cold-blooded." "Along this line" the two Conferences were anticipated, and have all they can reasonably ask. We are surprised that the Virginia Conference did not know this long since.

OUR VISITORS.

All of our connectional interests were represented at the late Conferences by connectional officers, except the Epworth League. Owing to sickness in Dr. DuBose's family, he could attend only his own Conference, the Mississippi. Dr. Barbee represented the Publishing House at the two Mississippi Conferences, and Brother W. C. Everett at the Louisiana. Dr. Barbee's address before the North Mississippi body was full and satisfactory. His sermon was of the highest order, and will be long remembered. At the Mississippi Conference, Dr. Barbee was interrupted by the Bishop presiding, and cut short his address. We were not present at the moment, but soon learned what had transpired, and that excitement had been created. The incident was very unpleasant, and put both Dr. Barbee and Bishop Morrison in an embarrassing position.

Our missionary interests were represented by Dr. Lambuth, Dr. Pritchett, and Rev. J. E. McCulloch; the Sunday-school by Drs. Atkins and Hamil. Dr. Hammond spoke for Christian education, and Dr. Whisner for church extension. These interests are all flourishing.

Dr. Tigert, Book Editor, and Hoss, editor of the Christian Advocate, represented their respective departments, and both preached at New Iberia. Dr. Hoss preached under favorable conditions, the weather being pleasant and the house crowded. Dr. Tigert was not so fortunate. He had a fine congregation, but the weather was intensely cold, and the people—at least, half of them—were shivering. Both preached great sermons.

Our visitors were heartily welcomed, and added greatly to the interest of the Conferences, and to the profit of the church. Some of them, arriving late in the sessions, did not have a fair opportunity. The brethren were making haste to get through the business, and the belated visitors cut short their addresses.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

It is customary to print Conference reports in the official organ. It is right, and to be expected. We are sorry to say, however, that up to date we have received but one, and that was printed in last week's issue. If secretaries or editors of Minutes will furnish the manuscripts, we will print at the earliest day; otherwise, we are helpless. We make this statement that brethren may know why no other reports are found in the ADVOCATE.

A QUESTION OF FITNESS.

One of the big railroad corporations out West, it is announced, has determined to substitute women for men as waiters in dining cars. Nobody, of course, will deny that, ordinarily, women are as well adapted to serving guests at table as men, but their fitness for service in dining cars is called in question because they are unable "to draw corks." This may or may not be true; it may not be true that the corporation has issued such an order, but it is true that the announcement has furnished the would-be funny man occasion to display his talent as a humorist. Truth compels us to say he has "made a sorry out" of it, but he has, whether wittingly or unwittingly makes no difference, given us to understand that dining cars are quite as much devoted to drinking bouts as to eating. Indeed, if the newspaper reports are correct, the principal business of a dining-car waiter is to pull corks and supply patrons with liquor. We are not at all surprised that there is a protest against taking men off and putting women on. Patrons are ashamed to indulge their propensities in the presence of a modest and good woman.

What a shame it is that good men and women who are obliged to travel occasionally, many of whom, through no fault of their own, are victims of the drink curse, and have come to hate it with a perfect hatred, should be subjected to the fumes of liquor, not to say the improper language of men under its influence, in a place ostensibly set apart for decent and well-bred people. It is bad enough to be compelled to endure liquor saloons on every corner in town, and all along the thoroughfares, but it is far worse to have them literally thrust into our sight and under our noses in a public conveyance. There is no way to stop it without getting rid of the whole business, which may the Lord help us to do. And let all the people say, Amen!

BISHOP FITZGERALD

This eminent servant of Christ and his church, though scarcely able to be going, presided at the recent session of the Louisiana Conference, and one of the preachers outside of the cabinet says "he gave better satisfaction in stationing the preachers than usual." In his sermon on the Sabbath he confined himself almost entirely to manuscript. This was necessary under the circumstances. The discourse was happy in its effects—the preachers were greatly moved, and one dear young girl gave herself to the Lord and the church. The Bishop passed through the city during the week. He tarried less than a day, but took time to call on the senior Bishop, Keener, and the editor's family. The "Sunny South," just at the date of his coming, offered no attractions, and he hastened home. May Providence be kind to him!

REV. J. W. BRADFORD.

The killing of Rev. J. W. Bradford, son of our beloved brother, Rev. D. P. Bradford, of the Mississippi Conference, was a deplorable affair. The tragedy occurred at Brookside, Ala., on Sunday, Dec. 8, in Brother Bradford's own home. There were no witnesses. As soon as the killing was made known intense excitement prevailed. The slayer surrendered, and was lodged in prison, and quiet was restored. A preliminary examination was held, and the homicide was remanded to prison without bail. We extend to the family of Brother Bradford, and his aged father, our sincerest sympathy in this trying hour, and pray that the Lord may comfort them in their affliction.

PERSONAL.

A note from Rev. H. C. Morehead, written at Grenada, informs us that he is that far on his way to his new charge. Prospects are bright, and he is "happy on the way."

In giving the appointments of the Mississippi Conference, last week, at least one mistake was made. The appointment for Central Church, Meridian, should read J. W. Lewis, instead of J. N. Weems.

Rev. J. H. Williams, who so successfully served the Sildell charge, in the Louisiana Conference, last year, as a supply, is now attending the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala. He is a young man of great promise.

Rev. W. L. Hightower, of the Mississippi Conference, who was passing through the city on his way to his new appointment, McHenry, called at the ADVOCATE office. We had the pleasure also of meeting Bro. I. T. Reams and wife, of White Castle, La.

Rev. A. H. Williams, transferred from the White River to the North Mississippi Conference, and stationed at Gunnison, has reached his work, and met with a most pleasant reception. We hope he may have much success in his new field, and make many friends.

Our brother, Rev. W. D. Burroughs, has been sick the whole of the past year, and at the recent session of his Conference was placed on the superannuated list. He will, in a short time, go to Texas, where he hopes to be restored. We trust his hope may be fully realized.

Dr. T. J. Upton, after Conference, spent a day or two with a son at Lafayette, La. He passed through the city on Friday last, on his return to Amite, where he will labor another year. He honored us with his presence, as did also Rev. F. G Hocutt, who is again stationed at Covington.

The venerable Rev. J. M. Hampton, the oldest member of the North Mississippi Conference, was able to to answer to his name at the recent session at Winona. The "outer man" is not strong, but the "inner man" is being renewed day by day. The veteran preacher is strong in faith, giving glory to God.

A note from Rev. G. W. Bachman tells us that he had a pleasant time with the Mississippi brethren at McComb City. They treated him kindly, bought books from him liberally, and invited him to come again, which he will gladly do if the Lord permits. Bro. Bachman is an energetic bookseller and worker for church literature.

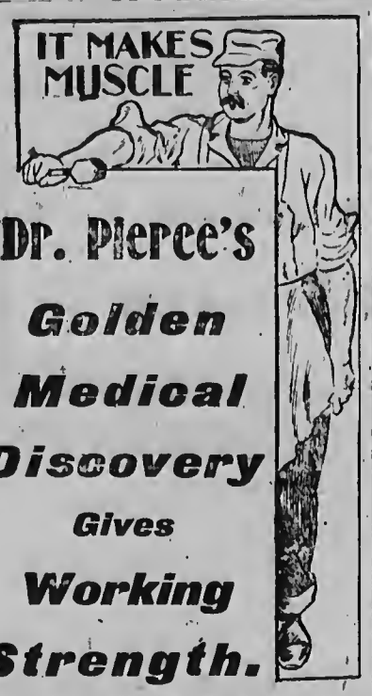
Rev. W. G. Evans, editor of the Louisiana Conference Minutes, desires the brethren whose appointments do not indicate their postoffice address, to write him at once and inform him, so as to get the addresses correctly printed in the Minutes. Bro. Evans spent a couple of days in the city looking after business, and was successful.

The hand of affliction has again been laid on Sister J. F. Evans. This time the Lord has taken her young est son, the "pet and idol" of the household. Ever since the death of Brother Evans the child has been longing "to go to heaven with papa." May God, who comforteth the hearts of all his saints, comfort our sister in her sorrow.

In our article, written for the Picayune on the organization of the North Mississippi Conference, we fear some will understand us as fixing the date of Rev. R. G. Porter's ("Gilderoy's") admission in 1870. This was not the case. He was then a young man, but had been in the Conference twelve years. He joined at Trenton, Tenn., in 1868. He is still active in the ministry.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, under date of Dec. 16, says: "We were kindly received by the people of Pickens for the third year. In a few hours after my return from Conference a wagon well loaded with good things for the pantry was delivered on our back porch. We have gone to work with the determination to make this year even better than the last." A set of people dissatisfied with Brother Gladney would be hard to please.

We send out this week a paper only half of the usual size. The editor and printers will take a short rest—the only rest taken during the year 1901.



Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery Gives Working Strength.

"I know you expected a letter from me some time ago, but I will state my reasons, plainly, why I did not write before this," says Mr. Joseph Grass, of Brewer, Perry Co., Mo. "It was because I did not wish to deceive any one. I wanted to be sure that your 'Golden Medical Discovery' had benefited me and it took time after I stopped taking the medicine before I felt sure I had realized permanent results from its use. After taking six bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and one vial of your 'Pleasant Pellets' am able to do a day's work with any man. I cannot express in words the good your medicines have done me."

W. F. M. S.

To the W. F. M. Society, North Mississippi Conference:

Our Conference year for the W. F. M. Society is rapidly drawing to a close. Only three months more, in which time a great deal of work must be done. During the nine months that have just passed the members of this great organization have by no means been idle; a good work has been done. The treasurer's reports show a general interest throughout the Conference, but, as is usually the case, a large per cent. of the money for dues, pledge, specials, contingent, and other funds, remains to be raised. Therefore, it is absolutely necessary for every officer and every individual member to labor with increased zeal and earnestness during the remaining three months, in order that the work of the Lord may not suffer.

Allow me to call attention, first, to the condition of the Contingent Fund of our Conference. We are about $40 behind in this. A letter was received a few days ago from the treasurer, asking what must be done about it. We trust every auxiliary will promptly give attention to this matter, and at an early date have his fund in the hands of the treasurer. The successful work of the Conference depends upon it.

We have also, in addition to dues, specials, etc., the pledge for the support of a missionary. As you know, our Conference proposes this year to support Miss Lilly Whitman in the Irene Toland School, Matanzas, Cuba. She goes out from our Conference, and is our representative in the foreign field. In order to raise $750—the salary of a missionary—it will be necessary for each auxiliary to increase its pledge.

Let us also see that the specials are not neglected. When we promise to support a Bible woman or a scholarship, and fail to meet our obligation, it places the missionary in a very embarrassing position. It becomes necessary for her to pay this promised amount from her own salary, or else, if in the case of a Bible woman, to suspend her work, and if a scholarship, to have the child return to a heathen home.

There is a course of study being prepared for the W. F. M. Society. The first book of the course (The title of the book we could not make out; it was utterly illegible.—ED.) is now ready, and can be ordered from Mrs. S. C. Trueheart, Nashville, Tenn., at 30 cents each. I hope every auxiliary will procure this at once, and begin the course of study Jan. 1. Other books of the course will be ready soon. One of our greatest needs is information. Indeed, we must work intelligently, if we work successfully.

We are receiving encouraging reports from the foreign fields. Dr. Reid, a missionary of the Parent Board, who has just returned to Korea after a stay in this country, writes of our work there that it has grown beyond his expectations, and that it is to him a succession of happy surprises. The Lord is blessing our work in other fields also. We are encouraged and gratified. At the same time we must recognize our increased responsibility.

MRS. C. H. GIBBS, Cor. Sec.

[This report, written Dec. 2, was not received until Dec. 18. The delay, we suppose, was on account of the sickness and death of the son of Sister J. F. Evans, to whom it was first sent. Let all the members of the missionary society remember dear Sister Evans in her great sorrow. This stroke, following so close the death of her husband, is hard to bear. May she find sustaining grace.—EDITOR.]

You may Snap your Fingers at Dyspepsia

There is a quality in Royal Baking Powder, coming from the purity and wholesomeness of its ingredients, which promotes digestion. Food raised by it will not distress. This peculiarity of Royal has been noted by hygienists and physicians, and they accordingly recommend it in the preparation of food, especially for those of delicate digestion.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

CHRISTMAS.

To every Sunday-school pupil, and teacher, and officer in all our Sunbland, we extend a hearty greeting, and the wish for a merry Christmas and a happy New Year. With a prayer on our lips, and a glad song in our hearts, we think upon that for which the day stands in the annals of the world. The Babe of Bethlehem brought glad tidings to suffering humanity. The Star in the East still attracts the gaze of the wise, and guides unto the fountain of eternal truth. It is not the suffering Christ that rises before us at Christmastide; rather, it is the song of the angels who "brought good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people" and their benediction, "On earth peace, good-will to men." It is a time of good cheer, of laughter, and of song. The heavenly music rings down the ages, and meets an answering echo in anthems of praise from the children of men.

But it is to childhood that Christmas makes the strongest appeal. With their faith, and innocence, and purity, children look forward to the day, and catch something of its inspiration and meaning. It is said that the Jews of Morocco believe that a little child, with its pure eyes, will be the first to discover the appearance of their long-expected Messiah. Children catch visions of the spiritual realm that are often hidden from the eyes of their elders. They see in the day what makes for peace, and good-will, and happiness, and joy. It is said that a little child shall lead them. Let us learn from the children lessons of good-will, and make the day fragrant with brotherly love.

THE BOOK OF ACTS.

The lessons for the first six months of next year will be in the Book of Acts, completing the record down to the close of St. Paul's second missionary journey. The lessons for the first six months of 1903 will be in the remainder of the book. This is a most important study. The series of lessons will cover the history of the organization and establishment of the Christian church, and the beginning of the reign of the Spirit.

We have had it in mind to propose a written examination covering the entire book, but, possibly, if our teachers stand the examinations in the Study Course, it will be all they will care for in the examination line. But we take occasion to urge an intensive study of the entire book. Let us get out of it, if possible, all there is in it. And, especially, let us catch its spirit of evangelism, its energy, its all-embracing love for the whole world. Then we will learn how the early fathers in less than a century "turned the world upside down." We hear much of "how to evangelize the world in this generation." If our Sunday-schools will get thoroughly imbued with the spirit and imitate the example of the fathers, that glorious work will soon be accomplished.

Some time since we urged that our Sunday-school children be trained to give to our orphan asylums on both Thanksgiving and Christmas Days. The following by a writer in the Sunday-school Times is pertinent: "Did you ever wonder whose fault it is, if the children who throng your school at Christmas-time drift out of it? Did you ever try the plan of having your school give instead of getting—give its own personal gifts, to be distributed among the poor? There is a spirit in such a plan that has been know to draw scholars to a school as iron to a magnet, for, whether we realize it or not, it is more blessed to give than to receive; and it is really more popular."

We understand that Prof. Hamill will hold an Institute for the Sunday-school teachers of New Orleans some time during the coming Winter. He has promised also to attend the Mississippi Conference Sunday-school Convention, if invited, and hold an Institute-Convention. We trust his services will be in demand in all three Conferences.

What have you done about joining the Study Circle? Do not delay, but send in your name and your orders for books at once.

An Ancient Foe

To health and happiness is Scrofula—as ugly as ever since time immemorial.

It causes bunches in the neck, disfigures the skin, inflames the mucous membrane, wastes the muscles, weakens the bones, reduces the power of resistance to disease and the capacity for recovery, and develops into consumption.

"A bunch appeared on the left side of my neck. It caused great pain, was lanced, and became a running sore. I went into a general decline. I was persuaded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and when I had taken six bottles my neck was healed, and I have never had any trouble of the kind since." MRS. K. T. SNYDER, Troy, Ohio.

How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back, is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

R·I·PANS

One said I had chronic dyspepsia, others claimed I was suffering with nervousness and kidney trouble. The last doctor told mother to take me away to the country. I could not eat nor sleep. My aunt, where I was staying, persuaded me to try Ripans Tabules. The fifth 5 cent box relieved me a little. I was so glad I kept on taking them. In all I had taken nine boxes. God bless Ripans Tabules! May they be spread abroad to those that are afflicted as I was. They have done for me what doctors could not do.

At druggists.

The Five-Cent packet is enough for an ordinary occasion. The family bottle, 60 cents, contains a supply for a year.

CANCER CAN BE CURED.

DID NOT EXPECT TO LIVE LONG PROUD OF HIS CURE. WOULD LIKE ALL WHO ARE AFFLICTED TO HEAR OF IT.

DEAR FRIENDS—I am so proud and so thankful that I can say to you that the cancer on my nose is nicely healed. I only wish that all parties with the same affliction could know the value of your remedy. I now feel like a new man again. I now feel like I may live to a reasonable old age and see my children in their maturity; but until the cure from your great remedy I did not expect to live but a few years longer, with a wretched life before me. I am now happy and my family is happy to know that I have been saved from the terrible death. I will do everything in my power to let all who are afflicted with a cancer know of your wonderful cure. I am so thankful to my great Maker that he has given to some one the power to heal such places and to put it in the reach of those who are not able to pay large prices for the cure. May God bless you.

Yours very truly, T. J. HOOKS.

G. F. P. GERSTLE'S FEMALE PANACEA CURES WOMEN

makes a happy home. Health and light-heartedness are contagious as well as sickness and care. The nervous over-sensitiveness of many women—the worrying over little things—the feeling that insurmountable obstacles are to be overcome—are all due to a lack of that robust health which sheds its radiance on every member of the family, and which is given to women by G. F. P. That it gives all this is proven by the thousands of women who have been rescued from lives of suffering by its use. G. F. P. is truly a wonderful medicine for women. MRS. VICTORY JONES, Garland City, Ark., writes to tell what G. F. P. did for her. She says:

"I was so afflicted with female weakness for two years I could do no work and very often was unable to dress myself. My eyes became affected and were so bad I could not see except on cloudy days. I have taken a course of G. F. P. Treatment and the result was remarkable. I can do all my work, even to washing and ironing, without becoming weary. My eyes have become clear and my sight is completely restored, and I feel like I have the strength and vigor of a young girl. G. F. P. is truly a woman's tonic."

removes from the soil large quantities of Potash.

The fertilizer applied, must furnish enough Potash, or the land will lose its producing power.
